THE FLOWER GIRL'S ROMANCE (Nov. 22).—As Arthur Rodney passes Reva's flower stand he sees that she is being annoyed by two ruffians and quickly comes to her assistance, compelling the men to apologize. Reva is greatly impressed with Rodney's courtesy. The following morning while Reva is on her way from the ranch with her fresh stock of flowers, she comes upon Arthur and his sweetheart, Bessie Berkow. Jealousy immediately takes possession of the girl and she awakens to the fact that she is in love with Arthur.

A week later the Berkows inspect the ranch at Verdugo, California, and order flowers for the wedding of their daughter. Reva is disturbed at the sight of Arthur and Bessie and, consumed with jealousy, is strongly tempted to push Bessie off of the precipice as they climb a nearby mountain to view the surrounding country but her better nature asserts itself and the two girls leave the rock together.

Reva's brooding over her unrequited love for Arthur causes a mental derangement. In her deliriums, she runs to the home of the Berkows and bursts upon the bridal couple shortly after the clergyman has finished the ceremony. Reva's father, who has followed her from the flower ranch, explains to the assembled guests the unfortunate plight of his unhappy daughter. A reaction takes place and Reva in a moment of consciousness asks forgiveness.

RED WING AND THE PALEFACE (Nov. 23).—Elmore, a hunter, accidentally kills Red Fox, loved by the chief's daughter, Red Wing. The Indian girl enlists the aid of her father to avenge the death of Red Fox. A raid is made against the white settlement and Elmore is taken back to the Indian village, a prisoner. Elmore's wife, Ann, follows to the camp and begs Red Wing to intercede with the chief for her husband's life. Red Wing, turning to the white woman, says, "He has killed my lover; I will kill thine."

Ann returns to the wreck of her home, where she meets Elmore's father and a number of settlers who have gathered. Horrified at Ann's story, the father and his companions become furious and decide to secure Elmore at once by force. They mount their horses and ride to the Indian camp, where a fierce fight takes place and Elmore, who has been tied to a stake by the Indians and is about to be tortured, is liberated.

Red Wing, realizing that the Indians are no match for the hardy settlers and that she has been robbed of her revenge, escapes while the fight is in progress. She visits the spot where Elmore killed her lover, Red Fox, and takes her own life that she may join him in the happy hunting grounds.

THE DANCE AT SILVER GULCH (Nov. 19).—A dance is held one night at Silver Gulch hall, and Joe Barton attends, in company with Mildred, his sweetheart. One unwelcome guest is Jim Silver, a cowpuncher, who is an old sweetheart of Mildred's. Mildred's refusal to dance with Silver infuriates him, and he is attempting to embrace her when Joe enters the hall, knocks Silver to the floor, and the two are separated by friends and their guns wrested from them. Silver leaves, swearing vengeance, and a few moments later Joe gallops madly after him to force an apology. Far out on the trail Silver's revolver accidentally explodes in the holster, wounding him severely. A moment later Joe finds him stretched out in the trail with his horse grazing nearby. In a terror of fear Joe gallops away, frightened at the thought that he may be accused of the shooting. Silver is found by Graham, a ranchman, who carries him into the house and summons the doctor. Graham's daughter, Rose, informs the sheriff, who immediately suspects Joe and sets out to find him. Joe is taken as he comes from the town saloon, and the next day is brought to trial. A friend, feeling the evidence is all against Joe, fires a shot through the courthouse window, that enables Joe to escape during the excitement. Reaching his sweetheart's ranch, he is concealed in the loft of the barn. Meanwhile Silver regains consciousness and signs a statement of Joe's innocence in the shooting. This is carried to Mildred by Rose: Joe is called from the barn and immediately starts on a run to town to inform the sheriff. He reaches the office just as the posse is returning from the search, is congratulated by the boys and starts back with the girls as the punchers give them a rousing cheer.

THE SCHEME (Nov. 20).—Old Bickley refuses to allow his daughter, Bertha, to attend a ball with Bert Brisk, her sweetheart. Now, Bickley intends to take Bert's charming aunt, whereupon Bertha has an idea to bring her father to terms. Taking Bert and his aunt into the scheme, Bertha proposes to attend the ball dressed as a man, declares she will flirt with the widow, arouse her father's jealousy and trap him into fighting a duel. Then, having scared the old man to death, she will reveal her true identity, and have the laugh on him. This plan is carried out, and old Bickley is forced into the supposed duel to the death with his disguised daughter. In the bright moonlight, at the edge of a wood, they meet, and Bickley is now put through a farcical "third degree," when a group of friends, made up as undertakers and grave-diggers, measure him for his grave and stalk around him with solemn visages and uplifted spades. Bickley nearly dies of fright, and frantically pleads with his seconds to call the duel off. Meanwhile Bertha and Bert are nearly dying of laughter, and the widow is enjoying the scene immensely. The two duelists are finally placed back to back, each with a huge revolver in hand, and, after several copious drinks of whiskey, Bickley gains enough courage to die, if need be. Of course, as they are about to fire, the widow throws herself between them and pleads with Bertha to "spare" her father's life. This is the cue for Bertha to throw off her disguise, and old Bickley is so astonished and happy that he readily consents to the marriage of the young couple, after planting several resounding smacks upon Bertha's upturned face.

BILLY McGRATH'S ART CAREER (Nov. 21).—This time Billy attends an art exhibit of the new French "impressionistic" style, in company with his fiancee, Catherine Van Zandt, and her mother. Billy is introduced to the artist, Lecomte, but insults the dauber greatly at his display of ignorance over the paintings. Strolling down the gallery, Billy meets Ruth Radcliffe, an art student, whom he immediately takes a great interest in. That night he calls on Catherine, who declares he must do something to distinguish himself before she will be his wife. Billy is stumped, but, happening to visit the art gallery again, he finds Ruth in tears, and learns that she is forced to return to her country home because of her parents' poverty. Taking her boarding house address, Billy returns home. Deciding to distinguish himself in art work, he goes in for the new impressionistic style and succeeds in making a fine lot of daubs of everything, including James, his butler. One of these daubs he angrily smears up, and during his absence Catherine and her mother call, see the painting, think it marvelous and take it with them, leaving a blank check for him to fill out at his own figure. The result of this laughable experience gives Billy an idea. He visits Ruth, smears up all her paintings, calls in a group of wealthy friends and disposes of the daubs for a large sum of money. Ruth is now enabled to finish her art course, while Billy, supremely happy over the fact that he has really done a big thing, lights his pipe and dreams happily of approaching wedding chimes.

THE PENITENT (Nov. 22).—Bob Arling and Hugh Thompson, two chums, are rivals for the love of pretty Alice Danville. Hugh wins her, and Bob, though heartbroken, wishes them life happiness. A few days later Professor Danville, a noted scientist, is experimenting in his laboratory, when Alice enters. In spite of his precaution, she causes an explosion of chemicals that renders her blind. Hugh now shows the despicable side of his character in tiring of his blind sweetheart, and transfers his affection to Dorothy Haddon, Alice's cousin, who is paying her a visit. Bob notices Hugh's fickleness and upbraids him angrily, but Hugh refuses to listen. Still loving Alice with all his heart, Bob gives her every kindly attention. Dr. Hardcastle, a noted specialist, now examines Alice's eyes and agrees to perform an operation he believes will restore her sight. This operation is successful and Alice is overjoyed. Hurrying out into the bright sunshine to find Hugh and surprise him, she discovers he and Dorothy together and realizes his perfidy. Pretending to still affect her blindness, Alice approaches them; then suddenly reveals the truth just as Bob comes on the scene. Stricken with remorse, Hugh leaves, while Dorothy humbly asks Alice's forgiveness. A few hours later, in the quiet of the conservatory, Bob again asks Alice to be his wife, and this time does not ask in vain.

BRONCHO BILLY'S HEART (Nov. 23).—Old Silas Jordan, a settler, finds that his horse is not able to pull the heavy load demanded, and discovers the well-fed broncho of Jim Davis, a ranchman, staked out near the trail. Jordan deliberately takes the broncho, hitches it to his wagon and drives on. A few hours later he stops to cook dinner, and meets Broncho Billy, who has a great romp with Jordan's children and eats with them. The meal finished, Broncho bids Jordan goodbye and rides on. Late in the afternoon Broncho meets Jim Davis and a bunch of his cowboys, who are on the trail of the missing horse. Davis tells Broncho of the matter, declares that they will string up the man who has stolen the horse, then gallop on. For a moment Broncho studies, then suddenly remembers that Jordan was driving a horse answering Davis' description, and leading another behind the wagon. Realizing the danger of the old settler if he is caught, Broncho rides desperately down the trail, overtakes Jordan and offers to trade horses with him. Jordan agrees, exchange is made, and Jordan goes on. Turning the white horse loose on the trail, Broncho finds a good place nearby to bunk for the night, and has just pillowed his head on his saddle when he sees Davis and the boys gallop up, identify the horse and, thinking it had merely strayed away, gallop back up the trail. With a deep sigh of satisfaction Broncho lights a cigarette and puffs away contentedly, with a grim smile playing over his brown face.

THE COUNTRY BOY (Nov. 20).—To recuperate after an illness, Betty Gray is sent to Montana from New York, to the ranch of her father's old friend, Tom Stanton. After a two months' stay Betty has grown to be a sturdy young woman and is ready to return home. Betty departs, leaving her heart behind her, but taking with her the heart of Bob Stanton, who is the boss of his father's ranch. The lure of the city soon becomes too strong for young Stanton and he seeks its shadows. The life of a fire laddie appeals to him, and in due course he is appointed. Almost his first fire gives him an opportunity to prove his worth. At the risk of his life he enters a burning building and descends with a young woman in his arms. The young woman is—Betty. Need we say more?

A QUESTION OF AGE (Nov. 21).—An old sweetheart of Mrs. Post has just arrived from England. When he learns that she is a widow with a daughter his old affection warms his heart again. He writes the widow a note, warning her that he is coming and adding that he will bring some toys for her little daughter. In Mrs. Post's absence the note is received by her "little daughter," a girl of twenty summers. Gwendoline Post is indignant, but soon decides to have some fun with her mother's admirer. A young man caller agrees to help the scheme along. On the way to his home he meets a boy and bribes him to exchange apparel, reappearing a while later clad in knickerbockers. Gwendoline dons one of her schoolday frocks and greets the visitor. When the overgrown children get through playing tricks on the old codger he is a sorry looking sight, but nevertheless happy, for Mrs. Post has grown tired of being a widow.

RED EAGLE, THE LAWYER (Nov. 23).—A band of unscrupulous speculators seek to purchase for a mere pittance the rich lands of Iron Claw, a Yuma Indian. Iron Claw is wavering in his determination not to sign the deed. His daughter, White Feather, hurries to her lover, Red Eagle, an Indian attorney, and tells him the story. Red Eagle hurries back with her and is just in time to prevent the swindle. The gang lies in wait for Red Eagle on his return to his office, and as he passes they lay him low with a blow from a revolver butt. The band resumes its operations and plies Iron Claw with firewater until he no longer cares what happens and willingly signs the paper. White Feather, roaming through the woods, finds the unconscious Red Eagle. He is quickly revived and she takes him to her wigwam to dress his wound. It is then he learns of what has taken place. He tells the story to the Government agent, with the result that the deed is declared void and the swindlers thrown into prison. White Feather is charmed by Red Eagle's cleverness and consents to his protecting her always.

THE FOREST OF FOUNTAINEBLEAU (Nov. 23).—This picture, taken at autumn, is a beautiful blending of green and gold scenes around the castles of the ancient French kings where Napoleon signed his abdication in 1814.

WHIFFLES' NIGHTMARE (Nov. 19).—The incomparable Whiffles presents the amusing story of a miserly brotner who refuses to tide his kin over a hard place with a loan. Whiffles threatens to commit suicide, and that night the rich and unextravagant Whiffles is haunted in his dreams. In the morning, as soon as he looks at them, the members of his household take on the appearance of his brother. To cap the climax the supposedly dead Whiffles returns to his brother's home and scares him so much that he has no difficulty in securing the loan.

THE BEAUTIES OF PORTUGAL (Nov. 19).—The country home of ex-Queen Amelia and the palace of Queen Maria-Pia are included among the unusually beautiful views of Portuguese castles and ruins.

THE REVOLT OF THE PEASANTS (Nov. 22).—An historical episode during Holland's struggle for independence from Spain in 1572. To avenge the brutal murder of an aged Hollander, the Revolutionists tie each of the four Spanish soldiers implicated to an arm of a windmill, and the elements complete the task. The lead is played by the most successful actor in Holland, and the scenes, laid in Holland, leave nothing lacking to procure perfection.

MELIES.

LINKED BY FATE (Nov. 23).—A minister and his daughter, Flora; John, mate of the ship, and a few sailors are the sole survivors of a disastrous wreck. The little rowboat in which they are saved washes them ashore on a barren island, where the sailors dig for themselves and the mate endeavors to look after Flora and her father. In their search for food along the shore the sailors find a box of whiskey, which they hail with gladness and are quick to consume. Drunk, they make an insulting attack on Flora, which John, their mate, is able to quell only by the use of his revolver. The mutineers then make their escape in the only boat, leaving John, Flora and her father stranded. In vain do they signal passing steamers. The minister, near death from long privation, requests John to marry Flora and care for her. He performs the ceremony with his dying breath. Some days later the boat in which the sailors made their escape is again washed ashore, and John sets to work repairing it for his and his wife's departure.

Meanwhile Flora finds his diary, in which she discovers a passage addressed to "Dearest Evelyn," and fearing that John is already married, she decides to free him. Throwing her hat and coat into the water, she hides in the interior of the island. John believes her drowned and departs without her. When near death Flora is rescued by a passing steamer, which lands her in San Pedro, where she secures a position as a milliner. Five years elapse. John is back home in San Pedro with his sister, Evelyn. He realizes more and more that he loved Flora, and when, through the ordering of a hat by Evelyn, he comes face to face with Flora, great is his joy. But Flora shrinks from him, believing Evelyn to be his wife. John then explains to Flora and the two are united a second time.

SELIG.

A MAN AMONG MEN (Nov. 18).—Steve Wilson, a wealthy automobile manufacturer, allows himself one pet diversion—the ministry to the poor in social settlements and public playgrounds. Through this association he meets little Danny Smith, a six-year-old boy. Eventually, through the medium of Danny, he visits his home and meets his sister, Millie Smith, a girl just out of her teens, who has much charm and interests the wealthy man. His admiration has awakened into love when he learns from her that she is engaged to marry Bob Carson, a workman in his own shop, whose invention he thinks will make him wealthy. In reality this invention is worthless, but Steve Wilson buys it, thus sacrificing himself for the love of the girl who has never realized his admiration.

THE SAINT AND THE SIWASH (Nov. 19).—Joe Roberts, a fugitive from justice, bearing that stain that is irremovable, seeks the seclusion of the great North woods with his wife. They encounter a brutal squawman, Bill Weemer, who occupies his leisure in beating a Siwash girl. The wife intervenes and they take the girl with them. Then the sodden, drunken brute, intent on revenge and robbed of his prey, finds the haunting secret of Joe Roberts. In the interim the latter has been stricken by mountain fever and has been nursed back to health by his wife and the Indian girl. The brutal Weemer reappears upon the scene and demands money for keeping silence as to the whereabouts concerning the "man who is wanted," and proceeds to terrorize the Indian girl as of yore. The latter, however, has lost her fear and retaliates by shooting the bully. It turns out that Weemer is a noted horse thief, and that Joe Roberts was falsely accused of the crime, so all ends well with the sheriff in congratulation.

ATALA (Nov. 20).—The fact that a picture producer has closely followed the text and spirit of a world's masterpiece in Charteaubriand's classic, "Atala," with an added charm in the reproduction of the illustrations of Gustave Dore, one of the world's most imaginative artists, is sufficient to indicate this film is at once superb and distinctive. It would be impossible in the brief confines to give the full richness of this royal romance dealing with the fates of Atala and Chactas and the great warrior Ontalissi who figure in the romantic days of St. Augustine; but the threads of the story have been tightened up and its period made more tense and vivid in this picture play. The heart-broken mother of Atala swears her daughter to virginal vows and the romance that follows the fair but unfortunate orphan is stirring and beautiful beyond the realms of conventional fiction.

THE FIRE FIGHTER'S LOVE (Nov. 21).—On page 531 of our last week's issue was given a review of this subject as written by James S. McQuade.

MIKE'S BRAINSTORM (Nov. 22).—Mike Rosenberg, a ne'er-do-well, is broke, but still is undenied the pleasure of imagination. A circus comes to town, and he is without the price of admission. He retires disgusted to the solitude of the bar, where he dreams that he possesses unlimited wealth. His first investment is a pet elephant that leads him into a vast variety of expensive difficulties. Wearying of the pet elephant, he swaps it for a bucking broncho; this in turn proceeds to make it lively for poor Mike, and finally bucks him out of dreamland back into the cold and unemotional world of today.

EDISON.

HOPE (Nov. 16).—John Harvey believed that tuberculosis did not flourish in the country town in which he lived, and when he received a letter from the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, asking him to aid the cause by selling Christmas seals, he was greatly amused. A week later he was reminded that tuberculosis did exist in his town. This knowledge came the more bitter because it was no other than his fiancee who was the afflicted one. She had left him a note that told of the discovery and her determination to go away and be cured.

He and the girl's father found her name registered at Bellevue Hospital, in New York. They went to her address, and in the small bedroom where she was living met with a surprise. Edith refused to return with them! She said there was no place to be cured in their home town, and therefore she would remain under the present treatment, uncomfortable as it was. So they went home with a new thought.

How Harvey aroused the people of his town to a mighty effort! He spoke to crowds like one inspired, and his slogan was insistent: "Let us build a sanatorium together." Shortly after the building was completed. Not a moment did he lose in bringing Edith home and having her enter the new sanatorium.

TIM (Nov. 16).—Tim has been having a bad time of it. His father is disappointed in him, for the boy has been idling away his time with the "gang" in the railroad yards. One night Tim comes in late, crawls through his father's room and curls up in a corner of his own and falls asleep. He is awakened before dawn by his mother. His father is sick. Tim is sullen, and goes in and confronts the "old man." Tim's father will never be able to work again. Tim gets a job. He doesn't like it the first day, for he is well knocked about. He goes to work again the next day, and now he begins to like it. He comes home, but the kitchen is empty, so he calls upstairs for his mother, ordering her to hurry down and fix his supper for him. He pulls out his father's pipe and lights it.

His mother comes slowly down the stairs with a candle. He looks up and starts to order, but she tells him his father is dead. He says he doesn't care; she leans over and tells him again. The pipe drops from his mouth; he starts up the stairs, pushes her aside and goes into his father's room. This changes his whole life. He becomes the man of the house; his father had his turn; now it's Tim's turn. He becomes a steady worker, supports his mother and becomes a man, indeed.

A NOBLE PROFESSION (Nov. 19).—The story that runs through this film is one of a young woman who is suddenly thrown upon her own resources to make her living. When a friend of hers, a graduate nurse, tells her to come with her to Blackwell's Island she throws her hands up in horror, as she thinks Blackwell's Island means penal institutions, prisoners, etc. She is soon enlightened, and when she arrives at the island she finds a system of the finest hospitals in the world, not even excelled in Europe, and all free to the patients. Her heart swells with pride as she looks around and sees she can be of service in the world after all. She looks with admiration upon the neat nurses in white, with happy smiles on their faces, a gentle word for all, and the pupil nurses in their blue and white. The hospital staff of smart-looking young men, all wrapped in their work, are also arrayed in immaculate white. The homes for the nurses are equipped equal to the best hotels; every comfort is provided for them, even to a private hospital and beautiful halls, where they have dances, to which the internes are invited, and more, they are paid while learning!

HIGH EXPLOSIVES AS USED IN THE U. S. ARMY (Nov. 20).—The picture opens with a demolition squadron in heavy marching order, equipped in full field service, which includes "Limbre," or dynamited wagon, shelter tents, poles, ponches, blankets and rifles. Camp is pitched and the squadron is seen next laying three land mines. Every operation from the planting of explosives to electrical connection and the final terrific upheaval of the tons of earth and rocks is shown. Next stumps and trees are blown up and cut down by the use of the explosive, showing the torn and shattered remains. A feature of this picture is the construction, planting and explosion of a submarine mine. There are numerous other interesting and instructive points, such as the testing of the explosives by smashing with a bullet at close range and burning a stick held in a man's hand.

SALLY ANN'S STRATEGY (Nov. 20). — Silas Wilkins goes to the city to deposit the first payment that he received on the sale of his farm. His wife tells him to be careful, but he pays little attention to her precautions. In the city a realization of Sally Ann's misgivings comes to Silas when a "bunco steerer" manages to extract what he supposes to be the bundle of bills. Silas thinks that he has lost his all and goes home in a state of depression. After his wife has admonished him she shows him the bankroll, which she had taken out of his pocket and substituted a similar package containing a bundle of wood. Now Sally Ann goes to the city to deposit the money, while Silas is obliged to do the housework.

A LETTER TO THE PRINCESS (Nov. 22).—(This is the fifth story of "What Happened to Mary.") Mary arrives in a suburb of London with a letter to the Princess. Her movements are watched by an agent of a foreign government who is interested in the contents of the letter. He follows her into a railway carriage, where he introduces himself as being her fellow agent, and tries to persuade her to give him the letter. Just then the train stops and a clergyman enters their compartment.

In London, Mary gets the clergyman to take her to a hotel, from where she writes the Princess that she has the missing document. The letter is intercepted by her adversary, and as a result she receives a letter which purports to come from the Princess. She enters an automobile which she supposes to have been sent by her highness. Arrived at the great house, she even delivers the letter to the lady who demands it; then, glancing out of a window, discovers that her adversary is the chauffeur who brought her. Just in time she reaches for her letter, gets it and, darting from the house, finds herself caught by the man. But her friend the clergyman happens to pass that way, which gives her an opportunity and so distracts the attention of the supposed chauffeur that Mary has time to jump into the automobile. Pursued in the taxi, she stops the machine beside a wall and, running up a ladder which she finds there, drops down on the other side, but her enemy follows, and running to escape from him she finds herself in the midst of a garden party, to whom she appeals for protection. As the chauffeur who has followed her faces the hostess, Mary sees that she is a person of importance, for he is evidently nonplused by the encounter, and then she discovers the lady is none other than the Princess she seeks, and with her enemy standing by she delivers the letter to its rightful owner.

CHASE ACROSS THE CONTINENT (Nov. 23).—This subject tells of the theft of a jewel case from one of the guests of a wealthy New York business man. A famous detective is called in upon the case, and suspicion points strongly toward the niece of the host, and the strangest part of it all is that the uncle seems particularly anxious to fasten the guilt upon the young lady. Subsequently a maid discovers a secret cabinet in an old clock, and when her mistress inspects it she finds a supposedly lost will which reveals the fact that her father's wealth and property will revert to his brother unless the young lady in question marries the man of her choice in the state of California on or before a certain date. She then realizes why her uncle was so anxious to involve her in this theft, in order to keep her in New York until after the designated time in the will. Realizing his criminal intent, she and her maid leave the house secretly, after revealing her plans to her lover and arranging a meeting to take place in Denver. Then the two girls start out on the chase across the continent against time and the shrewdness of a detective who, believing her flight to be evidence of guilt, follows by train fifteen minutes later. Chicago, Denver, Salt Lake and San Francisco are included in the race, and even at the very close one is led to believe that the chase has been all in vain, as she is arrested at the church door on her wedding day, when news arrives of her uncle's perfidy, bringing about a happy ending.

CAMPING OUT (Nov. 14).—The young people decide to go camping, with Hobbs and Priscilla in the role of chaperones. Everything is in readiness when a quarrel arises as to the location of the proposed camp. The women array themselves against the men and there is a three-cornered quarrel and they decide to camp separately. They pitch their tents on a creek a short distance from one another, both parties being unaware of the close proximity of the other. The women have trouble in putting up their tents and the girls leave in disgust. Hobbs takes his rod and goes up the creek fishing and comes on Priscilla. They are surprised to see each other, but forget animosities and he helps her put up the tent. They resolve to keep the secret and not tell their companions, and Hobbs sneaks off.

Jack meets Jennie, treed by a cow, and he effects a heroic rescue. She and Jack pledge themselves to keep the meeting a secret and they part. Grace walks out and discovers the tent of the young men. Like the others she is surprised, but takes pity on the men from the fact that their tent is untidy. She sets about to right things. She is found there by Dick. They decide to keep their secret.

Two tramps appear on the scene and each of the lovers fear for the safety of their sweethearts. Unbeknown to each other, they arm themselves and seek places of vantage near the tent of the girls. The women rush home and seek refuge in their tent and the tramps appear. Hobbs in his excitement allows his gun to be discharged and the whole secret is out and the parties are revealed to each other.

A MOTHER'S AWAKENING (Nov. 17).—The suffragette's child, left to the care of servants, is not allowed to disturb the busy mother. She makes friends with the little girl next door of humbler circumstances. Jennie Smith has some kitties greatly admired by the little suffragette, Alice James. Jennie parts with one of her pets, and Alice takes kitty home. The servants are horrified at having the animal in the house on account of germs. When Alice refuses to part with the pet, her mother is appealed to. The mother demands the animal shall be instantly be removed. Alice slips out of bed at night to sit by her little friends window to hear the wonderful bed-time stories told by Jennie's mother. Alice decides to write to the editor of the paper and asks him to find her a mother who will tell her stories and let her have a kitty. Alice, who was writing the letter in her mother's offices, hears someone coming and escapes. It is her mother. She discovers her child's letter and repents.

WHEN CUPID RUNS WILD (Nov. 11).—Florence Sherry, a prominent actress, suffers a nervous breakdown and is advised by her physician to go to the country for a much needed rest. She heeds the advice and takes up her residence at a small country farmer's. The daughter, Sue, is in love with a country boy, Ben. The city girl flirts with Sue's sweetheart. Sue swears vengeance on the woman who would steal her beau's affections. Florence, the actress, learning of Sue's misery and wishing to pay Ben for his treatment of Sue, plans to get even. She loans Sue one of her best dresses. She ignores Ben, and he, realizing that his chances are with her trys to ingratiate himself again into the good wishes of his former sweetheart. Sue turns a deaf ear to his love making. An old admirer of Florence Sherry, Howard Seymour, pays a week end visit to see her. Florence introduces him to Sue and the three plan to make Ben's life miserable and show him how it feels to be really hurt and jealous. Howard makes love to Sue to the chagrin of Ben. This make-believe love soon grows into a lasting affection. The country girl and the city bred chap really fall in love and are married. Miss Sherry, wishing to pay Sue and Ben back in their own coin, proposes to Ben herself, is accepted and they are married.

OFFICER 174 (Nov. 14).—Officer 174, wearied from sitting up nights with his invalid wife falls asleep on post. He has incurred the enmity of the roundsman who reports him, and he is discharged. He cannot obtain employment and faces poverty. He reads in the paper of the escape of a well known criminal who is one of the most desperate in police history. A large reward is offered for the recapture and officer 174 vainly hopes to run down this criminal. After careful detective work he tracks the man to a low tenement, and after a desperate fight he takes him and his accomplice prisoners and surprises his former roundsmen by dragging the long sought for criminal and another ex-convict into the police station. For this he is reinstated and good times are ahead for Officer 174 and his little family.

THE SIREN'S CALL TO DUTY (Nov. 13).—Jack arrives at his work at the factory a little late. The master fines him, not believing that the poor man was kept at home by the dangerous illness of his wife. The other employees, indignant at the harsh treatment of their fellow-worker decide to strike, whereupon they are all turned out. That same evening the master gives a big reception at his home in honor of his wife's birthday. This seems a provocation to the workers and they send an ultimatum to him in which they threaten to burn down the factory, if, on the following day, the siren of the factory doesn't whistle as usual to call them to work. The master is not afraid. He throws away the note, but his little daughter runs to the factory the next morning and not fearing the dangers from the desperate strikers, she blows the siren. The workers hear the whistle. They are forgiven. They take the little girl in their arms and bless her.

POWERS.

THE COWBOYS' LEAP YEAR (Nov. 13).—Leap year on Double Cross Ranch was ushered in by the cowboys in a very sorrowful manner, as they all felt that before the year had ended the widow Maguire would certainly have harnessed one of them into line. Little Dutchie, a new arrival at the ranch, had a perfect horror of women. Imagine his feelings when, after dinner one day, the widow endeavored with her most winning smile to hold him for a few minutes.

The consternation of the boys is most amusing when a letter arrives stating that the widow has been left a large sum of money by an Eastern relative. They all make a headlong rush to win her, and as Dutchie and two others are tied for the honors, and as the widow cannot decide which one she would rather have, she decides that the one that can reach the town first and return with the ring shall be her husband. Dutchie starts off, but on account of his fat stomach and short legs he is soon left far in the rear. He spies a man on horseback, and as the rider draws nearer Dutchie explains his predicament. The rider heartily agrees to help in every way possible, speeds off, secures the ring, and by the time the other boys return the minister is giving Dutchie and the widow his blessing.

HIS CAREER (Nov. 15).—John Chalmers, a struggling young attorney, is in love with Helen Stuart, an heiress, but hesitates to propose to her. Helen is deeply in love with him and, realizing his reason for not declaring his love, resolves that his lack of money shall not prevent their marriage. She writes Brown, her lawyer, to prepare to transfer $100,000 to a friend whom she will name when she calls upon him the next day. The lawyer writes John a letter, telling him that he has been left $100,000 by a relative. John receives the money and proposes to Helen. Shortly afterward they are married. Helped by his suddenly acquired wealth, John's practice increases, and he soon becomes one of the most popular men in the city. His party nominates him for mayor and he is elected. Helen, in coming down the stairs the next day, trips and falls and is rendered a cripple for life.

John's position demands that he attend many society functions, and of course is compelled to leave Helen at home. Gradually he becomes wrapped up in his own ambitions and neglects her. His term of mayor is about to expire, and the party leaders desire to place his name before the people for senator. To further these plans it is necessary that he entertain lavishly. This, of course, is impossible with Helen an invalid, and he decides to divorce her and marry a widow, Mrs. Allison. He goes to Brown, who is now his legal adviser, and tells him to start proceedings for separation. The old lawyers sees that he is urged on by his political ambitions more than lack of love for Helen, and decides to reconcile him with his wife. He goes to his files and takes out Helen's letter ordering her money given to Chalmers. He gives it to the other, and the man finds out that his supposed relative was in reality his sweetheart. Brown tells him that if Helen was willing to give her fortune for him, he should be willing to make as great a sacrifice for her. Chalmers knows what he owes to his wife, for he could never have attained his success without her money, and resolves to give up the senatorship and devote his time to making Helen happy.

THE LADY LEONE (2 reels) (Nov. 15).—Lady Leone Mervyn, an orphaned heiress, is much sought after by her outlaw cousin, Sir Robert Huntley, for his son, Hal. In order to secure her vast estates he insists that she and Hal get married, but Lady Leone will not accept any such proposal. During a raid a peasant of the village, John Wilde, is killed in pure wantonness by Hal Huntley, and John's son, Jack, swears to be avenged for the murder. Jack, reconnoitering the Huntley fortress, falls into a glen, where he is found unconscious by Lady Leone and Dame Margery, the Huntley housekeeper. A mutual admiration springs up between Lady Leone and Jack. They are telling each other their stories of woe when they are interrupted by Dame Margery, who announces the approach of the Huntleys. Jack conceals himself, and later, after a hard fight with the sentries, escapes from the glen. A short while after Dame Margery brings a letter to Jack from Lady Leone, telling him that Sir Robert is dying and that he wants her to marry his son, Hal. Jack goes to her aid, and by means of a clever subterfuge he gets inside the Huntley castle, arriving just in time to interrupt the ceremony. After a desperate fight with the retainers of the Huntleys, in which Jack is wounded, he succeeds in rescuing Lady Leone and bringing her safely home.

Some weeks later Lady Leone, having appealed to the King for protection, is conducted to London by the Royal Commissioners, leaving Jack heartbroken. He follows her to London and endeavors to obtain admission into the royal chapel. As he is being driven away by one of the guards the King and Queen, accompanied by the entire court, are about to enter the chapel. Leone is one of the ladies-in-waiting to the Queen. She sees Jack and presents him to their majesties. The King, having heard of Jack's prowess in rescuing Leone, knights him. The following day Jack and Leone have a meeting in the King's garden, where he tells her of his love for her. The King and Queen at this moment appear, and the King shows his displeasure at having a simple knight marry the wealthy ward of the Queen, but through the intercession of the Queen the royal consent is obtained. Leone and Jack, accompanied by their retinue, start for her estates to be married. On the way they are attacked by Hal Huntley. After a hard fight Jack succeeds in routing the outlaws and driving Hal Huntley to the edge of a precipice to death. Then Leone and Jack repair to her home, where they are married.

THE HONOR OF THE FIRM (Nov. 12).—The faithful old manager of the Cooper Fidelity Co., after being discharged by young Cooper, upon the latter succeeding to his father's business, learns that the firm is in grave financial danger through the speculations of the boon companion whom Cooper has appointed in his place. The old man, though unjustly dismissed, still cherishes the firm's good name. He generously offers Cooper his help to rescue the concern from its dilemma. When this proposition is arrogantly rejected he resolves that Cooper shall be saved from ruin in spite of himself, and the honor of the firm upheld.

By means which his lofty purpose alone could justify he gets information regarding oil holdings of the company. He gambles the very roof over his head upon the chance of striking oil, in time to ward off the other man's excited creditors. Against every obstacle which the wrong-headed Cooper can place in his path, and hampered even by his own daughter, who misinterprets his designs, the old man succeeds in his project. A rich well is tapped. Cooper finds himself at the last minute able to meet his creditors. The old manager has saved the honor of the firm which had rejected him.

THEIR CHILDREN'S APPROVAL (Nov. 14).—A widow and widower decide to marry. He has a son, and she has a daughter in a convent, to whom they are respectively devoted, and whose approval they wish, but they don't know how to break the news and arrange things. Finally he sends a telegram to Dick, calling him home, and she sends one to Angele. The two children duly start, and Dick happens to catch the boat Angele is on. It is a case of love at first sight, and finally they become acquainted. Convent-bred Angele will not tell her name, or allow him to disclose his. The case progresses on both sides, and when they reach their destination they part at her command, she promising to be his if he can find her.

The widower acquaints his son with the news and takes him to call on his future stepmother. Angele is out, and misses them. Dick isn't very enthusiastic and manages to depart at the first chance. Later Angele comes in and meets her future stepfather. She is, of course, polite, but apparently doesn't approve any more than Dick. Both children try to dissuade their parents from taking the step, but to no avail. The wedding day arrives, and Dick and Angele are coaxed and dragged by their respective parents to the minister's. They meet, and it is hard to say which of the four is most astonished. In the excitement Dick whispers a few words to Angele and disappears, while Angele conveniently has hysterics and delays matters until Dick returns and slyly shows her he has a license. The wedding is the next thing, but Angele and Dick step before their astonished parents. They remonstrate, but are calmly informed if they withhold their approval, Dick and Angele withhold theirs, so they are forced to give in, and the double wedding goes on.

SEA ANEMONES (Nov. 15).—In certain seas the corals, madrepores or authozoaires form immense multi-colored forests. In the numberless species of zoophytes some are very curious to observe. For instance, the Asteria, or starfish, which moves very slowly; the acinia, commonly called the sea anemone on account of its brilliant colors and its resemblance to that flower—in fact, the sea anemone, like the living coral, attracts with its thousand tentacles and by learned evolutions the prey it is looking for, then closes up on it as soon as the victim is caught.

AN UNFORESEEN EVENT (Nov. 15). — Fickle and faithless, like all noblemen of his time, our Marquis even tries to make love to his pretty laundress, Margot. He dreams of making himself handsome to please her, and goes to the barber every day for that reason alone. Now, pretty Margot has a lover who cannot endure the presence of a rival, even though he be rich and noble.

He (Marquis) entrusts his valet, Lucre, to bring Margot a bouquet, in which this note is concealed: "My dear Margot:—I will expect you this evening in the grove by the park." Unfortunately Lucre meets the Marchioness on his way; she takes the bouquet from him and, of course, finds the note.

Then she gives the order to the valet to give the bouquet to the girl and not to tell anything to his master. So Lucre does not say anything to the Marquis, and when night came and our nobleman went to meet the pretty Margot, he was quite surprised to meet—his own wife.

A CRIMINAL IN SPITE OF HIMSELF (Nov. 17).—Louis Moriot bids farewell to his bachelor life. A former sweetheart becomes enraged, and after Moriot leaves the room she promises to "get even" with him. She reads in the paper that the notorious burglar, Louis Moriot, is still at large. Strange similarity of names! She immediately cuts it out and sends it to innocent Louis Moriot's fiancee's family with a letter of introduction.

Meanwhile Louis Moriot is received by his future relatives, who are all well pleased with him. He and his affianced, Bertha, go for a walk. While they are out a letter is delivered. It is the one enclosing the clipping. Stupefaction! The uncle offers to act as spokesman for the family, but hardly had he tried to speak to Louis Moriot than he gets frightened and runs away, and poor Moriot cannot understand why every one fears him. Meanwhile the uncle meets a policeman and explains everything to him. They arrest Moriot. Bertha tries to rescue her lover, but they take her away from the miserable man. She goes away and meets a newsboy, who is announcing the arrest of the notorious burglar, Louis Moriot, and his picture appears in the paper. It does not resemble Bertha's lover in the least. Louis is let free, but only forgives those who offended him through his love for Bertha.

THE HARBOR OF OPORTO (Nov. 17).—This film shows that more than the world-famed wine called port comprises the industries of this fascinating seaport.

CHAMPION.

A PROTEGE OF UNCLE SAM (Nov. 11).—An extended review of this two-reel subject is published in another part of this issue.

NESTOR.

A WHITE LIE (Nov. 11).—Grace and Dick Spencer are orphans. Dick goes West and becomes a cowboy. Eventually the ranch boss is unable to condone Dick's fits of intemperance any longer and dismisses him. Dick drowns his sorrows at a saloon and joins a game of cards, and in a half-drunk condition he makes mistakes, is accused of cheating and ejected from the saloon. Dick sits down by the roadside and makes resolutions for the future. Bess, the sheriff's daughter, is out riding. She dismounts to pick some flowers and is bitten by a rattlesnake. Dick hears her cries and running to her he kills the snake and cuts around the bite and sucks the poison out. He attempts to carry her back, the horse having run away, but dissipation has sapped his strength, and he makes her as comfortable as possible and hastens into town to get help.

The sheriff and some cowboys see the riderless horse. On the outskirts of the town they meet Dick, who is exhausted and falls, hurting his hip. He rises as the sheriff asks him where his daughter is, and what he is doing here. Dick attempts to speak, and places his hand to his injured hip. The action is misjudged and he is shot by the sheriff. Dick motions to one of the boys and gasps out the facts. The sheriff is overcome with grief at his hasty action and, bidding the boys take Dick carefully to his house, the sheriff rides on and brings Bess back.

Grace is sent for, but does not arrive in time to see her brother alive. Before he dies Dick freely forgives the sheriff, whom he begs not to tell Grace he was a "bad man." Dick dies smiling and with Bess's kiss upon his lips. The boys all agree that Grace shall only know the good about her brother, and are just in time to finish the roughly hewn and inscribed headstone when she arrives. Grace reads the fact that Dick died a hero, and adds to the numerous wreaths on the newly made grave, and the sheriff tells her that he now has two daughters, instead of one.

DAD'S MISTAKE (Nov. 13).—Jack Dowling goes West and buys a ranch. Here he meets Dorothy Davies, who lives upon an adjoining ranch. The young couple instantly become interested in each other. Dorothy tells Jack to be nice to her big sister, Amy, and he may be able to see more of her, as her father, Basil Davies, is very strict with the girl, and kind-hearted Amy acts as a kind of mother to the girl. Jack follows her advice, and as a result the father believes him in love with Amy, so that when Jack writes a note to Basil, asking for his daughter's hand in marriage, the father accepts for his eldest daughter, and when the young man appears it is big, rosy Amy who greets him. Jack is nonplussed, but at last manages to explain to the sister that it is Dorothy with whom he is in love. As she leaves to find her younger sister, Dorothy appears to upbraid Jack for his falseness, as Basil has already told her of his proposal. The young man explains her father's error as Basil enters to find them radiantly happy, but he will not give his consent until Amy appears to plead for her sister's happiness.

A COWGIRL CINDERELLA (Nov. 15). — Jack Rae, after working hard, graduates from college, but contracts a bad cough, and the doctor orders him to go to Arizona. He duly arrives at his uncle's ranch, and makes the acquaintance of the "help," Abigail. There is a girl, of course, who is fascinated with Jack's face and manners. Her name is Evelyn. She is visiting her uncle and aunt, who live upon the adjoining ranch.

Evelyn is to be given a party. She gets her things ready and discovers that the heel of one of her white slippers is loose. She asks a cowboy to take it to the village to be fixed. He does this, but loses it on the way. Jack comes along, sees the slipper and confiscates it, and falls promptly and foolishly in love with its unknown owner. Despite the amusement he causes his uncle and aunt, Jack places the slipper on the mantel. Abigail thinks this silly, and Bill, another cowboy who has his eye on Abigail, thinks she is the same to even think of the Easterner. The great evening arrives, and Jack forgets the romance of the shoe before the attraction of Evelyn. They become great friends immediately. This suits Bill, who gets all the dances he wants with Abigail. Evelyn calls to see Jack's uncle and aunt. She sees the shoe and twits him with treasuring it. He tries it on her foot. He later sees the mate and suggests they be like the shoes—an impertinent suggestion, which meets with response and approval. Abigail hears of the story of the slipper and tries to see what losing her shoe will do. Bill finds the substantial affair and repairs the gate hinge with it. Abigail cries and Bill apologizes nicely and makes good, with the aid of his horseshoe ring.

THE CHORUS GIRL (Nov. 17).—Jack Gray borrows $50 from his friend the doctor. He gives the doctor his I. O. U. On the reverse side of the card is a message to Jack from some chorus girl, asking Jack to meet her at the chorus girls' ball. The doctor's wife, while sewing a button on the doctor's coat, finds the card and thinks it is meant for her husband. She determines to disguise herself as a chorus girl and meet her husband herself. This she does, but on her way to the ball her auto runs into a post and she is rendered unconscious. Jack sees the accident and he carries her into his house. She revives and he induces her to take a few drinks. Meanwhile Jack telephones his friend the doctor to call at once, believing her seriously injured. When the doctor calls he finds his supposed patient doing a bear dance with Jack. He recognizes his wife in the chorus girl, and proceeds to give Jack a very artistic beating. His wife, having gone home, awaits his return, showing him the card as the reason for her actions. He shows her the reverse side of the card, with Jack's I.O.U., and serious complications are thus averted.

HER OLD LOVE (Nov. 17).—Irene before being married was in love with one of Uncle Sam's sailor boys. A few years later he returns, honorably discharged. He sees Irene on the street and follows her to her home. Thinking to surprise her, he enters the house and makes his presence known by kissing and hugging Irene. Just at this moment Irene's mother-in-law enters and sees this lavish display of affection. She runs out to tell hubby. Irene explains to her old lover that she is married and bids him be on his way. Hubby returns and Jack hides in mother-in-law's trunk. She sees him and determines to lock him in. She looks for her keys and Jack gets out. Hubby, still hunting Jack with a gun, comes upon the open trunk. His mother, thinking him Jack, throws him in and locks the trunk. She sits on the trunk to keep him safe, and hubby shoots through the top of the trunk, the bullet lodging in her hand. Meanwhile Jack escapes through the window, and hubby, being let out of the trunk, nearly suffocated, upbraids his mother for falsely accusing his faithful wife.

THE LIGHTING OF LOVE'S WAY (Nov. 12).—Adolph, a half-witted hunchback, loves a girl who is loved by Miles, a lighthouse tender, whose affection she returns. They have a clandestine meeting, as her father objects to Miles. Later Miles and the girl are married in a boat, while the father rages on the shore. A month later Adolph cuts the wires and punches holes in the oil tank at the lighthouse. Miles, the keeper of the lighthouse, finds that the light will soon be extinguished, as holes have been bored through the oil tank. He goes ashore for oil.

The hunchback, who is laboring under a delusion that the lighthouse keeper's wife is held a prisoner by her husband, comes in the house and asks her to go away with him. She refuses to leave, and he ties her to a chair. Then he goes up to put out the light. A steamer is seen approaching. Adolph is just about to put out the light when the wife breaks loose, runs upstairs, and after a fight she throws him from the lighthouse window and manages to keep the light burning until the ship is safe. Then she and her husband search for the hunchback and find him clinging to a boat and almost dead. They resolve to care for him in the future.

BLACKFOOT'S CONSPIRACY (Nov. 12).—The old blind chief, believing it time to appoint a new chief to succeed him, selects Swift Wind, his son. The latter is promised the beautiful Rainbow for his squaw, and thereby incurs the enmity and hatred of the warrior Black Ox, his half brother, and Dark Cloud, the latter's mother. Black Ox and Dark Cloud plot to get the chieftainship away from Swift Wind, and Dark Cloud steals Swift Wind's fur covering and bearstooth necklace and puts them on Black Ox. The two enter the old chief's tepee and make him believe that Black Ox is Swift Wind, and the old man orders Dark Cloud to put his head dress, necklace and other articles on Black Ox. As they emerge from the tepee Dark Cloud encounters Rainbow, claps her hand over the astonished maiden's mouth and drags her from the scene. Black Ox is acclaimed the new chief and the Indians greet him. The feast is prepared, and while it is in progress Swift Wind returns. He scents the treachery and, after a desperate knife fight with Black Ox, he succeeds in telling the old chief of the deception. The chief commands silence and summons the tribe, and is about to address them when the dread call comes and he falls dead. Despite his protests Swift Wind is banished and the struggling and heart-broken Rainbow is held by Black Ox and his mother, Dark Cloud.

Swift Wind wanders in the desert and suffers from hunger and thirst. He is eventually rescued by a company of trappers, who take him with them. Later Black Ox and his warriors attack the trappers' camp, and as Black Ox scales the defenders' stockade he comes face to face with Swift Wind. They have a knife duel, and as Swift Wind is about to kill his rival he is wounded by a shot from the outside, and Black Ox escapes. Dark Cloud shows Rainbow her wedding dress, and the latter watches her chance and escapes, after half strangling Dark Cloud. She meets the trappers on their way to punish the Indians, and mounts behind her lover, Swift Wind. The Indians suffer defeat, and Black Ox is banished and Swift Wind is proclaimed the chief of the tribe, and the trappers and Indians smoke the pipe of peace.

FRANKFURTERS AND QUAIL (Nov. 17).—The young couple were happy, and the fact that they had very little money was absolutely no difference to them. Wealth, however, came to the man and wife through the unexpected death of a rich relative. They now had a beautiful estate, a large circle of friends and plenty of money, but they were far from being happy.

The butler scared the husband, and he loathed the evening clothes his valet brought him at six o'clock each night. The wife had her troubles, too, for her maid annoyed her. One morning the husband noted in the paper that the Coney Island Carnival was on. The poor man didn't dare ask his wife, so he left a note explaining that he would lunch at a very tiresome club. He eluded the vigilant valet and the grave butler and "hiked" to Coney Island.

The wife also noted that there was to be doings at the seashore. So she, too, left a note telling of a social function and then made a bee-line for the amusement resort. Man and wife met while viewing the parade. There were mutual explanations and mutual laughter. They then telephoned to their servants that they were "dining out," and proved it by eating "hot dogs."

MISS TAQU OF TOKIO (Nov. 19).—He was the only son of a wealthy and indulgent widowed mother. When he returned from college, he fell in love with his mother's companion. The mother immediately refused her consent to the marriage. When the companion found that the hope of being a rich man's wife would not be fulfilled, she promptly took her departure.

Believing himself heartbroken, the son started on a trip around the world. While in Japan he was strongly attracted by a little Japanese girl seen by accident in a tea garden. He was very much in love with Miss Taqu, and made her his wife. Two years after her wayward son left his native land, the widow was delighted to hear from him to the effect that he was returning accompanied by his wife and their infant son. The mother prepared to receive her son in state. To her horror, he entered accompanied by a hated Oriental. The mother was chagrined, but in the joy of getting her boy back, she excused him, and proceeded to enjoy his company, simply ignoring the wife.

Realizing that she was neglected by her husband's friends and family, Taqu quietly slipped from the house one night, leaving behind her a message that she was returning to her people. The husband on receiving the message, decided she was right and plunged into life of gaiety, which seemed great fun after his long absence in a foreign land. But the old friends did not seem the same. Constantly before him rose the figure of Taqu.

Taqu took up her residence in the little home near Tokio that she had once entered as a happy bride, and there to her one day came her husband, repentant and humble, telling her that she and her baby and their little corner of Japan were more precious to him than all the rest of the world.

CROSS YOUR HEART (Nov. 22).—A little boy, inmate of an orphan asylum, ran away. He fell in with an itinerant knife grinder. The boy had had no home life and when his companion suggested that they steal some chickens, he did not object. The farmer was alert, however, and although the knife grinder escaped, the boy was made a prisoner.

The farmer had two little children, a boy and a girl. They had gone to bed, and came down to investigate. They were sorry for the tiny prisoner and when their father was out of the room, released him. The little girl lectured him and then assisted him to escape through a window.

The little orphan came into good fortune. A wealthy real estate broker saw him and later adopted him. The boy, when he grew to manhood was taken into partnership by his benefactor. One day the firm engaged a new stenographer, and the junior partner did not know the youth was one of the children who had aided him years before. The stenographer squandered his money, and ran heavily into debt. Brooding over what he called his misfortunes, he saw a chance to take a sum of money from the safe and yielding to impulse did so. Hardly had he left the office before the theft was discovered by the junior partner, who was morally certain that the stenographer was the guilty party. He followed him to his home, and while waiting in the sitting room for him to appear, noticed on the mantelpiece a picture of two children. He recognized them as the ones who had saved him from imprisonment years before, and on questioning the stenographer's pretty sister found that she was the little girl who had made him swear to be honest.

When the boy came down stairs prepared for flight, he was shocked to see his employer there. The junior partner, however, did not have him arrested. He explained how he had been given a second chance, and because of it had made good. The young man with tears in his eyes swore he would make good in the future.

DON CAESAR DE BAZAN (Nov. 20)—(2 reels).—Don Caesar is reduced to naught but his title, to save a poor youth, Lazarillo. Don Caesar fights the captain of the king's guards and kills him. He is condemned to be shot and pending the execution, is confined to jail with Lazarillo. Don Jose, the Prime Minister, suggests to Don Caesar that, although he is to die, he should marry before the day of the execution and thus perpetuate his title. Don Caesar consents with the promise that he may drink with the soldiers before he is shot. While he is doing this, young Lazarillo extracts the bullets from the soldiers' guns. Just previous to the execution Don Jose enters with Maritana, a flower girl, and she is wedded to Don Caesar. He is taken to the yard, the soldiers fire, Don Caesar falls, but when the men leave the court-yard, he escapes; later he appears in disguise at a state ball in search of the bride whose face he has never seen. On revealing himself to Don Jose Don Caesar signs a paper disclaiming forever all title in favor of his supposed wife. An instant later he catches sight of Maritana, whose name, the Countess de Bazan, has been heralded and, tearing the document, starts in pursuit. Maritana, while briefly enjoying the King's protection, has repelled him. After humorous and dramatic episodes, Don Caesar, vaulting through Maritana's window, surprised a visiting noble. Lazarillo, who is in Maritana's employ, apprizes Don Caesar that the visitor is the King. Don Caesar demands to know the identity of a stranger in his wife's apartments. The King boldly asserts, "I am Don Caesar de Bazan." Don Caesar forcibly replies, "If you are Don Caesar de Bazan, I am the King of Spain." The King, in his dilemma, summons the guards to arrest Don Caesar, but the timely arrival of Maritana (who has been warned by Lazarillo) brings events to a climax and the union of Don Caesar and the flower girl is sanctioned by the King.

FATHER (Nov. 23).—When John Morris loses his entire fortune on the stock exchange, his first thought is of his motherless son, Dick. He decides that the boy must have an education at all events. He gives Dick over to the charge of a lawyer to whom he also entrusts all he was able to save. The lawyer promises that the boy shall receive as good an education as possible. Satisfied that Dick will be cared for, the father disappears. For twenty years he works in a city far away from the town where his boy is at school. Ashamed of his poverty he never intrudes on Dick. A month before graduation day, the lawyer asks John for $100 which he says he must have before Dick graduates. John has not the money and there is no one of whom he may borrow it. Urged on by the fear that his boy will have the coveted diploma snatched away from him, he steals the money from his employers. On graduation day the father sits far back in the audience and watches his boy graduate with honors. Returning to the city, he is arrested. Dick is appointed lawyer for the employer. It is the boy's first case and anxious to win, he makes an eloquent speech against his own father. The judge charges the jury, but before they can announce their decision, the lawyer dashes in and explains the whole case. The employer withdraws his charge. Dick, overcome with remorse greets his father with love and affection.

A COMEDY OF ERRORS (Nov. 20).—Mr. Greeneyes, who is very much in love with his wife, gives her an extra kiss on the morning of his birthday. When Greeneyes walks down the street she throws kisses at him from the window, and Billy, who lives in the house across the street, thinks that these kisses are for him. When she drops a book to the street, Billy thinks that is an invitation. He accepts it with agility—but learns from Mrs. Greeneyes that the kisses were for her husband—a six-footer with big muscles. When Billy hears this he goes on the jump—forgetting his umbrella.

The husband later returns and sees the umbrella. His wife explains that the umbrella is a birthday gift. Satisfied, he leaves. Later Billy returns for his umbrella, and while in the house Greeneyes comes back. Wifey hides Billy in a closet, where he almost suffocates, while she explains with "she" about the gloves hubby finds on the table. A series of comic incidents follow here in rapid succession, until Billy and hubby confront each other, while wifey explains that Billy is the tailor—which results in Billy losing his fine fur coat. All these events give Greeneyes sufficient cause to be jealous, which culminates in a big scene, where hubby upsets everything in the house in his search for Billy. Billy takes advantage of the turmoil and makes off with his belongings, and when later hubby asks for his birthday presents, wifey answers: "Birthday presents! Poor hubby; you've had an attack of delirium; there are no presents, but I'll get you some."

THE POWER OF MONEY (Nov. 22).—The story concerns a broker who is in love with a nice little girl. He has a rival. The rival, who is also a broker, plans to "break" the man who is in his way—knowing that the girl will not marry a poor man. Through some of his friends the rival is able to get his opponent to buy certain mining stocks. The plans of his rival are successful, and the broker is ruined.

The broker in his opulent days buys, in a jest, a Louisiana lottery ticket. However, he does not keep it very long. In paying for flowers one day he gives the lottery ticket to the flower girl. The ticket wins the capital prize, and the girl gets the money. She, however, traces the man who gave her the ticket, and divides the prize with him. The money comes at an opportune moment, for with it the broker is able to redeem his losses and make a little besides, much to the chagrin of his rival. His old sweetheart, who had left him when he lost his money, is now willing to receive his attentions, but the broker does not think much of "sunny day" friends. He is soon able to win the love of the flower girl.

THE BROKEN IDOL (Nov. 19).—Nora, her mother and her fiance go behind the scenes at the opera to get a "close-up" look at Strombolini, the great tenor. Nora had been somewhat affected by the golden notes of the singer and had felt that life with a man of his temperament would be one long sweet song. As she sits amid the admiring throng she feels that he is the ideal of her girlish dreams. Strombolini, unhappily, is a much loved man and receives so many "mush" letters from adorers that he needs three secretaries to tear them up. How to awaken his love is the problem. She is so much engrossed in the throes of this passion that she flouts her fiance. She finally writes a letter to the singer, which she follows by many more. The tenor, his curiosity aroused by the letters, none of which he has answered, finally agrees to meet her. She arrives at the trysting place and waits for her hero. The hero arrives, but without a mustache and his fourteenth century costume and the halo of his high "C" flat. She does not recognize him. He admits that he is the beautiful tenor, charming prince, the ideal mentioned in her caloric notes, but it is very difficult for her to believe that he can be the great Strombolini. Thereupon after leaving him she becomes very melancholy, comes down to a diet of dill pickles and olives and other lovesick feminines, and but for the fact of a good constitution would have wasted away to a shadow. She is still under the hallucination when she receives a picture which shows the tenor in the most unromantic light, and which gives six sturdy and very good reasons why she cannot marry him—a wife and five children—whereupon the illusion breaks with a loud report. The fiance opportunely comes on the scene. Business—smiles, kisses and embraces.

OLGA, THE ADVENTURESS (Nov. 28).—Baron De Tournay, a musician and composer, has betrothed his daughter, Delicia, to the Chevalier De Maison. He then attends a party at which the much celebrated singer Olga Pavlova is to sing. The old man becomes infatuated with the singer and invites her to spend a few days at his country home. His daughter intuitively feels that the Countess is an adventuress, and her misgivings are justified when the entrapped father asks the Countess to marry him. Delicia, in sorrow that her dead mother's place should be filled by such a creature, has her fiance instigate inquiry into the past of the diva. He obtains a report from the police which tells of the scandalous and criminal actions of the singer in Vienna, Moscow and Budapest, and that she had several times been in prison for felonies. Using the document as a club, he tries to frighten the adventuress into abandoning her scheme of marrying the Baron, and incidentally his money. The adventuress by a ruse gives the Baron the idea that the young man is infatuated with her, and that he has tried to induce her to elope with him. She has told the young man that she will submit to his demands under penalty of disclosure. She meets the Chevalier at the rendezvous, ostensibly confirming the story she has told of his perfidy to the Baron. She gallops away with the Chevalier, and later they enter a boat in which they were to row to the far side of the river, from whence she was to leave the neighborhood forever. As they get out upon the stream the Chevalier unwisely gives her the incriminating paper, after many pleadings. With the document now in her hands the Countess suddenly pushes the Chevalier overboard and, as he tries to clamber into the boat, strikes him upon the head with an oar. She then goes back to the shore, where the Baron awaits her, believing the Chevalier to have been drowned. She explains her actions to the Baron by saying that she was compelled to so act to defend her honor. The Chevalier, however, not to be so easily killed, reaches the shore, mounts his horse still grazing on the bank and pursues the attempted murderess and her dupe. He drags the woman from her horse, and as she lays partly stunned he then has to combat the frenzied Baron. He persuades the latter, however, to allow him to draw from the bodice of the woman where she had concealed it, the police report, which he shows to the astounded nobleman, who then, realising that he had escaped a great peril, orders the adventuress from his sight.

MAJESTIC.

TWO OF A KIND (Nov. 19).—Jane, the daughter of a socially inclined mother, hates balls. She wants to become a teacher at a charitable kindergarten. Her mother will not listen to this. Mrs. Morton, another society leader, has a son, Jack, who runs away from all his mother's balls. She insists upon his coming to one. Jane and her mother, with cousin Vera, attend. Jack is forced to ask Vera to dance, but he makes a bad job of it. Jane with her scowls frightens every one away. She seeks refuge in the conservatory. She sees Jack trying to take Vera around the floor and laughs. Later he stumbles into the conservatory. Jane tells Jack of seeing him dance. They laugh and get a bit friendly. Next morning Jane says she will leave home if she is not permitted to go and teach. Her mother consents. Jane finds her element at the kindergarten. One day by chance she meets Jack downtown. She asks him in to see the work. He goes. Jane's mother, paying a visit to her obstinate daughter, finds Jack and Jane in the midst of a hilarious time in the kindergarten. Perfectly satisfied, she returns home. A few nights later Jack calls upon Jane. In the parlor they have no trouble in entertaining each other. Jane's mother stumbles in just as Jack is handing the girl a bunch of flowers, and immediately comes to the wrong conclusion. She thinks the two are in love. Excusing herself, she leaves. Jane attempts to explain, but Jack takes her into his arms and they become sweethearts.

AMERICAN.

THE THIEF'S WIFE (Nov. 18).—Left alone, excepting for the occasions when her husband returns to maltreat and abuse her, Effie Neville's cup of bitterness was not full until one day he dashed into their rude hut and, hastily concealing something within the house, said to her: "If anyone asks for me, tell 'em I ain't back yet." He hurries away. After he has gone she enters the shack and finds what her husband had secreted—a bag of gold. Soon the sheriff's posse arrives, but the wife tells them her husband has not yet returned. However, the sharp eyes of the sheriff has noted the tracks of a man, and, leading his posse away, the man-hunt is on. They soon come into the vicinity of the outlaw, who, by a circuitous route, regains his house and locks himself within. The posse discovers the ruse and attack the house until the sheriff orders them to cease firing. They attempt to rush the house, when the outlaw, firing, wounds the sheriff. Sliding down from the loft as the posse enters the house, the outlaw secures the sheriff's horse and hurries away. The posse follows him, while the outlaw's wife busies herself in binding up the sheriff's wounds. The wife secures the bag of gold and gives it to the sheriff, and asks, now that the money is returned, they pursue her husband no further. In the meantime the posse has overtaken the outlaw, and on his refusal to surrender they fire and he is wounded. They hurry him back to the hut, where the sight of the sheriff and his wife infuriates him. Straining at his captors to release himself, he completes the work the bullet began and falls, dying, at their feet. The posse files away while the sheriff extends the hand of sympathy and succor to the bereaved woman.

THE WOULD-BE HEIR (Nov. 21).—Alone in the world, with the exception of her worthless cousin, Ethel Rivers had learned to love her foreman, Jack Mason. Her cousin determines to estrange the couple, as Ethel's marriage would conflict with his plan to secure possession of the ranch. He confers with his servant and together they evolve a plot. He is to simulate an injury, and the servant is to go to Ethel for succor. Then the servant is to entice the foreman to a convenient spot to witness his sweetheart's perfidy. When the servant arrives at the ranch with the washing she feigns great excitement and tells Ethel that her cousin has broken his leg. Ethel hurries to her cousin to help him, and the servant seeks the foreman and tells him that his sweetheart is false. The scene she brings him to witness sends a pang of jealousy through him and he prepares to leave the ranch. He bids the boys goodbye, but ignores his sweetheart. As he passes the hut of the servant he is startled by hearing his name mentioned and that of his sweetheart. The plotters are talking over the success of their plans. Jack rushes at them and assaults the cousin. He then returns to his sweetheart and, after explanations, joy again reigns supreme in the hearts of the lovers.

AN IDYL OF HAWAII (Nov. 23).—Bob Ransom is the son of wealthy New York parents. He is in love with Helen Braddon, but at the opening of the story a lovers' quarrel has temporarily marred the celestial horizon. At this time Ransom, Sr., makes an extensive investment in Hawaiian plantations. At the urgent insistence of Bob, Ransom, Sr., sends him to the Hawaiian Islands to take charge of his interests there. Bob arrives. One day, while strolling along the beach, he chances to catch sight of a native girl. Later he chances into his hut, to find the native girl much interested in his typewriter, etc.

The native girl is daughter of the island potentate, but does not reveal her identity to Bob. In the days that follow he teaches her American customs, and their admiration of each other soon grows to love. Meanwhile Bob receives letters from his people, telling him to return home, and that Helen will be glad to see him. Bob, however, believes himself in love with the native girl and replies that he is contented to remain where he is.

Trouble arises between the scattered island planters and the potentates. Bob writes his father about the trouble and asks him to come to Hawaii.

The native girl is loved by a native high in the councils of the King, however, and that person makes it his business to discover the romance. He informs the King, who promptly becomes furious at his daughter. Meanwhile Ransom, Sr., with his wife and Helen, arrive. Bob is awakened from his dream and finds that his real love is for Helen. The native girl discovers it also, but too late. With the consent of the King and the disappointed lover a ruse is planned to poison Bob by inviting the American to drink with the King. The wine is poisoned, and as Bob is about to drink she seizes the poisoned wine, drains the bowl and before death claims the victim she heroically places the hand of Helen in Bob's.

THE ALTAR OF DEATH (2 reels) (Nov. 18).—Lieutenant Hart comes to the rescue of Bright Star, who is being driven away by a sentry, and he gives her permission to enter the fort to sell her beadwork. The beauty of the girl attracts him and he meets her secretly in the forest. He gets her a spelling book, and the enamored Indian girl studies sincerely to meet the favor of the handsome soldier who has captured her heart. The romance is interrupted by the arrival from the East of Miss Harvey, a niece of the Colonel's wife, and Lieutenant Hart dances attendance upon her. The Indians are invited to the fort by the Colonel, and Bright Star accompanies them. As they are walking through the grounds the girl's face lights up with pleasure as she sees the Lieutenant with Miss Harvey on his arm, and the innocent child of the forest runs up to him and throws her arms about his neck. Hart roughly disengages himself and curtly bids her be gone, laughingly endeavoring to explain to Miss Harvey that he is not at fault for the conduct of Bright Star. With a realization of the hopelessness of her love, Bright Star's heart is filled with despair and rage, and she takes the spelling book from her bosom and rends it to pieces.

Time lapses. Lieutenant Hart's hopes of winning Miss Harvey are shattered by the receipt of an invitation to her wedding to another. The Indians show signs of an outbreak, and Lieutenant Hart is ordered to take a supply of powder to a neighboring fort. The Indians maneuver to catch the soldiers at a disadvantage, and as the soldiers ride through a canyon their progress is checked by a murderous fire which is poured into their ranks by the Indians, concealed and sheltered by the huge rocks. Hastily dismounting, the boys in blue overturn their wagons and, using them for breastworks, fight for their lives.

At the top of the canyon the Indian girl watches the raging battle, and her joy is unbounded as she sees the soldiers drop, one by one, until but a mere handful of men support Lieutenant Hart in the unequal conflict. The tremendous bravery of the man finally touches her heart, and she is suddenly overcome by a revulsion of feeling which brings back her overwhelming love. Seeing that there is no hope for Hart, she determines to save him, and, sliding down the precipitous mountain side, she reaches the Lieutenant's side and quickly offers to show him a hidden passage through a cave. Carrying several large cans of powder, the men follow Bright Star up the steep cliff, and they reach the cave, but the Indians are so closely in pursuit that Hart quickly resolves to blow up the cave, which will obstruct the path of the Indians. The cans are set down, and a train of powder run to them. When a match is applied the little tongues of flame dart quickly toward the cans and a terrific explosion rends the mountain side. The charge had been too heavy, and the soldiers too close, and every man is slain. The Indians are seen being hurled through the air and sliding down the mountain side. Though in the throes of death, Bright Star drags herself to the body of the dead Lieutenant and dies with her arms about him.

THE CIVILIAN (2 reels) (Nov. 20).—Lieutenant Wade is the favored suitor of Ethel Brown until a young doctor comes to the post on a visit, who supplants him in her affections. The attention she pays the doctor at a ball nearly breaks his heart, and he passes a sleepless night. In the early morning he orders his horse and goes for a ride. A pioneer comes to the post and asks for a doctor to attend his wife, who is seriously ill. The young physician volunteers his services, and Ethel accompanies him. On the way a wheel falls off the buggy, and as he is trying to put it back he sees a band of hostile Indians riding toward him. Lieutenant Wade, from the top of the hill, takes in the situation and gallops to his assistance. As Wade dismounts and hurriedly tries to bolt the wheel on the doctor is overcome with fear and, leaping on the Lieutenant's horse, makes his escape. Wade and the girl jump into the buggy and a running fight takes place, in which the couple are compelled to take to the hills. They find a cave in which they remain all night. In the morning the Indians take up the trail, and to save the girl he boldly draws their attention to himself and makes an attempt to escape, leading them away from the cave. Wade finally takes his stand behind a boulder at the top of a mountain pass and fights desperately, though severely wounded. The doctor, in his mad haste to escape, rides the horse over an embankment and is killed. The animal limps back to the post, and the soldiers, reading the message conveyed, go out after the Indians. The redskins are driven off, after a fight, and the Lieutenant and the girl are rescued. After Wade is restored to health Ethel comes to him and assures him of her love.

VITASCOPE.

THE UNWRITTEN LAW.—Frederick Huller, his wife and their son, Stephen, are acrobats of renown and ability. Domestic happiness has reigned supreme in their home for many years, until one day when Mr. and Mrs. Huller become acquainted with a rope dancer named Borellya. The acquaintanceship soon develops into intimacy, and we see the wife keep many appointments with the rope dancer. One morning, in a cafe where several artists have assembled, Huller finds his wife talking about the fame of their colleagues. Upon the entrance of Huller the conversation ceases, which arouses his suspicion. Just as he is about to leave the theater agent, Klereck, asks him to remain. He demands to know on what subject their conversation was, and one of his colleagues tells him that it was about the attentions his wife is paying to Borellya. He flies into a passion and leaves the cafe with Klereck. As he passes the hotel in which Borellya is staying he sees his wife coming out with the rope dancer. He walks about distractedly, and in the evening he performs his duties as usual, but does not speak to his wife. After the show he goes to the hotel where Borellya lives and kills him. Later he gives himself up to the police. At the trial he demands justice, and not pardon, but he has made such a good impression on the jurymen that they acquit him of murder and sentence him to a year's imprisonment. The foreman of the jury offers to take care of Huller's son, for which he is very glad, as he does not want him to go back to his mother. Furthermore he makes Stephen swear that he will never marry. Will young Stephen keep his oath? Will the wronged Frederick Huller, when he leaves the prison after serving his sentence, make it his duty to watch continuously over his son? Will the mother feel repentant? These are a few of the questions in a situation revealed to us, and finally we picture to ourselves the unhappy Hortense Huller in abject misery, sans husband, sans son, sans everything.

The Adventures of Lieut. Petrosino

THE Famous Italian-American Detective

In Four Parts and 80 Scenes, a Total of 3,500 Feet
BY SPECIAL PERMISSION OF MADAME PETROSINO

No public minded citizen of the United States or other countries need be told how this famous detective met his death in Palermo, Italy, while engaged in tracking the Black Hand criminals.

Undoubtedly the finest detective story ever produced—without a dull moment from beginning to end.

A genuine startler with plenty of action, and a sure crowd magnet.

Perfect in every detail, beautiful scenery. Splendid acting, magnificent quality, and staged with greatest possible care.

A genuine feature in every sense of the word.

States now selling at 15c. a foot, including territorial rights. Territory for other countries now open.

Magnetic one, three and six sheet posters, together with booklets, cuts, photos, slides and lobby frames now ready.

Regarding the Election

We're all elected. Didn't we tell you prosperity was here? Didn't we say that bountiful crops insured good times?

Well, get in the band wagon—don't run counter to it. The live wire, the ten-to-one dead-sure successful theatre proprietor must keep apace.

Consider the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN in earnest. We would not spend a penny in advertising unless we could do it honestly and to give you dollar for dollar in return.

Nothing can compare with a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN for insuring a steady increasing flow of business. The ONE and ONLY REASON for this is that with it you can show pictures that your PATRONS like. This is sufficient, but if you will consider what it saves you in current and how it aids you to make your theater attractive and safe, we wonder how you can delay. Install it at once and you surely will be happy.

The screen that makes 'em seem like moving paintings.

You have tried the rest, now buy the best.

PROTECT YOUR M. P. MACHINE—ALWAYS OIL WITH 3 IN ONE

3 in One is a pure, clear oil that lubricates perfectly star wheel, fly wheel, shutter gear, rewinder and every other working part of every kind of a moving picture machine.

The oil flows right to the heart of all action points, preventing wear and tear, and making each part do its work smoothly and about 100 times easier. Won't collect dirt and clog as greasy oils do. Contains no acid or alkali to injure your machine. Won't 'gum—won't run. Cleans and polishes—prevents rust on all metal surfaces.

FREE OIL FOR YOU

Send today for a generous free sample and the free 3 in One Dictionary. You'll get enough oil for a real good test. So get the bottle and the book now.

10c, 25c, 50c at all good stores. The 50c size is the economical M.P. machine size.

"READY FOR THE HOLD-UP"

THE GOVERNOR'S CLEMENCY

Jim owns an apricot orchard in California, and his letters to his brother Tom extolling the West and its opportunities allure the latter from the East. A frost ruins the orchard and Tom is forced to look for work. Failing to obtain it, and his wife in need of money back East, he decides to hold up the stage-coach. By mistake he misses the coach and attacks the Governor. It proves to be a fortunate hold-up, because of the "Governor's Clemency."

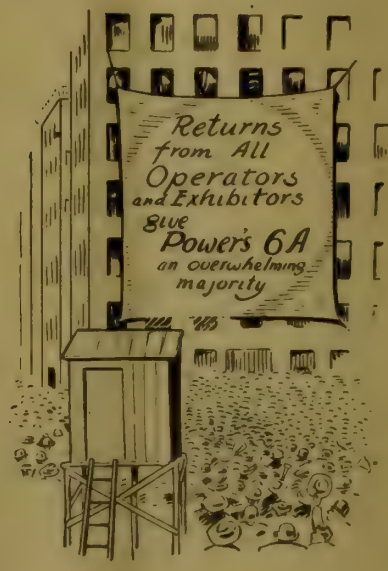
Power's No. 6A



The National Campaign extended throughout the country; it is over. Our campaign circles the globe—and we have only "begun to fight."

For fifteen years POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has been fighting battles—and winning 'em every time, too, because of its superior qualities and many individual features. That's why POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has been ELECTED TO SERVE: In over 8000 houses (No. 6 and 6A) throughout the world, whose satisfaction is shown in re-orders.

ELECTED TO SERVE: The U. S. Government at numerous Forts and Posts and aboard many battle ships.

ELECTED TO SERVE: All the prominent lecturers—Burton Holmes, Lyman H. Howe, Dwight L. Elmendorf, etc.

ELECTED TO SERVE: Prominent feature shows such as Paul Rainey and Carnegie Alaska-Siberia pictures.

POWER'S does more business than all other moving picture machine manufacturers combined. Wherever the BEST must be had, POWER'S No. 6A is elected to serve. Catalogue G gives full detail.

Remember,

"The Forest Rose"

In Two Reels

Friday, November 29th is the Next Feature Release of

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

Released Sunday, November 24

The Truant's Doom

Oh, you did it yourself when you were a "kid"—played "hookey" from school—and maybe you had just as thrilling a dream. Likely you were "pinched," locked up in jail, effected your escape, was recaptured and—oh had a wondrous time! It's the "stuff that dreams are made of."

Released Tuesday, November 26

The Thunderbolt

It struck the house, wrecked the old stone chimney and sent the fragments crashing into the room. After the fragments came gold, lots of it. The chimney had been the hiding place of a stolen fortune. The ultimate disposal of the fortune is the story the picture tells, tells well and tells with an unexpected "twist."

Released Friday, November 29

The Forest Rose

In two reels. Perhaps no story is better known through the West than this by Emerson Bennett of the early West, in the days of thrill when the redmen ruled. Your exchange has two great one-sheets and a three-sheet; and other "perfect publicity" for the picture includes heralds, slides and cuts. We'll tell you where to get 'em.

"THE SCHEME"

One of the biggest laughing hits for the month. A long, lingering scream of joy, involving Howard Missimer, Lily Branscombe, Eleanor Blanchard and Billy Mason in funny portrayals. Don't miss this one!

Released Thursday, November 21st

"BILLY McGRATH'S ART CAREER"

Another adventure of John Steppling in his popular character-creation of "Billy McGrath." This time Billy takes up art work, and his experiences make as interesting and enjoyable a production as can be imagined. Eleanor Blanchard, Dolores Cassinelli, E. H. Calvert and Augustus Carney in clever roles.

Released Friday, November 22nd

"THE PENITENT"

A splendid dramatic study, involving the happiness of four young hearts. A photoplay with a "punch." Beverly Bayne, Mildred Weston, Francis X. Bushman and Wm. Bailey featured. A head-liner for the best of programs.

Released Saturday, November 23rd

"BRONCHO BILLY'S HEART"

Mr. G. M. Anderson in another of the sturdy tales of the plains that have made the name of Essanay famous. Mr. Anderson featured in his world-popular role—a character that has become a household word wherever motion pictures are exhibited.

"Not of the dead wife and mother were the old Baron's thoughts as the lovely melody of the Liszt romance flowed from his fingers. His longings were for Olga, the siren, she of dark beauty and darker soul."

Plot and counterplot when the notorious wrecker of men's lives and men's fortunes, sings her way, a veritable Lorelei, into the heart of the fatuous old Baron. Desperate cunning, versus energy and evidence when the woman's unmasking is imminent. A life spared from cruel force of blows and the lethal kiss of drowning waters to frustrate the commission of a crime.

With the world's greatest moving picture actor every time you see a King Baggot Universal film! Stop and really think! Do you know of any actor in any other company who honestly compares with him in comedy, tragedy, drama, or anything else he attempts? Do you know of anything that will more surely pack your theatre than such a sign as "King Baggot Today?" Isn't this one more reason why you should insist on getting

And do you realize that King Baggot is only one of the many high-priced stars who are working their very hearts, souls and bodies to the extreme limit to give you something you've never had before—a clean, well balanced, reliable, money-making and complete weekly program? Isn't it time for you to wake up and see what kind of films the Universal is producing? Won't it surprise you to find that they're actually better and finer than the ones you are now using? Come, sir, it's about time for you to

IMP

"THE OPEN ROAD."
Monday, November 18th.

"THE CANDY GIRL."
Thursday, November 21st.

It is a scream from start to finish. One convulsion of laughter will follow another. Don't fail to book it.

"ONE OF THE BRAVEST"—"THE CRANBERRY INDUSTRY."
Saturday, November 23rd.

A frolicksome comedy full of laughs and a pleasing industrial.

POWERS

"THE LEG AND THE LEGACY."
Wednesday, November 20th.

The first California Power's release. Delightfully funny, with plenty of spirit and action.

"HER YESTERDAY."
Friday, November 22nd.

She realized the shame of the life she led when it was too late. Excellent story. Excellent acting.

CHAMPION

"BLUE RIDGE FOLKS."
Monday, November 18th.

Circumstantial evidence would have convicted Dallas of incendiarism and murder. That he escaped and Barker returned was a miracle.

VICTOR

"WAS MABEL CURED?"
Friday, November 22nd.

Mabel wanted to meet a crook for local color for her novel and Lang was on the same track. The practical joke of her father acted as a boomerang. See it!

NESTOR

"A FIGHT FOR FRIENDSHIP."
Monday, November 18th.

He forgot the college quarrel, when the crucial moment arrived, to save his chum's reputation. Big situations well produced and acted.

"IN THE LONG RUN."
Wednesday, November 20th.

Showing a novel and dramatic method used by a Western desperado to escape a sheriff's posse. Plenty of excitement.

"THE SHANGHIED COWBOYS."
Friday, November 22nd.

The cowboys stood for a lot in the cooking line, but they called "halt" on finger-bowls and French chef. Lively humorous situations.

101 BISON

"TRAPPED BY FIRE."
Tuesday, November 19th.

The big exciting scenes follow each other so closely that there is not a single minute that something big is not being flashed. Powerful story. Big cast.

"THE HALF-BREED SCOUT."
Saturday, November 23rd.

Jim loved Lucy, so did Dickson. Lucy's acceptance of Jim's hand was an insult to Dickson. The revenge he sought is spectacular and thrilling.

GEM

"A TONGUELESS MAN."
Tuesday, November 19th.

How a man rescued from the sea reconciled the man who saved him to a wife who would have deserted him. Beautifully emotional.

MILANO

"BONIFACE AS A BLACKAMOOR"—"CASTLES AND LANDMARKS OF ITALY."
Saturday, November 23rd.

A riot of fun in this farce comedy. On the same reel a pleasing scenic.

ECLAIR

"HIS DETERMINATION REWARDED."
Tuesday, November 19th.

A story about a criminal who after serving his term, tries to live down his past.

"THE BLACKHAND"—"MOTHER'S BANK ROLL"
Thursday, November 21st.

Both of them comedies and good, laughable ones at that.

"THE INVISIBLE"—"SEVILLE and Its GARDENS"
Sunday, November 24th.

A new kind of comedy and a tour with a camera through a picturesque country.

REX

"THE DEBT."
Thursday, November 21st.

The first two-reel Rex and it is a hundred per cent.a winner. The railroad wreck scene alone is well worth the money.

"THE BROKEN RING."
Sunday, November 24th.

When he left for the land of promise he gave her half a ring and kept the other. It was joined in later years under dramatic circumstances.

AMBROSIO

"GRANDFATHER'S FORGIVENESS" and "THE RAPIDS OF INATRA RIVER, FINLAND."
Wednesday, November 20th.

How a child brought about the reconciliation of a prodigal son and his parents. Pleasingly dramatic. On the same reel beautiful scenic.

CRYSTAL

"THE QUARREL"—"THE VALET AND THE MAID."
Sunday, November 24th.

Two comedies with original unique comic situations in every scene. One of the best mirth provokers ever.

THE ANIMATED WEEKLY

"THE ARMY SURGEON"

"The Army Surgeon"

DURING an Indian uprising the main body of troops leave the fort in search of the Indians, who elude them. Their renegade leader, finding his squaw is dying, boldly swoops near the fort and demands the services of a doctor. The army surgeon secretly undertakes the dangerous task, not wishing to alarm the women of the post. His rival takes advantage of his absence to create suspicion against him in the mind of the girl they both love. The squaw dies, and in sensational scenes the doctor escapes, hotly pursued, and finds the soldiers whom he leads back to the fort where the small garrison is battling for life. A thrilling conflict takes place in which the Indians are driven off, and the army surgeon is re-established in the affections of the girl.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

UNDERWRITERS' TYPE "B"

The final test of a motion picture machine lies in its ability to project steady, clear-cut, pictures while it is subjected to ceaseless grinding. To do that it must be built simply and only the best materials can be used. The Edison, the pioneer moving picture machine, is built to last. Countless experiments have shown just what materials are best suited for each part and each part is thoroughly tested before it is placed in the machine. Hardened steel is used in the Edison where there is the greatest strain. Everywhere there is the greatest possible care taken to prevent wear. Buy an Edison and let that "One Moment Please" sign gather dust on your shelf.

The exceptionally high grade lens used on the Edison gives the clear, sharp picture that your audience has a right to demand. The well-balanced mechanism gives freedom from flickers.

A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE

Geo. Rand hides and protects an outlaw wh is being pursued by a posse. In the night the bandit steals Rand's gun and haf and makes a getaway. A few weeks later he returns to the cabin and attempts to steal the money that Mrs. Rand is counting. He also insults her; she, however, secures his gun and holds him at bay until her husband and the Sheriff arrive and secure him. The reward of $1,000 is offered to Rand, who tosses it into the cradle and the baby proceeds to eat it up.

Released Thursday, Nov. 21st, 1912. Length 1021 feet.

LOVE AND TREACHERY

A story of Smugglers and the Coast Guards—very dramatic. Jean, a fisherman, is in love with Marie, who also follows the same calling. It is a beautiful match, but Jacques, a rival, reports to the Coast Guards that Jean is a smuggler. For a time the evidence is convincing, but in the end a companion of Jacques betrays him. The smuggler's cave is raided and Jean is restored to the arms of his pretty sweetheart.

Released Friday, Nov. 22nd, 1912. Length 427 feet.

THE DRUMMER

Anthony Brown, a salesman, goes on a trip. In his first town he meets a young lady friend, who induces him to go shopping. She is overloaded with purchases and Brown offers to put some of the bundles in his suit case. Forgetting the bundles he sends the suit case back home. Later the young lady asks for her packages, Brown is horrified at the thought of his wife finding the articles. When he returns home, much to his surprise, he is greeted lovingly, as wifey thinks they are presents for her birthday.

Released Friday, Nov. 22nd, 1912. Length 626 feet.

TAMING THEIR PARENTS

Mr. Abbot and his son Billy are in the habit of visiting Mrs. Pierce and her daughter Dorothy, object, matrimony. One evening Mrs. Pierce sees Abbot rudely push her kitten from the chair that he may sit down. She later serves tea, when he insists on two lumps of sugar instead of one, she loses her temper, an argument ensues, culminating in the young people being torn from each other's arms and the elders parting in anger. Billy and Dorothy confide in their friends, who conspire to kidnap the elders, blindfold them and turn them loose in a darkened room. When the light is turned on they indulge in recrimination, until they are persuaded by the young people to make up. Billy and Dorothy elope and at the finish all are married and depart on their honeymoon.

Released Saturday, Nov. 23rd, 1912. Length 1034 feet.

THE SILENT SIGNAL

Major Carews, in command of a squadron of cavalry near El Paso, is visited by his daughter Lucile. She meets Lieutenant Gilmore and they fall in love. Jose Montero, of the Mexican Junta, also tries to pay the young lady attentions, but she resents. The Mexican crosses the border, and, securing the aid of a band of outlaws, kidnaps Gilmore and a half-breed follower. The latter is made cook in the camp, and by giving the smoke signal, gets assistance from the U. S. fort, and the prisoners are soon in the hands of their friends.

Released Monday, Nov. 25th, 1912. Length 1059 feet.

THE SURGEON

Dr. Albert Hartley, a promising young surgeon, loses his position in the city by drinking. He goes West and secures work on John Lane's ranch. There he reforms and becomes a favorite of the family, especially in the eyes of the daughter. One day a Mexican is discharged for cruelty to his horse. In revenge he shoots Lane in the head. Hartley trepans the skull and saves his master's life. The Mexican is caught by a posse and Hartley catches Enola Lane.

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY, a strong two-reel production, featuring ARTHUR JOHNSON, supported by a capable dramatic company.

A beautiful story of a poor young musician who has composed an exquisite symphony. Adjoining his squalid quarters is a room occupied by a young lady of good family, but impoverished. She can hear the wonderful strains of the symphony played by the young musician and becomes first interested in the music and then in love with the composer. Together they plan to apprise the world of the genius. One evening, as a renowned musician is leaving a concert hall, after one of his great successes, the young composer throws the score of the symphony into the carriage of the great musician. Curiosity compels the musician to read the music and, at home, on his own instrument, he discovers the great work of the poor young composer. He adopts the symphony as his own and adds new laurels to his already great career. One evening at a concert at which the symphony is played the real composer rises in the audience and denounces the player, claiming the symphony as his. He is taken to prison and later put into an asylum. The young woman lover hears of his plight and intercedes with a rich aunt to help secure his release. The aunt believes in the young composer and conspires to show the musician who has stolen the symphony in his true colors. She invites him to a musicale at her home and requests him to play the symphony.. As he is playing, the young composer, now released from the asylum, tears the score into pieces and asks the musician to now play the symphony. Of course the musician cannot and acknowledges the young pauper composer's wonderful genius. This is a thrilling play, beautifully set.

SELIG

SELIG FIVE-A-WEEK.

Nov. 25th.

MISS AUBRY'S LOVE AFFAIR

An extremely laughable comedy done in the best style of Selig's western comedy players. This is a tale of errant affections and unusual outcome. Lillian Hayward, Bessie Eyton, Hobart Bosworth, and Herbert Rawlinson play the principal roles. About 1,000 ft.

Nov. 26th.

ROPED IN

A western comedy based on the results of a mail order marriage. The situations are refreshing and delightful. The Comedy is real and the laughter will come long and loudly from the audience that witnesses this picture. About 1,000 ft. Myrtle Stedman and Lester Cuneo are seen to advantage.

Nov. 27th.

THE HOBO'S REST CURE

Another bright comedy. One of the season's best in fact. A tramp is forced to idle his time away. This puts a new phase on his hitherto even existence and he rebels. About 1,000 ft.

THE INVINCIBLE PROGRAM.

Nov. 28th.

THE TRIANGLE

A very intense drama founded upon the eternal three that make the human equation. Two men and one woman. A theme that is as old as time, worked out in an entirely new way. Thomas Santschi, Besie Eyton and Herbert Rawlinson play the principal characters. About 1,000 ft.

Nov. 29th.

FRIENDS IN SAN ROSARIO, By O. Henry

One of the most delightful comedy dramas in recent years is this subject from the pen of that famous humorist, O. Henry. This tells how two neighboring bankers in a small town helped each other out when the bank examiner got after one of them. About 1,000 ft.

The Success or Failure of Your House

Depends Upon Three Important Factors, viz:

1. The Kind of a Theatre You Operate
2. The Photographic Quality of the Films.
2. The Variety of the Subjects Shown.

The first is your business exclusively and about it we have nothing to say.

The second is the business of every manufacturer and each is trying to excel in it.

THE THIRD IS OUR BUSINESS AS WELL AS YOURS!

There is a peculiar similarity in all American productions which cannot be helped. American Players think the same way and in consequence act much the same way. America cannot lend to the manufacturers of films the scenic beauties of the ancient castles and ruins for settings which abound in France, Spain and Italy. American players cannot play the same scene in the same way European actors would play it.

Facts and Comments

MUCH of the prejudice against foreign pictures is narrow and unfounded. A program consisting of American subjects only would be plainly one-sided. It is one of the glories of the cinematograph that it overleaps the boundaries of race and tongue. It draws the members of the human family together in bonds of mutual understanding and sympathy and emphasizes the oneness of mankind. It shows that clothes and manners and customs are, after all, but external and accidental and that the same human heart beats under the coat of the highly civilized American and the savage son of the desert. A foreign picture is never without some educational value, unless its moral tone is altogether bad. Exhibitors do not object to the foreign pictures as such, they only object to an excess of foreign pictures. Now out of about forty manufacturers who release their pictures on a scheduled basis only ten are distinctly foreign. Their pictures deal with foreign subjects exclusively. This percentage does not seem out of proportion. It must be mentioned, too, that every manufacturer nowadays has an eye on the American market and has at least a general notion of what the American public will tolerate and what it will utterly reject. If there is any prejudice abroad it is in favor rather than against the American-made picture. European exhibitors regard American pictures as sure drawing cards and advertise them in the daily papers as "genuine Americans." While it may be admitted that our pictures sustain a far higher average than the European product, we should not be narrow, but practice at least a fair degree of reciprocity.

LETTERS from various readers of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, exhibitors and just friends of the motion picture, insist on greater accuracy and attention to details in film plays. A correspondent from Los Angeles points out obvious and shocking improbabilities in three particular pictures, which he names. In one picture a woman is wearing winter garments, while the titles proclaim that the action is taking place in summer, in another "twenty years elapse," but the heroine still wears the same dress and in the third the action is supposed to progress through several months, though the calendar on the wall persists in showing one and the same date in the first scene and in the last. The writer of these criticisms is not an exhibitor, but as he himself says "only one in millions." His conclusions are so sensible and well put, that we cannot help quoting them word by word. "Intelligent people seeking recreation like to be treated as reasonable thinking beings. . . . I hear the remarks of the audiences and have my 'ear to the ground,' which brings a clear message, that unless a higher standard for the stories and their reproduction is maintained the picture shows will drift to the unthinking classes exclusively."

One may say, that these things are trifles and often creep into a good picture in spite of all care and vigilance. The answer is that these trifles occur too often. Nothing hurts the picture more than ridicule. There is still a disposition among the patrons of amusements to indulge a smile of more or less good-natured contempt whenever motion pictures are mentioned and such glaring improbabilities in a story must annoy even the most loyal friend of the picture. This thought should always be present in the mind and the artistic conscience of the director: "My picture will be seen and observed and criticised by millions. It is humanly impossible that any serious defect of the picture will escape notice. Once made the error cannot be corrected; the faulty scene or the foolish mistake will last as long as the reel of film itself. Carelessness therefore not only hurts the reputation of my firm and makes its trade-mark look cheap in the eyes of patron and exhibitor, but it will hurt the moving picture generally."

WITH a commendable display of tact and patience one of the great American manufacturers has accomplished a great work of charity. Probably no form of charity appeals more forcibly to the hearts of the public than the Floating Hospitals for sick women and children. These hospitals are maintained by St. John's Guild. To see these ships floating on river or bay filled with women and children who are suffering from the horrors of a hot summer is to bless the men and women who have engaged in the work. The manufacturer in question, thinking to help this great and noble charity along, requested permission to show the benefits of these floating hospitals in a reel of motion pictures. The permission was granted, not without hesitation and misgivings on the part of some of the officials and doctors in charge, who seemed to have a notion that in some way the moving picture might hurt this charity. When the reel had been made and was shown to the officials there was a great and immediate change of sentiment. Some of the doubting Thomases went to the film company and apologized for their lack of courtesy and co-operation. Said one of the leading men engaged in this blessed work: "Why, these pictures will be worth thousands and thousands of dollars to us. You see the people who contribute most generously to this fund are away in Europe when the hot weather comes. Consequently they never see the good we accomplish. Now when they see it all plainly before their eyes they will contribute more generously than ever." The power of the motion picture to awaken sympathy through the most vivid representation of things, is not the least among the glories of the cinematograph.

PROMINENT CHICAGO EXHIBITORS IN NEW YORK.

The World received a visit last week from William J. Sweeney, of the Standard Theater of Chicago, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Illinois; M. A. Choyinsky, of the Odeon Theater, Chicago, which house for nine years has been devoted exclusively to the projection of motion pictures, making it probably the pioneer picture house in the United States, and L. H. Frank, of the Halsted Theater, Chicago. The exhibitors from the city by the lake were being chaperoned by President Trigger, of the State Association. Among the points of interest visited was the Screen Club; the visitors were enthusiastic over the new organization, and expressed the hope that it would not be long before Chicago had a club in affiliation with the New Yorkers.

Originality

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE is a charm in the very sound of the word. After a solid round of monotony in adaptations that caricature quite as often as they distressingly reproduce, most of us sit up expectantly at the very idea of seeing something new and sparkling in moving pictures. None of us care particularly about straining our minds to follow a story done long ago in a way that may have suited people of another age and may have been dry as dust then, though accepted and become classic when there was nothing better at hand, because our own age is progressive and inventive.

The wonderful power of originating new things or new ways of doing old ones by bright and attractive means tells heavily with those who go to the theater to be entertained and thus escape the boredom of what has grown wearisome in their daily grind. We are long ago done with copy books, and rebel instinctively against copy photoplays. We want to be told something previously unknown to us, or something presented in a novel and felicitous manner. See how swiftly picture-show patrons took to the idea of watching current events of the day being exhibited on the screen!

There is a war going on. The face of Europe is being changed. The lawless barbarians who crossed into Europe four hundred years ago, who have survived as savages in an environment of civilization, who have been guilty of atrocities worse than those of American redmen, who turned a beautiful empire into a hell of decadence and crimson torture, are being driven out by a splendid spirit of avenging justice, yet we are not given a pictural glimpse of conditions accurately described in the papers, nor even shown a screen map of the situation.

Any original work concerning a subject so vividly impressed on the minds of our people would have been timely even if it had not been a masterpiece of execution. It would have at least been as interesting as the story of the Lady and the Burglar, of faint thrill and far-off moral, or other such indiscretions of authorship and her ladyship. The burglar of dress-suit and pearl-necklace proclivities is scarcely to be compared as a sensational dramatic figure to the glorious Bulgar who is driving the degenerate torturer of women and children across the Bosporus.

While producers are sweeping ancient avenues of information for servile copies, even going back to periods of early Greek history for heroic stories, one of the greatest dramas the world has ever known is being enacted between the spirited forces of small Christian states and the powerful nation that held Russia at bay. Enlightened bravery is being pitted against savage cruelty, magnificent tales of heroism are related every day, the very essence of the drama is being portrayed on the actual scene, while the spineless old story of two aspiring gentlemen and one doubtful young lady is being told for the thousandth time, or the fearful struggles of Willing Willie with Obdurate Old Pa-pah for variation.

This is creative criticism. It suggests by illustration one of the many ways out of the dry rot of stupid conventionalism by presenting a subject of live interest. The same imagination required to reinvigorate an old subject can be applied more brilliantly to material at first hand, the same skill of acting, the same ingenuity of direction, while the widespread interest in what is going on is at its keenest. Then there is something to tell with authentic details furnished in news of the day.

Originality does not necessarily mean that the plot or working scheme must be something never before heard of in the realms of playwriting. There is running in New York a quiet little comedy of human nature called "Milestones," in which the rising young man meets with parental opposition and the girl marries the fellow whose ancestors did the rising for him. This is what occurs in the first act. It is repeated in the second act, a generation later, and again in the third, two generations further on. All three acts are laid in one scene, and one virtually duplicates the action of the other.

The author's sole claim to originality seems to rest on his daring the conventions if not defying them. One of the good old rules of construction is that the dear audience must not be deceived—any element of secrecy must be at once communicated to the people in front for fear they might become bewildered. But some of the new photoplay authors are defying this time-honored convention by holding the solution of a problem to the end, as in the printed detective story, and, as far as I am able to judge, the audience seems more absorbed than when they are given a subtitle enlightenment of all that is mysterious in the presentation.

A little shock or pleasant surprise would form a palatable dressing to some raw photodramatic salad we are getting. Part of the strong interest I personally feel in any kind of a story lies in curiosity as to how it is going to end. I prefer to be uncertain about whether they are going to marry or not rather than know in advance what is going to happen. A capable author who dares use his own judgment in such matters asserts his own individuality, one of the first essentials of original composition, but he may find all his bright efforts vain ones if his scenario falls into the hands of an "Old-Showman" director.

To the charm of originality is attached the charm of variety. No two playwrights are of exactly the same temperament, and no two can be expected to think exactly alike. I would not have them do so. I would have each do as O. Henry advised young authors—"Write the kind of a story you would personally enjoy"—produce his images as he sees them, give his impressions of life as he perceives them, set forth his characters as he knows them. When a man can draw from an unfailing font of imagination, imagination creative or reconstructive, he had better do that even if he has to shelve the conventions. His own thoughts are the natural source of everything that is really original in what he produces.

Should a photodramatist master the technics? Most certainly, on the general principle that a man studies medicine to avoid taking any. He knows what not to do. Absorb information from every possible source, for knowledge is almost the only thing a man gains in process of giving it away, and mental work of almost every kind calls for generous and ungrudging pains. Producers are not yet able to dispassionately weigh the relative value of original and hack work, but what is new and fresh and vigorous will win out in the end.

No original playwright need cudgel his brains for a theme if he keeps his eyes open to what is going on in the animate world about him, things innumerable of universal interest afford him opportunity if he has the wit to perceive them. The question is not what someone else has done thoroughly in times gone by, but what is worth doing now.

HECTOR DION GOES TO BIOGRAPH.

Mr. Hector Dion, the well-known and handsome young leading man, formerly of the Reliance and Vitagraph companies, has joined the Biograph acting company and will work under the direction of Mr. Tony O'Sullivan. Mr. Dion was the first man with whom Florence Turner played leads.

Advertising and Criticising

By W. Stephen Bush

FOR the benefit of numerous readers and advertisers The Moving Picture World desires to make it as plain as English words can wield the matter that the buying of advertising space in small or large quantities confers no right to praise and commendation, or indeed to any notice at all in the editorial or critical columns of the paper. While this is true of all and any products offered in the advertising portion of The Moving Picture World, it is especially true in regard to films. The judgment of The Moving Picture World is not for sale. Films will be reviewed purely on their merits. If producers of films are under the impression that liberal use of the advertising columns will in any way influence the criticisms of this paper, they are harboring a misconception, which we have always done our best to discourage. The Moving Picture World owes whatever usefulness and prestige it may possess to the confidence of the exhibitor in the integrity of its motives and the soundness of its judgments. Following the policy of its late founder, we will always want to build up rather than tear down, but as we strive to lift the picture up we cannot sit by idly and see it dragged down.

We refer in particular to a large and recent influx of foreign "features" and to some domestic film abortions dealing with crime and gunplays, with prison horrors and life in the underworld. The makers of these films call them "features." If there is any thing to distinguish these productions from others it is only their bad preeminence. They are lurid and sensational in the worst sense of the word and, as a rule, they are plainly and frankly immoral. They appeal directly to the ignorant, the morbid and the depraved. They are a stench in the nostrils of the audiences in the ordinary American motion picture theater. Multiple reel features are now on the flood tide of popularity. Hoping to be carried along by the current, the makers of these offensive features imagine they can create a fictitious value for their products by heavy advertising. On the strength of such advertising they expect and almost demand extended and complimentary reviews of their productions. We wish to serve notice on this type of producers that their expectations and demands will be ignored. Nor will they be able through liberal advertising to secure immunity from hostile criticism, whenever their releases demand hostile criticism for the good of the industry at large. A producer of films who must make his money at the expense of the good name and fame of the motion picture is the most dangerous enemy. Against him and all his works we will not hesitate to turn the destructive edge of the critical pen.

Too much filming of the underworld and the portrayal of crime just for the sake of a thrill or a sensation have been two great reproaches on the industry in the past. The Moving Picture World has done its share toward the wiping out of these reproaches, and it proposes to keep a ceaseless vigil at its post of duty.

We wish to make it clear that we are not prejudiced against foreign features as such. On the contrary, this paper has been the first to recognize and proclaim the superior merits of such features as "Dante's Inferno," "Homer's Odyssey," "The Crusaders, or Jerusalem Delivered," "The Miracle" and other great classic, historic allegorical and spectacular productions. One cannot, however, look through the columns of the moving picture journals of Europe without a fear lest many of the "sensational features," now exploited there to the disgust of the friends of the motion picture, will find their way here. The advance guard seems to have reached here. It will be our unpleasant duty to refuse them the hospitality of these shores. In England, where the public are not used to pictorial presentations of crime and cinematographic delineation of sex problems, a note of alarm has been sounded by our esteemed contemporary, The Bioscope. In England these objectionable features are called "exclusives," and speaking of their bad influence the British paper says:

"We think that some of the widely advertised 'exclusives' hide under their claim of sensationalism something infinitely more degrading. . . . In what lies their attraction? Is it in the stirring story, the sensational deeds, the strong plot or the wonderful photography? All these are quite legitimate attractions, and have no lowering influence; with them we have no quarrel. But it is the blatant innuendoes, and often the nauseous episodes, which are crowded into a few exclusives that create evil..... Let us make an end of these films, which are degrading to both exhibitor and audience."

We recognize in a few of these objectionable features much technical skill, good acting, splendid photography and the brains of able directors. We regret sincerely that so much cleverness and industry are wasted. Open and flagrant indecency, however, vitiates even the most artistic pictures. The methods of European censorship, however rigorous they may be in shutting out films which seem to belittle "duly constituted authority," are notoriously lax in matters of morality. Almost anything will pass muster. The resulting licentiousness in film productions has raised storms of protest even in Continental Europe, and the public, whose morality is underestimated by the police, will have no more of these offensive "features." It is a great mistake to try and market them here. What is too raw for Continental Europe will not get past an American Board of Censorship.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The International Kinematograph Exhibition and Conference, which is to take place in the Olympia, London, from March 22nd to March 29th, 1913, promises to be an event of great importance. Many men eminent in the world of education, science, travel, etc., are giving valuable help and advice to the undertaking. Many names famous in the contemporary history of England appear in the list of vice-presidents. Besides a General Advisory Committee the following committees have been named: Committee on Engineering, on Theaters, on Finance, on Literary Matters, on Films, on Accessories, on Conduct and Legislation. The Educational Section has for its first vice-president the Bishop of Birmingham. Other sections are: the Emigration Section, the Travel Section, the Religious Section, the Social and Industrial Welfare Sections, the Army and Navy Section, the Scientific Section. The general objects of the exhibition are: (1) To arouse public interest and enthusiasm in the Kinematograph; (2) To enlarge the educational and scientific branches of the industry; (3) To keep up, and raise where necessary, the tone of films shown in theaters; (4) To show what the Kinematograph can do to assist education, missionary enterprise, emigration, enlistment, travel and social welfare.

"Cine-Journal," the well-known French moving picture paper, raises its voice in protest against the proposition of the Parisian municipal authorities of taxing the posters and the electric signs of every moving picture theater in the city by the Seine. It appears that the city budget shows a deficiency of 11 million francs and that the electric theaters are to be laid under contribution to help in reducing the eleven millions.

The First Moving Picture Library

By W. Stephen Bush

A RECORD of achievement is always entitled to respect. We have been theorizing about the "educational picture" right up to the sky and clear into the stellar system; I need make no apology now for offering a page or two of concrete and palpable facts, especially when these facts have been knocking at the editorial door for quite a while. Progress and usefulness are unfailing passwords into the columns of The Moving Picture World.

The budget of facts is supplied by Mrs. Ruth G. Dolese, who has just celebrated the first anniversary of her work as the directress of the first distinctly educational "film depot." Her office is at No. 200 Fifth Avenue, on the floor of the General Film Company, but it is a case of the "acorn in the flowerpot" and in a few weeks at the most the educational exchange will have new and much larger quarters.

To appreciate the work of this educational exchange and of Mrs. Dolese it must be made plain at the outset that no favors were shown to either the branch or its directress by the General Film Company. She has to pay for every inch of film she wants to rent. It is gratifying to say right here that from a financial standpoint the work of the first moving picture library has been a most pronounced success. I am glad to add that Mrs. Dolese does not regard the financial success as the real touchstone or as the full scope of her great undertaking. To be sure, she is immensely pleased that the department has stood so practical a test, but she looks far beyond mere financial gains. The most valuable mission this department has fulfilled in the one brief year of its existence has been its propaganda among the best classes of our country. It has proven to the satisfaction of the skeptics that the motion picture has wonderful uses as an educator. It has disarmed criticism and conquered prejudice in many influential quarters, where before the coming of this Moving Picture Library the moving picture was held in small esteem.

When Mrs. Dolese started to devote herself to the task of bringing the school and the picture into closer relationship, the materials in hand were fragmentary. Educational releases were put on the market in a more or less haphazard fashion, no manufacturer followed any definite system, and there seemed no possible way to count upon a certain educational program. The first step then of the librarian must have been the collation and arrangement of whatever educational reels there were on hand. To this work Mrs. Dolese addressed herself with all the patience and knowledge demanded by the occasion. How much she has been able to accomplish is best told in her own words:

"Our moving picture library," said Mrs. Dolese, "has now a thousand volumes, as you will see by the new catalogue that I have just received from the hands of the printer. Our cinematographic library covers all the subjects found in the ordinary collection of books which we call a library. For the use in the schools I have with the reels now on hand prepared three cinematographic courses—history, geography and reading. I have divided my course in history into forty weeks. The pictures I have selected run with the standard text books now in use in the schools, and for every one of the forty periods into which I have divided the subject there is a choice of two, three and four reels. I cover practically the same ground as the schools. Geography I have divided into physical and historical geography, and here again my pictures are in harmony with the best text books. I think, however, that the best developed of my courses is my 'Progressive Road to Reading by Motion Pictures.' Here my materials are most complete. I can start the child at the kindergarten standard, delighting him with the toys and simple plays of the kindergarten, and then lead him to myths and fairy tales, and finally go as far as any reader now in use can go into the highest branches of literature. I call this correlating work, the school and the book and the teacher helping each other.

"There is so much to say on the importance of the educational library that I scarcely know how to cover it all. I do a great deal of work among foreign societies. The leaders of these societies realize how necessary it is for foreigners to become useful citizens. There is no better way of imbuing them with a love for the country of their adoption than showing them the history of it. At present my work is restricted to a certain territory, though in some cases where I received requests from universities pictures have gone from this office to Texas, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Wisconsin and Louisiana.

"In regard to the introduction of the motion picture in the schools of New York, the great trouble is with the legal requirements regarding the size of booths. The Fire Commissioner of New York City, following the words of the law, insists on a six by eight by seven booth. Such a booth is impracticable for the average school. We had a bill in the last legislature allowing a smaller booth for schools, but through an unfortunate misunderstanding, the bill did not go beyond the Assembly. We expect to get the needed legislation this coming winter without fail. There are at least fifty schools ready now to take in moving picture machines at a minute's notice if we can get the law to allow a smaller type of machine. The money to pay for the cinematographic outfit, including films, will not come through any appropriation either by the city or the State of New York. The Western States are far more progressive in this respect than New York. Texas and Wisconsin will in all probability make appropriations for installing moving picture machines and creating a system of cinematographic education. Here in New York the money must come from the parents of the pupils. The Board of Education permits exhibitions of motion pictures in schools, for which a small admission fee is charged. Out of the receipts of these entertainments the parents of the pupils defray the expenses of introducing the motion picture into the public schools. Public School No. 5 in Brooklyn has bought a booth, which runs on wheels, and the pupils of that school will start a series of motion picture exhibitions on November 24th.

"I receive frequent calls for films from conventions. Last summer I supplied the convention which met in Washington and considered various problems in hygiene. I expect to go to Baltimore in a day or two to attend the Prison Congress. Mrs. Booth is very much interested in my work, and we give motion picture exhibitions regularly in a number of reformatory institutions. The Educational Alliance of this city is making liberal use of my film library. A young lady connected with this work selected a good, pleasing program, the educational relieved by a little harmless comedy, and her success was striking. The first night her exhibition was attended by 150, the second by 200 and on the third night her audience numbered 500. One of the fine things in connection with mental training by films is the fact that we can put the child of six and the man of sixty in the same class. I find the demand for educational films decidedly on the increase. A year ago the so-called educational film was generally about five hundred feet in length and often travelled in unsuitable company on one and the same reel. To-day the thousand feet educational picture is the rule rather than the exception. Manufacturers and the General Film Company have a justly high opinion of this work, and give me a ready audience for any suggestions that I think it proper to make. I look for an increase in industrial pictures and pictures showing the work of the Federal Government in many of its branches. The Selig Company, I believe, has permission to show the work of conservation, as now carried on under the direction of the Government. Urban, Pathe, Cines, Edison are faithful contributors to our educational library, and the recent picture of Essanay, "Cutting California Redwoods," is a splendid example of the new educational features. I must say that everywhere I have met with a spirit of genuine helpfulness, and I am under obligations to many managers of exchanges throughout the country for their courteous cooperation in many things.

"Of course, the ideal condition of cinematographic teaching will only come with a perfect and well-regulated system, which gives us a cinematographic course for every subject and which will provide for every variety of instruction, from elementary to the highest and which will specialize every important branch of human knowledge. The day for the attainment of this ideal condition is not far off. I look for the grand and complete cinematographic syllabus of human education and knowledge within the not distant future. When the day is ripe we will have the money and the men."

I asked Mrs. Dolese how in her opinion the work of her moving picture library affected the exhibitor. She was quick to answer:

"What relations," she said, "I have had with exhibitors have been most pleasant, and I hope mutually profitable. I get many requests for good educational pictures from exhibitors, and the records of the office show that these requests are on the increase. I believe exhibitors realize, too, that my work benefits them in a general way by arousing interest in motion pictures. I think this department unlocks many doors for the exhibitors and makes converts to the 'habit.' Thousands probably are now regular patrons of electric theaters who learned of the picture through this department. I know that in Denver free educational pictures, shown during last summer, increased the general attendance at moving picture theaters by ten per cent."

There is not a friend of the motion picture anywhere in the world who does not wish to see the work of this educational branch progress in quality and expand in usefulness. No part of the industry is more important. It will pay every exhibitor to get a copy of Mrs. Dolese's new catalogue; it is useful in the compilation of special programs, and its very existence is an answer to every argument of the enemies of the motion picture.

PRACTICAL VALUE OF THE MOVING PICTURE TO THE CHURCH'S SOCIAL LIFE.

The old question of the "Young People in the Church," and the older question of "Amusements" has been treated to argument and analysis so thoroughly, that the whole subject is more than familiar to every church worker and institutional manager everywhere.

The revival of the subject for the purpose of asking, "If the moving pictures may become of any practical value in the social work of religious bodies?" is timely and exceedingly easy to answer. In the first place the acknowledged "universal versatility" of the cinematograph has already proved its adaptability to social-religious requirements; in the second place, the fact that use has already been made in many places, in different parts of the country, of suitably applied cinematography, and with marked success; a complete answer is given to the question, besides placing satisfactory results beyond doubt. For a time at least some little difficulties will arise, because of the somewhat heavy expenditure, made necessary in purchasing the apparatus and supplies; as also there may be a little trouble in procuring proper and trained workers to take the place of operators and business managers. These "difficulties and troubles" are, however, easily surmounted; a score of manufacturers, agents and bureaus are ready at hand with all the required advice and information, and, if need be, there is no branch of useful moving picture work but the various branches of the wide advisory field of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is ready to cooperate. The required cost and ability is as common among the people of religious bodies and communities as elsewhere, for "when occasion requires men are ready" and any work that can be done anywhere else, can as easily be done by churches and Sunday schools. They are certainly not lacking in either ambition or ability.

That the moving picture can fill the entire field of religious social life cannot be contemplated; it is only a new and valuable auxiliary, introducing many new and beneficial features and possibilities, besides helping to drive out much that was uninteresting, unentertaining, unencouraging. Young people must be attracted, interested, and held; the holding of the young people is the hardest problem; as an aid in this respect, the moving picture will certainly fill a large place, probably larger than anything else at present known in social work, in that it leads upward to a higher and better standard.

The last, yet not least, but perhaps the largest factor of the moving picture, is its attractive powers. The world to-day knows no more attractive instrument than the cinematograph; every day millions of young people are irresistibly drawn by its subtle powers; social religious life cannot find a better helper; without it little progress has hitherto been made. An opportunity is now offered to prove what can be done with it. There is no doubt that the inherent qualities of the moving picture will prove as ready, as valuable, and as successful in social religious work as it has wherever it has been tried.

FURTHER COMMENTS FROM OUR READERS ON THE CIGARETTE COUPON SCHEME.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., November 4, 1912.

Editor MOVING PICTURE WORLD,
P. O. Box 226, Madison Square,
New York City.

DEAR SIR:—You may have seen the enclosed circular, issued to moving picture theater owners by the American Tobacco Company, which I received through the mail. Although I no longer own a theater, I am sure I would not offer parents such an opportunity to fight photoplay houses in general

Very truly yours,
FRANK H. MADISON,

ROCHESTER, N. Y., November 9, 1912.

New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—I note with pleasure the stand you have made regarding the cigarette coupon scheme of the American Tobacco Company.

Sincerely,
M. C. BARNARD.

786 COURTLANDT AVE., NEW YORK CITY, Nov. 8, 1912.

Editor MOVING PICTURE WORLD,
New York City.

DEAR SIR:—I deem it proper to protest against the redemption of tobacco coupons in moving picture houses, as planned by the American Tobacco Company. A step in that direction would only tend to lower the standard of the motion picture house, in the eyes of the eyes of the public.

This coupon scheme, if successful, will surely be productive of much evil. All managers and owners of theaters should cooperate in denouncing that plan. Respectfully yours,

M. I. LITTAUER,
Manager Time Theater.

"At Napoleon's Command" (Cines)

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

GEORGE KLEINE will release, on December 2, a two-reel feature subject by Cines, entitled "At Napoleon's Command." After seeing these films run off, twice in succession, I am impressed that exhibitors have in store for their patrons a strong attraction that will bear liberal advertising in advance, with no fear of a "come-back" from the disgruntled.

The story revealed by these films, while laid amid thrilling and spectacular incidents in the career of the great Napoleon, centers chief interest on the lives of two brilliant officers of his army and of a woman who was beloved by each in turn; one of them gaining her affections, but forgetting her in his pursuit of glory, the other just as brave and just as successful while cherishing her as his sweetheart and in his constancy as a devoted husband.

The situations call for several realistic battle scenes, requiring the massing and action of large bodies of soldiers and the resulting carnage from shot, shell and bayonet. The Cines people have met the conditions well, as the closing scene in Napoleon's greatest effort especially shows, the ground being strewn with the dead and dying, the latter expending their expiring strength to raise themselves and cheer their "Little Corporal" as he rides over the victorious field with his staff.

Scenes from Cines Subject, "At Napoleon's Command."

The scene in the palace of Fontainbleau, where the emperor receives his leading officers and their wives, is brilliant in its array of costumes and uniforms, and courtly in its assemblage of fair women and brave men. In this finely staged scene, Napoleon, as the dominating figure, is presented to us faithfully, in mannerisms, gait and poise, by the actor to whom the role has been assigned. One would like, perhaps, to see him pinch the ears of some of his favorites, as was his wont, in addition to the other peculiarities of manner that characterized him.

There is another strong scene in which Napoleon's striking peculiarities of manner are well brought out—the scene at headquarters, when he is in consultation with his marshals, just before the great battle opens. Note the rapidity of thought that guides him to his conclusions, as he examines the charts of the battlefield and confers with his officers. That pinch of snuff, so nervously administered in the midst of profound mental concentration, may wing his marvelous powers of calculation to certain victory. His remarkable dominance as a leader of men is forcefully shown in that other scene, where he prevents a duel between two of his marshals. By imperious intervention, gesture and manner he reminds them that he is the best judge of their honor, and has the right to command them, if necessary, to die for him and their country.

With such a subject, and such treatment as has been given it by the Cines producer and his company, good photography and technique are imperative. It is with a feeling of pleasure that both are pronounced excellent.

Briefly told, the story is as follows: Lieutenant Vidar, a brave and dashing young officer, bids good-bye to his fiancee, Juliette. He is off to the front, where Napoleon's legions are marshaled against the whole of Europe. Two years pass and the girl hears nothing of her lover. In destitution she calls at the nearest camp, where the French soldiers are stationed, and meets Sargeant Andre. She is furnished with food, and, as she eats, the Sergeant looks on her pityingly and admiringly. The next day he calls at her home and declares his love. She tells him of her false lover, without revealing his name, but Andre entreats her to forget the past and marry him. She consents to become his wife as soon as martial duties permit him to come and claim her, and he places her in his mother's care until that time arrives.

Four years later Sergeant Andre has risen to the rank of marshal and Juliette is his wife. At a great reception, given by Napoleon at Fontainbleau, Marshal Andre introduces his wife to a brother marshal, who has also risen from the ranks. In great agitation she recognizes in the famous marshal her recreant lover, and is carried from the room in a swoon. Her husband is ignorant of the cause of her collapse and invites Marshal Vidar to his home on the morrow. When this news is imparted to Juliette, she opposes the invitation so seriously that Andre immediately suspects Marshal Vidar to be the false lover, who had deserted and forgotten her. On demanding the truth from his wife, she acknowledges that his suspicions are correct. Marshal Andre at once starts out in search of Marshal Vidar. Meeting him he insults him and a duel is arranged.

These events happened on the eve of a great battle, when France needed all her soldiers to confront her enemies. The Secretary of State chances to hear of the contemplated duel and informs the Emperor, who, in a fine rage, stops the duel and orders the principals to join their commands.

In the carnage of the following day, Marshals Andre and Vidar receive mortal wounds and become reconciled in the presence of Juliette, who forgives her false lover as he breathes his last.

NOTED ACTORS AT ESSANAY STUDIO.

Among the many visitors to the Essanay Chicago studio during the past week were Raymond Hitchcock and Flora Zabelle, who are just completing a splendid run in "The Red Widow," at Cohan's Grand Opera House, and Herbert Corthell, the rotund and jovial comedian in "The Girl at the Gate," now running at the LaSalle Theater. These well known players spent an entire afternoon viewing the many marvels in the big plant, and were highly enthusiastic over the many systems by which the film is taken, developed and produced on the screen. Essanay's wonderful overhead lighting system, the only one of it's kind in the country that employs the use of movable trams carrying the lightbanks from one end of the studio floor to the other, was another source of amazement for the players. Mr. Hitchcock, Miss Zabelle and Mr. Corthell also were enabled to work for a few moments in a comedy production that was being made, and Miss Zabelle expressed herself as being perfectly delighted at the thought of seeing herself on the screen. The players were also posed before the camera and some fifty feet of film was run off depicting them laughing and enjoying the lark. This film has been developed and is now in their possession as a memento of the occasion.

Two Strong "Kay Bee" Subjects

"His Sense of Duty" and "Blood Will Tell."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a steady improvement visible in the Kay-Bee product such as affords any honest critic pleasure to remark. One great trouble about the average photo-play involving military operations is that it has no perspective, giving a clear concept of the massed action, and another is that painful lack of proportion which either belittles the story involved or makes the conflict between large forces seem sickeningly trivial.

Splendid pictural effect is achieved in the far-reaching views of battle shown in recent Kay-Bees. The hills, the valleys, the gorges, are spread out before the eye that we may witness the remote manoeuvres as well as all that is passing in the foreground, anticipate the inevitable clash before it is on, and better understand the situation because the whole breadth of it and depth of it are unfolded to the minds of the spectators.

Scenes from the Kay-Bee Feature, "Blood Will Tell."

Thousand-foot reels fatally curtailed time for working out many a fine theme and quite as many that need only that amount in their exposition are being stretched to a point that only strains or breaks interest for the sake of calling them "Feature Plays." Rapidity of movement and consistency of development in "His Sense of Duty" and "Blood Will Tell" cause the action to be carried in strong continuity to the general termination.

"His Sense of Duty" opens with rapid preparation for a line of action that does not immediately take place, in a manner well-calculated to arouse curiosity while giving an excuse for the military operations that follow. A scout and a friendly Indian moving with caution in a zone of danger discover from a hilltop the tragic scene of a small body of settlers making their last stand against an overwhelming body of redskins. The whites are exterminated, and nothing remains of those who set out to cast their fortunes in the Far West but their mutilated dead bodies and burning wagons.

In contrast with their tragedy is exhibited the gay life of a nearby military post. There is a dance on, shown in a picturesque deep interior, and an intrigue between the Colonel's young wife and one of the officers. This main plot of the story is well interwoven into the general design through the exploits of a private soldier. The private is on guard at the house while festivities are in progress, he is a prime favorite with the Colonel's little daughter, and he takes upon himself the dangerous mission of guarding the honor of his commander. When the latter is called away by the scout and friendly Indian who have witnessed the massacre of settlers, and the villainous officer is put in charge of the post, the private dares to intrude upon a clandestine meeting between the guilty couple.

Rank is forgotten in the clash that follows—it is that of man to man—and the private lays the destroyer of family happiness out stiff. He then surrenders to arrest and the second in command is carried to the hospital in a precarious condition. The selfsacrifice involved is a rash though manly one—the hostile Indians have risen in greater extent than was at first supposed. They have not only held the troopers sent to punish them, but they are drawing near the depleted post in strategic movement.

The Colonel's little daughter wanders from the line of defense during the excitement and is captured by redskins. The imprisoned private breaks from restraint and goes forth alone to recover the little one. There is some wonderful falling of horses and men in the battle pictures, the animals being thrown by their skilled riders, but these feats are all belittled by the daring act of the private in jumping upon the horse which carries the Colonel's little girl and her captor. The soldier kills him and carries her off before the eyes of the fighting tribe, though wounded by their fire.

The Indians hoped to escape punishment while they held the little hostage; now they scatter, and a period of tranquillity follows. The private is court-martialed for his attack on the officer left in command of the post, his sense of duty preventing him from compromising the Colonel's wife, though the Colonel himself is bitterest in denunciation of such a breach of discipline. A nne situation is set up when the wife enters upon a struggle between her nobler and her baser instincts, one worthy of the highest quality of play, and the result is a yielding to her better nature with an artistic conclusion.

The Rebellion from a Southern View Point.

"Blood Will Tell" is a story of the Rebellion from a Southern point of view. An old father of splendid military spirit wishes to enlist among the earliest of those going to the front, but is compelled to bide his time. His only son exhibits fear from the outset and cowardice in deserting his post. His fear is that of a boy, that of inexperience, his soul is stricken by the terrors of war. The old father disowns him and succeeds in entering the ranks as a private, a grim warrior of the type that would rather fight than eat.

The boy has scarcely returned to the supposed security of his home when it is invaded by officers of the Northern army, and he is forced to hide in the garret. He now undergoes a spiritual regeneration—the fighting blood that is in him begins to tell—and he becomes the most dangerous kind of an enemy from the same ignorance of danger that made him a coward. He attempts what a seasoned veteran would hesitate to undertake.

He creeps out on the roof, descends suddenly upon the sentry, overcomes that guard, ably helped by the house servant, assumes the Federal uniform and holds up the group of Union officers until he gets possession of their plans. With these tucked in his breast he rides away to redeem his past conduct. Through battle scenes that are tremendously effective, the boy rides in safety until he reaches the Confederate pickets. One of these is his ferocious old father. The old man calls upon the officer in Union garb to halt, then fires and brings his son down in one of those daring falls so often achieved in these Kay-Bee photodramas.

The boy goes down to death at his father's hand while saving the day and the family honor at one time, a pathetic solution deepened by the last scenes between his white-haired father and mother. This play does not pass capital sentence upon anything that is wrong in the conduct of the young recruit; it simply strikes deeper into human character by its logical and consistent end. Both plays deserve praise.

"The Stolen Symphony" (Lubin).

THIS very dramatic Lubin picture is to be released November 25, which is a month earlier than originally intended. The change in date is made so that it will reach England and other foreign countries for a Christmas offering. It is probably Mr. McCloskey's best story and doubtless will make an impression. Helen Landis by the death of her father is left penniless and has to seek employment and take humble lodging. She rents a room in a rooming-house and is located next door to a young composer, Paul Romig, who is hard at work on a symphony composition, which he feels will be a masterpiece. As the work progresses Helen becomes enthralled with the music and is often heard to hum the beautiful bars. One day Paul and Helen meet at the front door, which the composer assists the young lady to open. Later they meet on the street and Helen permits Paul to accompany her to the park. The symphony is discussed and an acquaintance is commenced, which gradually becomes an attachment.

One day Helen receives a letter from a well-to-do aunt, who has just returned from Europe. It is an invitation for her to come to New York and make her home with her relatives. The arrangement is too good to be refused and though she feels a little regret at leaving her neighbor, Helen packs up and goes to the new home. The symphony is completed and one day Paul, passing the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, reads a sign "Jaretsky, World's Greatest Pianist, Concert Every Afternoon." An idea strikes him he will try and induce Jaretsky to play his music. He forthwith waylays the great pianist at the stage door and though not cordially received pushes the script into Jaretsky's hand as he is getting into his auto. A few days later the city is wild over a new American symphony rendered by the great pianist, who claims it as his own composition. Romig again presents himself at the stage door, but Jaretsky ignores him and has him arrested as being a madman. Paul is taken to the insane asylum and held in close confinement. The newspapers tell the story of Jaretsky's masterpiece and how a madman had claimed to be the composer.

In New York, Helen and her aunt receive an invitation to join a party of friends at a concert. The great Jaretsky will play his wonderful symphony. The invitation is accepted and Helen hears the familiar composition which had enthralled her. She gets her aunt to engage the pianist for a private recital at the house, she then communicates with the directors of the asylum and explaining the situation demands that they shall permit Paul to be present under guard. The function is duly arranged and Jaretsky executes the masterpiece. When he has finished he is confronted by Paul and Helen. The pianist is unnerved and falls on his face in a faint. The story is made public and in a few days Paul receives a letter from the Metropolitan Opera Company, enclosing a check for $10,000 advance royalty for the greatest American symphony ever composed. He hands the letter to Helen, he wants something more, she offers both of her hands.

THE GREATEST VINEYARD FIGURES IN PICTURES.

The largest vineyard in the world located at Guasti, Cal., and covering 4,000 acres of bearing vines, has been made the background of an interesting picture by the Selig Company. Much of the process of growing and crushing grapes into wine is shown in the various scenes of the picture.

"Hazel Kirke"

The Majestic Company Revives an Old Favorite.

HARDLY would it be safe to promise success to every picture revival of old-time favorite plays. Many have been accorded a very warm welcome; some have failed as screen attractions. The art of the picture's maker has had much to do with it; but most of all the human quality of the story has told.

"Hazel Kirke," by that somewhat eccentric man and true genius, Steele Mackaye, is a pleasingly sympathetic story with a wholesome, human situation, developed with brilliance. It was first produced in 1880, opening on February 4th, at the Madison Square Garden Theater, and enjoyed a phenomenal run for those days of 486 consecutive performances. The original cast included many of the bright stars of that date. Both the Whiffins were in it, with Eben Plympton, C. W. Couldock and Mrs. Cecil Reich.

The story, laid on the border between Scotland and England, depends for its significance on the peculiar Scotch marriage law and turns on the question as to whether the Boar's Head Inn, where the marriage took place, is really in Scotland, or south of the line. It is, we find, truly in Scotland, and the ceremony valid. Hazel Kirke, pretty daughter of an old Scotch miller, is betrothed to 'Squire Rodney, an elderly man of means, who has financially aided her father. Before the marriage, a young English nobleman, Lord Travers, while hunting near the mill, falls and breaks his arm. The miller hears his cry for aid and carries him home where he meets Hazel and falls deeply in love with her. Hazel does not know his social station, but 'Squire Rodney, who has recognized Lord Travers, sees that she has returned his affection. The 'Squire writes to Lady Travers, the youth's mother, who has decided on another match for him, and soon the miller receives a letter from her, asking him to send the young man away. This serves to precipitate the love affair, for the old man, thinking that Hazel has acted dishonorably, disowns her and orders her from the house. Travers takes her to the Boar's Head Inn and there, with many witnesses, goes through the declaration of marriage which, in Scotland, makes her his legal wife.

Travers and Hazel are living happily in each other's company; but Lady Travers, who is very sick, has not been told. A report is started that the Boar's Head is in England. 'Squire Rodney hears of it and takes the whole story to Lady Travers. By this time, young Travers has also been told. He goes to the village to investigate and Lady Travers, in his absence, tells Hazel in such a way that the girl thinks Travers has deceived her. She flings away her jewels and runs out. But the old miller, who has heard the story in all its gossip flavor, won't receive her. He has gone blind and doesn't know that she is kneeling in front of him listening to what he is saying of her. She hurries away and jumps into the mill pond, but is rescued. Lord Travers now produces evidence that proves the marriage legal and nothing is wanting of the usual happy ending.

The picture has been fortunate in its producer, Oscar H. Apfel. In the necessary abridgment, he has chosen very wisely. We see all the essentials of the story clearly pictured and the narrative runs smoothly and very naturally and what is just as important, the players he has chosen for the parts fill them ideally. Mabel Trunnelle plays Hazel; Herbert Prior, Lord Travers; E. P. Sullivan, the old miller; Paul Scarden, the 'Squire; Virginia Westbrook, the miller's maid; Isabel O'Madigan, Lady Travers; Harry Frazer, Pittacus Green (a comedy part, the friend of Travers); with Margaret Grey, Doc Ranson, Robert Tansey and Ethelyn Herman in the supporting parts. Many as Mr. Apfel's laurels are, he has added to them by this fine two-reel picture, which is released on November 17th, this month.

MR. ALLAN DWAN.

The Western producer of the American Film Mfg. Company is possibly the youngest man in this branch of the business. He celebrates his natal day on April 3d of each year and claims never to have missed one since 1885. Much has been said by critics and the public at large about the remarkable histrionic abilities of the "Flying A" Western Stock Company, under his direction, and the majority of his productions have met with very favorable comment.

Mr. Dwan hails from Toronto, Ontario. He is a graduate of Notre Dame University and bears the degree of electrical engineer. His first experience in moving picture work was secured in scenario divisions and after mature experience in this branch was given a trial at the production work. His success in this line is a matter of record and requires no further elucidation. For some time he has been writing his own scenarios and much credit is due him for his masterful efforts in this direction. The future plans of this promising career bid fair to eclipse his past successes by a large margin.

THE MIRACLE.

Mr. A. Danziger, of the New York Film Company, 12 Union Square, who owns the American rights of The Miracle, as filmed by the Continental Kunstfilm Gesellschaft, of Berlin, reports that all the paper for this attraction is now ready. It consists of pictorial one, three, five and eight sheets and four and twelve-page booklets. The paper looks very attractive and does full justice to the spectacular character of The Miracle. Several more states have been sold. Mr. Danziger expects to give a public performance with music and prologue in the city of New York within the next few days. The Miracle will also be exhibited in the early part of next month in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn, and later in the month in Albaugh's Opera House in Baltimore.

Aubrey Kennedy, the Universal manager on the Coast, in a report to the home office, announces that the weather out his way has been the hottest of the entire season—the thermometer ranging between 85 and 95 degrees. In spite of this handicap, however, the western forces sent on their usual sixteen thousand feet of negative weekly.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

ON TO BOSTON.

THERE will be some doings at Boston on November 18th and 19th. Exhibitors throughout New England have been notified that a convention will be held at Commercial Hall, 694 Washington Avenue on November 19th. President M. A. Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will be present to assist in perfecting an organization. After the meeting a dinner is to be served and a general good time enjoyed.

The New England territory is about the only important section of the country that has not yet been thoroughly organized and affiliated with the National League. During the past year there has been strong sentiment running through that section in favor of organization. Efforts have been made in various states of the New England group to accomplish something along this line, but up to the present time nothing of a definite nature has been done. All of this however, tends to prove that the exhibitors of the New England states are ready for organization and have only been waiting for the right man to appear to show them the way. The success achieved by President Neff in rounding up the exhibitors in other states proves that he is the man and his appearance in Boston on November 19th will be the signal for any grand rally. While Mr. Neff will reach Boston on the 18th for a preliminary conference with the leading exhibitors of that city, the convention will not occur until 2 o'clock of Tuesday the 19th. Exhibitors throughout the New England states are urged to attend this meeting. Nothing is quite so important right now as organization.

CLEVELAND LEAGUE DINNER.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors League has recently opened new quarters at 711 Columbia Building, Cleveland, Ohio. To celebrate the event they gave a big dinner in a banquet hall of the Elk's Club of that city on October 30th. There was a splendid programe of entertainment accompanying the festivities. Music was furnished by the National Theatre orchestra and the entertainers came from the National Vaudeville Agency of Cleveland. At the conclusion of the banquet, President Morris, as toastmaster, introduced a number of speakers who commended the work of the moving picture men. A general good time is reported.

OTHER CONVENTIONS.

Other important conventions scheduled are the Iowa exhibitors state convention at Des Moines on December 3 and 4th. Nebraska exhibitors at Omaha on December 5th and 6th. West Virginia exhibitors at Huntington on December 17th and 18th.

The Nebraska meeting will be for organization purposes as up to the present writing there is no branch of the National League in that state. Every effort is being made by the leading exhibitors of the state to get out a big meeting. It is the intention of President Neff to attend this gathering.

PRESIDENT NEFF TO VISIT NEW YORK TOWNS.

Arrangements have been made by President S. H. Trigger of the New York State Exhibitors League to make a tour of the several important cities of the state accompanied by Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the National League. The first stop will be at Albany on Sunday, November 17th at which place a meeting of the exhibitors of Albany and vicinity will be held at the Clinton Square theatre at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon. From this point Mr. Neff and Mr. Trigger will attend the convention at Boston, after which they will return and visit Utica, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo. Dates will be announced direct to the exhibitors in those cities.

CLEVELAND LOCAL ENDORSES THE WORLD.

The Cleveland Local of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Leogue has gone on record of emphatically endorsing the position of the Moving Picture World regarding the American Tobacco Company's cigarette coupon proposition. Members of the Cleveland local without exception have deemed the scheme as extremely hurtful to the business.

MANDLEBAUM SELLS THEATERS.

E. Mandlebaum, president of the Atlas Amusement Company has sold his interest in that concern to A. Newman and A. L. Friedman, treasurer and secretary, respectively, of the company. The Atlas Company operates the Knickerbocker and the Lakewood theaters. Mr. Mandlebaum will devote his entire time to the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company and the Feature and Educational Film Company.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

"If the American flag does not call attention to the United States abroad, the American film is doing much to remind foreign peoples of us.

"Fifteen thousand miles of motion-picture films were exported from the United States in the last fiscal year, against only 3,000 miles imported. The exact length of the motion-picture films exported in the year ending June 30, 1912, according to the division of statistics, was 80,035,302 feet, valued at $6,815,060.

"Fifteen thousand miles of films thus display the United States in distant parts of the world. They penetrate where the mast-headed flag cannot go and meet the eyes of the millions far from salt water. Just as American patrons of moving picture shows are viewing scenes and events abroad on the screens, so the foreigners are gazing upon scenes and events in American life."

The foregoing paragraphs are from the Buffalo Enquirer and afford valuable as well as interesting data. It is relevant, in this connection, to refer to the cry for an "open market," when considering those 15,000 miles of films which represent the United States in all parts of the world, and the 3,000 miles of imported films which represent all parts of the world in the United States. The wise safeguarding of the American home market, thanks largely to the Motion Picture Patents Company, has protected American film manufacturers from competing with a deluge of foreign output that would have made it impossible to preserve quality. And such safeguarding has also made it possible for American manufacturers to surpass a great number of foreign competitors on their own ground, because they can afford to invest more liberally in their respective products.

The output of the great European film manufacturers has always been welcomed in this country, and such films have exercised an uplifting influence on the product of our ambitious home manufacturers. Too many manufacturers are prone to attach more importance to the quantity of their weekly output than to its quality. It is needless to state where this policy will lead in the end.

The Gilmore Amusement Company.

A charter was granted The Gilmore Amusement Company, of Chicago, on October 21st, to construct and operate theaters and places of amusement in the state of Illinois. The incorporators are George J. Gilmore, and Walter, Arthur and Louise Wille. Mr. Gilmore is president of the company, and will also be general manager of the circuit of theaters contemplated.

The Morse Theater and the Ideal are now being built, the former being located at the Morse Avenue Station, on the Northwestern L, and the latter at North Avenue Larrabee Street. The Morse will cost $42,000 and will seat 700 people, and the Ideal will have the same capacity, with an outlay of $40,000. Sites for two more houses in this city have already been leased by the company, the capacities being 850 and 900.

The Morse and the Ideal will have attractive fronts and artistic interiors, and the most approved modern devices and appointments for the comfort of patrons will be installed. The Ideal will have a ground floor and balcony; the Morse will accommodate its patrons on the main floor. It is expected they will be in readiness for opening about January 10th next. The Morse will charge 10 cents admission, and the Ideal 5 cents.

The five houses to be built in Chicago will offer straight picture programs, and vaudeville will be strictly prohibited.

Cutthroat Competition Exposed.

Exhibitors are doing exceptionally fine business in this city just now; but there are discords here and there that cause all lovers of harmony to expostulate.

Notwithstanding the efforts made all over the country to bring exhibitors closer together and to recognize that success does not necessarily imply the putting of the other fellow out of business, there are cases in this city at present which demand urgent attention. It is well known that three reels for 5 cents is the policy countenanced by the local exhibitors' league, but there are several infractions of the rule.

The Star Theater, on Milwaukee Avenue, for instance, is offering, at matinees, five acts of vaudeville and four reels for 5 cents, and, in addition, advertises souvenir days, on which silverware is given away. The Star seats about 900 people, and is owned by Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

The Star is the nearby competitor of the Home and Banner theaters, which offer three reels of pictures for 5 cents. The Home and Banner seat about 700 each. This is a case that may well be classed under cutthroat competition, and should receive drastic treatment from the Exhibitors' League and careful consideration from exchanges which furnish service.

Another case: The Sittner Theater, on North Avenue and Sedgewick, is offering four reels of films at 5 cents. This policy works an injury to the Jeanette, Orchard and Mohawk theaters, nearby, which offer only three reels, in conformity with the policy adopted by the local league of exhibitors. This is another case where the local league's grievance committee should get in touch with the exchange serving the Sittner.

National Film Reporting and Collecting Agency.

A number of exchange men, handling Universal programs throughout the Central States, have formed the National Film Reporting and Collection Agency, for mutual protection against irresponsible customers. The Standard Film Exchange, the Laemmle Film Service and the Anti-Trust Film Co., of this city, are among the exchanges represented. It is expected that the movement will spread to the Eastern States, in a short time.

Important to Exhibitors.

On July 22nd last, the city council of Chicago amended Section 1622 of Article 2, of Chapter XLVI of the Chicago Code, by adding Section 1622c, which reads as follows and is now in force:

1622c. Every moving picture film kept or stored in any operating room where moving pictures are being produced, in addition to being kept in the receptacle required by Section 1622b, shall be placed and kept when not in use by the operator in a fireproof box with tight closing cover, leaving no exposed opening after films are placed there, which box shall first be approved by the city electrician. Every film, after having been used by the operator, shall be replaced in said box immediately if the same is intended to be used for a further exhibition.

It is understood that certain devices approved by the city electrician will be ordered installed in motion picture theaters, in the near future, among them the Gilmore Film Box, which has been tested and found fireproof as a receptacle for nitro-cellulose. This box has been recognized by the committee of consulting engineers for the National Board of Fire Underwriters as suitable for use in motion picture booths.

The following approval of the Gilmore device has been issued by Ray Palmer, city electrician of Chicago:

"The Gilmore Film Box recently submitted to this department for approval has been put through various tests to determine whether it is so designed as to afford proper protection for nitro-cellulose films. Tests were made by subjecting the box to intense heat to see whether film placed on the inside of box would be ignited thereby. In all of these tests the films inside the box failed to ignite. This department will therefore approve this device for use in moving picture theaters in the city of Chicago."

Chicago Film Brevities.

V. R. Day, manager of Essanay's city office, is around again; but on crutches. Mr. Day manages to steer, notwithstanding that the fractured bone is still in a cast. He has received congratulations on his speedy recovery from numerous friends.

A. C. Mann is his partner in the Crystal Palace. This theater seats 400 people and offers Universal programs. The service is furnished by the Anti-Trust Film Company. The present owner of the Royal is F. H. Cahill, an old and experienced exhibitor. The Hermosa's present owner is Louis M. Tupler. Universal programs are used at both these houses.

Producer Oscar Eagle, of the Selig Polyscope Company, has just started on the first of a series of big war pictures. Each of these subjects will be produced on a mammoth scale, it is announced. From 200 to 300 members of the Illinois National Guard will be used in each production, in addition to 75 light cavalry men and a battery of light artillery. The first production is being made at Desplaines, Ill., which at present looks as if it were under martial law. The camp flies the diamond S flag and is under strict military supervision.

H. M. Warner, of "Warner's Features" Company, is in town for a few days, visiting his brother, Abe Warner. When Mr. Warner returns to St. Louis, where he has established his headquarters in charge of twenty agencies, he will take his family with him, making that town his permanent residence.

Growth of the Feature Film

By Ingvald C. Oes

(Gen'l Manager, Great Northern Film Co.)

LESS than two years ago, the first feature film was placed upon the market with the firm conviction in the mind of the manufacturer that the innovation would appeal to the world's trade. It was an enterprising move, to say the least, but from the very beginning, it has more than justified the prophetic foresight of the originator, Mr. O. Olsen, president of the Great Northern Film Company. As American representative of the firm, I quite naturally took a deep interest in the innovation, and have followed its every development up to the present. It will readily be understood that much of fortitude was required to change film tradition in announcing that subjects two thousand or three thousand feet in length might be had as readily as the regulation reel of one thousand feet or less, but the officers of the company had implicit faith in their judgment, and the present-day demand for features has proved the correctness of their views. The feature film is now an institution.

MR. INGVALD C. OES,
American Representative Great Northern Film Co.

Mr. O. OLSEN,
President Great Northern Film Co., Copenhagen.

While on a recent visit to Europe, I found that the long-reel subjects were growing in favor both with the exhibitor and his patrons. In many instances the former has found it possible to project these features from three days to two weeks at a stretch, according to the subject. As a matter of fact, I learned that the receipts generally had doubled as a result of the use of good feature productions. The average patron of the motion picture theater is cultivating a liking for a picture that unfolds a story in two thousand or three thousand feet of film, rather than have his attention diverted by constantly changing subjects. The feature film brings him nearer to stage play, a form of entertainment which often is beyond the means of thousands who are in search of entertainment and amusement. In my judgment, within the next six months, the majority of films projected will be two and three thousand foot films. The manufacturers who have their fingers on the public pulse, and are able to keep the pace, or in other words, maintain the quality, will be the ones who must, perforce, reap the benefit of the changing taste on the part of the moving picture patrons. More care and attention is given to the production of the feature film by the manufacturer, and the extra outlay of money is an incentive that makes it obligatory upon him to release a product that will bear his name with credit.

The studios and factory of the Great Northern Film Company at Copenhagen, Denmark, were never so busy as at the present time. Aside from the call for the regular product, the continuously growing demand for our special features is pressing our working resources to the utmost. Our manufacturing plant proper covers a large area, and is equipped with all modern appliances for the manufacture of motion pictures. The company maintains its four studios separately from the factory on the outskirts of the city, and these are in constant use by our staff of directors and players. The scenery in the suburbs and in the country surrounding this quaint old city are all that could be desired for the taking of motion pictures, and the atmospheric conditions are ideal. President Olsen and the directors of the company are particularly proud of the distinguished players who have enrolled themselves upon the roster of the concern. The principals have been engaged from the ranks of the foremost actors and actresses of the Royal Theater, and other leading playhouses of Copenhagen, as well as from the principal European capitals. From time to time these are called upon to take an active part in the special feature productions. In addition, the company boasts of a perfectly equipped circus arena, and for stories that carry with them a flavor of the sea, there is close at hand an imposing expanse of water connecting the Baltic and the North Seas. In short, nothing is lacking for the manufacture of films that are calculated to maintain their position in the front rank of up-to-the-minute cinematographic products.

While dwelling upon feature films of quality, I wish most earnestly to call the attention of the exhibitors of this country to an evil which, if allowed to grow, will prove a dangerous handicap for the promotion of the best interests of the film industry. I refer to the unscrupulous methods adopted by a certain few individuals who import well-worn features and palm them off in this country as the newest products of the manufacturer. A glance at these dilapidated reels should be sufficient to warrant retirement from the public eye, but there are exhibitors unsophisticated enough to accept them, thereby taking the chance of offending the intelligence of their patrons, and at the same time working an injustice upon the manufacturer. The representatives of all reputable manufacturing firms are to be found in permanent offices in New York and other large cities. For this reason it is not reasonable for any exhibitor to claim that he was unaware of the fact that he had been renting "feature" films from which all semblance of feature had been worn by reason of repeated revolutions through hundreds of European projecting machines. There is a community of interests in this matter between the exhibitor and the manufacturer. The former should avoid all possibility of introducing junk to his patrons by doing business directly through the accredited exchanges or agents of the manufacturer who are always prepared to furnish information touching upon their products. By following this course, better service will result, the exhibitor will profit through increased attendance, and the manufacturer will feel content that his reputation is not being discounted. This will then compel the unscrupulous dealer to carry on his detrimental activities in other fields. The manufacturers are starting a vigorous campaign against violators of the copyright law. It is to the interest of the exhibitor to be cautious in his dealings with owners of unauthorized copies of copyrighted films.

There is sufficient demand in all parts of the world to indicate that the best is in demand. Our company ships its product to all parts of Europe, South America, Australia and the Orient, and from this will be seen that the feature film is in universal demand. Quality as well as quantity in film manufacture is in the evolutionary stage. Very few features of a year ago may be classed as features of the present.

Factory and Its Employees.

Of course, this contribution would be incomplete without a reference to the film industry in America. It is flourishing, and its future will be prosperous unless undue political ambitions interfere too much with its progress. Among the manufacturers abroad, trade politics is practiced only in a small degree compared with this country. The main interest seems to center itself strictly on the realization of meritorious results in the making of their films. Such, at least, is the policy of our company.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., SEES LIGHT.

South Orange, a quiet residential suburb, after rigorously excluding picture shows, is to grant a license for a regular picture house. Heretofore, a license for a six-day run was all the village authorities could give. A regular show house is to be built.

ENFORCING COPYRIGHT LAWS.

The Great Northern Film Company, or the Nordisk Film Company, through Mr. Ingvald C. Oes effected, on Friday, November 8th, an important seizure of copyrighted films. The film seized was one made by the Nordisk Film Company, of Copenhagen, Denmark, and had been surreptitiously brought into the United States, against the provisions of the copyright laws and in violation of the rights of this company. The film was seized by the United States marshal under the practice forming part of the present copyright law of the United States by which infringing films, or infringements of other copyrighted matter may be seized by the marshal and held during the pendency of the suit to restrain the infringement.

The proviso of the law is of the greatest importance to copyright proprietors in the moving picture business, and without it it would be quite impossible for them to handle the vast number of dealers who in some manner possess themselves of unlawful copies of various subjects and use them in such a way as to ruin the business of the lawful manufacturer and copyright owner. The Great Northern Film Company announces its determination to prosecute all of these infringements to the uttermost, and has authorized its attorney to engage in a systematic campaign against every person throughout the length and breadth of the United States, conducting an illicit trade of the features of the Great Northern Company. Pursuant to this campaign, seizures have been made in Iowa, and will be made consistently throughout the United States until the unfair dealing in the copyrighted subjects of the Great Northern Film Company is stopped. Mr. Isaac B. Owens, the copyright counsel of the Great Northern Company, on this subject, said:

"There seems to be a feeling on the part of these dealers that once they are in possession of a film, no matter how they secured possession, that they were at perfect liberty to show the film throughout the country. In this belief it seems to me that they are losing sight of the distinction between the property right which they may have in the tangible celluloid film, and the property which the copyright owner has in the subject of the film, which is protected by copyright. Where the subject of a film is properly copyrighted persons other than the copyright owner cannot, in some devious way, possess themselves of a film showing this copyrighted subject matter and exhibit it in defiance of the law and of the rights of the copyright owner. The present copyright law is the result of the most careful study of the subject by eminent specialists, and it seems to me to be quite adequate to protect the copyright proprietors. It is only necessary that a careful and systematic plan of enforcing it be adopted by the manufacturers, and I believe that this reckless infringement may be stamped out."

AN AFRICAN EXPLORER.

We are in receipt of a letter from Major S. L. P. Comnenus Palaeologus, 2836 W. Pico Street, Los Angeles, California, criticising very strongly American business methods. He is one of the very few who have made the overland expedition from Cape Town to Cairo and came to this country several weeks ago to interest some film manufacturers in an expedition for moving picture taking. He seems disappointed that his services have not been in demand, but is especially sore at not receiving even an acknowledgment of considerable matter sent to some inquirers

We have had quite a little in the way of African jungle pictures, but this is a field that is rapidly disappearing and it does seem as though we should have some more pictures along this line before all the wild animals are confined in our menageries and the native huts replaced by modern dwellings. We sincerely hope copies of some of the best of these pictures will be carefully preserved for future generations, who will people this globe when Africa is as civilized and enlightened as is our own United States today.

The printed record of historical, scientific, natural history and kindred subjects are often open to doubt and criticism, but the camera does not prevaricate and its record is not subject to the bias or prejudice of the operator. Moving picture records are records of facts as they are, and not as they may seem to be, and as such they should be preserved for the generations to come.

The Des Moines Slide Co., of Des Moines, Iowa, are equipping a large and up-to-date factory. They will have capacity for 1000 slides daily and facilities for handling an extensive business in advertising, announcement and special slides.

Doings at Los Angeles

Many Busy Kay-Bee Men on the Coast—Melford Sick—New Ordinance for Pictures—News Notes.

CHARLES KESSEL, the man who helped put the kay in "Kaybee" brand of films, is now in our midst, not as a visitor, but as one of us. He has stratched out the words "of New York," which used to follow his name, and hereafter the identifying tag will be "of Los Angeles," for he has come to stay. Even now the real estate agents are hot on his trail and there are prospects that the next letter under this dateline may tell how he has emulated Mr. Lubin and bought a house.

Kessel came here to take charge of all the Kessel-Baumann properties, which include the plants formerly of the Bison and New York Motion Picture Company at Edendale and Santa Monica, and the properties of the Keystone, Broncho and Kaybee (formerly Bison-101) motion picture companies.

His first concern will be to launch the second weekly release of the Keystone company. This will mean hiring new actors and providing new accommodations. It is too early to fix the date for the new release, but the expectation is that it will be out in about six weeks from this publication.

Meanwhile "Doc" Willat, who came with Kessel, is superintending vast alterations in the plant. The indications are that the present plant, which is no mean one, will be torn down and rebuilt. Already plans have been drawn for a new factory and Willat brought a complete outfit of new cameras, part of which went to the Edendale studio and the rest to the studio in Santa Monica canyon. A new stage is being built at Edendale this week for the use of the second Keystone company and a great deal of new scenery is being painted. All this represents a considerable financial layout, but the new organization seems to be sparing no expense.

That Boer War Picture.

That Boer War picture, "The Battle of Paardeburg," which George Melford, director of the Kalem Glendale company has been "going to" produce for the last six months, is getting to be an old story, but Melford insists that it will now be under way within thirty days. It is to be in two or three reels and it will actually cost upward of $10,000.

It was six months ago that Melford obtained the script and decided to do it. Five times since then he has been on the point of making a start and has had to turn his attention to something else. This time he says it's a sure go. Last week he went to San Francisco to look up a shipment of uniforms, firearms and artillery which had been lost by one of the transportation companies and finally turned up in the bay city. While he was there he swallowed a grippe germ, came home more dead than alive, and was ordered to bed by his physician, who says he will be out in a week.

Picture Company's Indians Pollute Water Supply.

The band of Arizona Indians employed by the Universal company at its 20,000 acre ranch "Oak Crest," in the San Fernando valley, nearly involved the company in trouble with the authorities last week.

The Los Angeles river, from which the city obtains its domestic supply, flows along one side of the Universal property. The Indians had pitched their camp on the bank of the stream and when scouts in the employ of the city health department were sent out to discover what was polluting the water the trail led direct to the Indian village.

The offense was a serious one, but the Universal officials were able to convince the health authorities that they had not understood the gravity of it—a number of cases of typhoid were suspected of having originated from this source—and they showed every disposition to make all amends in their power.

The Indian village was promptly removed to the other side of the ranch and at their own expense the Universal officials employed a mounted patrol to ride up and down the ranch constantly protecting the stream. The attitude of the Universal officials brought warm praise from the health bureau.

Los Angeles to Have New Ordinance.

The latest report from the city attorney's office is to the effect that the proposed new ordinance designed to take the place of the present antiquated ordinance regulating the exhibition of motion pictures will be ready for passage within two weeks. One of the chief reasons for overhauling the city's legislation on this subject was the demand that was coming from the public for an amendment which would permit the use of home motion picture machines in residences and of machines of both the home and exhibition types in schools and churches. At the time the council had the question under consideration the Municipal Playground Commission added the weight of its influence in favor of the amendment when it insisted on a provision giving it power to exhibit motion pictures in the various recreation centers maintained by the city. The commission has made all the necessary arrangements for regular supplies of reels and will give free picture shows of an educational nature for the benefit of the people of small means living in the congested portions of the city.

Sturgeon Looking for an Alibi.

To protect themselves in advance against possible charges of plagiarism Director Sturgeon, of the Western Vitagraph Company, of Santa Monica, and William E. Wing, author of a photoplay which has just been produced by the Vitagraph company, are scurrying around looking up people who knew about the story of the photoplay before the Saturday Evening Post recently published a short story in which prominent use was made of vultures as birds of omen. This same detail is featured and made much the same use of in the Vitagraph drama which was completed and shipped East before the story appeared. It is purely a case of coincidence according to Sturgeon and Wing, but one which would be difficult to make most people believe. The episode affords another striking instance of a theme that Epes Sargent has often reiterated in his photoplay department.

Kinemacolor Activities.

The Kinemacolor Company of America is all here now, several of the members who left the party in Arizona on their way out from New York having rejoined it at the new studio near Hollywood. The stop in Arizona was made for the purpose of filming the Grand Canyon of the Colorado and its environs. Two full reels of pictures were obtained with all the gorgeous natural colors of the canyon and the indescribably beautiful tints of sunset and dawn. Heretofore it has been necessary for people to go to the Grand Canyon to gain any accurate idea of its beauty and grandeur because, although ordinary photographs showed the outlines of it they could not reproduce the colors. Through the Kinemacolor Company's enterprise it will now be possible to take the soul of the greatest gash in the world's crust to people who otherwise could never hope to see it.

Brevities

If it had not been that Director Colin Campbell took a portion of one of the companies and went down to Capistrano this week to make several scenes for a historical picture with the picturesque ruins of the old San Juan Capistrano mission for a background, there would have been absolutely no news to write from the Selig studios this week. All the other companies are at headquarters at Edendale where the usual routing of picture making is in progress. It is now said that the first of the year will phobably witness the production of another three-reel feature like Christopher Columbus and Monte Cristo but what it will be has not been decided for the reason that at least three three-reel subjects are available and no choice has been made.

I have another thrilling adventure which is vouched for by Mack Sennet and sworn to by Fred Mace. It concerns another daring escapade of the two Keystone sleuths but as Richard V. Spencer refuses to guarantee it, and it imposes a greater burden upon the credulity than the famous bear story did, it seems wise to print only the really essential portions of it which are as follows: "Mack Sennet, the famous director of the Keystone company, who——accompanied by Fred Mace, the inimitable comedian, who——Both Mace and Sennet will continue to produce the further exploits of the 'Two Sleuths' —— Sennet—— Mace—— Sennet."

Motion pictures were used for political campaign purposes for the first time in this city the night of November 2 when the Progressive party in Southern California closed the campaign with a monster rally at which 2,000 feet of film showing Theodore Roosevelt in his last campaign tour across the continent, was run off for the crowd. The meeting was held in Shrine Auditorium which seats 6,000 persons and many were turned away. No charge was made for admission.

The city council has just signed up a lease with Tally's College theater at Fifth and Hill streets whereby the Board of Motion Picture Censors will have possession of it every Tuesday forenoon for the purpose of reviewing the current releases. The board has been running its reels at the Arrow theater in the Hamburger department store but when the lease expired neither party wanted to renew it and the board sought a new location.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Red Cross Annual.

AN unusual release is that of the Edison company for the 16th.; one that should commend itself to every exhibitor of Licensed film, because it is the annual release of the Red Cross Seal, or, to give the official title, The National Society for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

This year the booming of the film has been left entirely to the society, and exhibitors everywhere can count upon the earnest and intelligent co-operation of the local branch.

Hope is the cheerful title of this release and hope is the theme of the powerful purpose-story written for the society by James Oppenheim, whose name is never set to a poor story. Several of his general fiction stories have been made into photoplays by the Edison company and his name is favorably known to magazine readers and photoplaygoers alike. In Hope he takes up the preventive work in the small town, the story telling of the daughter of a bank official who comes to New York because in her little center it has not been considered necessary to provide a sanatorium for the cure of the dreaded consumption. She becomes a patient in the famous New York floating hospital, a disused ferryboat moored to the bulkhead of the Bellevue grounds, and there she is found by her father and sweetheart and brought back to the home town, where interest has been aroused in the movement through her flight.

Dr. Stockton, who has seen the picture run and who is an authority on the treatment of tuberculosis, assures us that this is one of the most perfect pieces of work technically that he has seen upon the screen, and when he cannot find faults they must be few indeed. It is a story and a preachment faultlessly told and both the Edison company and the Association have used their utmost endeavor to surpass the previous efforts with very decided success.

Work for the Seal.

The subject is released at this time on account of the sale of the Christmas seal, the revenues from which are one of the main sources of income to the society, and the best work can be done if you aid in promoting the sale of seals either directly or in a general way.

If you will address the society at 105 East 23d Street, New York City, they will send you without charge a well colored lantern slide reproduction of the seal, which this year is of new design and an improvement over the old. They will also supply a cut of the seal 2 by 2¼ inches without charge and if you are running the subject they will give you gratis two styles of folders, one relating to the society and its work and the other to the story. They have had 8,000 of each printed up and you are welcome to your share.

This will be a live topic from now until Christmas, many, if not most, of the exchanges have ordered extra prints and you cannot afford to let this opportunity get by you.

The prevention of consumption and the cure of incipient cases is one of the greatest works of the moment and one that directly interests every thinking person. You can approach ministers, educators and welfare workers of every sort certain of a welcome, and with no trouble at all you can do advance work that will pack your house to the doors two or three nights. Every representative of the society in the United States has been asked to give exhibitors every possible aid, and for the first time in the history a society is immediately and directly back of a purpose story. Other red cross seal stories have been prepared in collaboration with the society, "The Red Cross Seal" and "The Awakening of John Bond," for example, but the Association is directly back of "Hope" and has complete charge of it, the Edison company having turned everything over to them. Boom the sale of seals, boom the society and boom the film and it will come back to you not alone in direct return, but in the credit that accrues from being associated with matters of vast public importance. There is scarcely a home in the country where the subject does not appeal. Get your share of the interest that is waiting and if your competitor gets the reel first bring it back and see if you cannot do better than he did with it.

We Feel Complimented.

The M. P. Sales Agency, London, sends us the first issue of their new bulletin, "The Topline Indicator," a large four-page bulletin of the films handled by the agency. It is a splendidly informative sheet with the weekly program, a detailed calendar of releases giving brand, title, brief description, leading players, musical selections and publicity matter with more extended descriptions of the leading subjects and the usual house matter. We feel highly complimented that the only outside matter in the first issue is about a column and a half of extracts from this department that appeal to the British and Colonial readers.

A Selig Envelope.

We always like to get one of the Selig special envelopes and the special, for "The Kings of the Forest" is no exception. There is a generous suit of press paragraphs of varying lengths, a cut sheet offering cuts of several sizes and screens, another cut sheet with electroed advertisements and the announcement of five styles of paper and a twelve sheet cut-out mounted on profile. Below we give the plaint of the manager of an important circuit in respect to a lack of press material. It is strange that the other makers of special releases do not give the same care to the preparation of matter that the Selig company always does. What Stanley H. Twist can do others can—if they will.

Another from Utah.

A contribution from Utah comes from the Crescent Theater, Eureka. This, too, advertises "A Nation's Peril," and both in the preparation of the copy and the display, the advertisement does credit to the creator. The Crescent, known as "The Home of Komfort and Kwality," has about half a page, but goes only across four columns on a six-column paper, the ad. dropping below the half of the page to gain the space. It is partly this formation that gives the well-balanced display that is offered.

Here's a "Montgomery."

G. L. Bleich is doing the Montgomery stunt down in Owensboro, Kentucky, and doing it well. He is building a house, and he goes at his advertising in the same way the Florida manager tackles a proposition. Here are some of his samples:

ARE YOU A PICTURE SHOW FAN?
IF NOT, IT IS MY DUTY TO MAKE YOU ONE AND I AM GOING TO DO IT.

After the Empress opens I'll just keep "ding donging" at you until I get you to attend one time at least. That will settle it. You will either remain a chronic stay-away, or else my steady patron.

The nice place alone isn't going to act as the charm. I won't depend on that, but a combination of many attractive features will do the work, and you will want to attend daily.

More boasting, you will say! Time will tell.

G. L. BLEICH, Prop.

THE "EMPRESS" OPENS SOON.
AND I'M NOT GOING TO FOOL YOU.
NEVER! NOT IF I KNOW IT!

The shows (Motion Pictures, remember) that will be advertised at the Empress can be depended on as being like I say they are. Such terms as Grandest in the World, Most Magnificent, Best Ever Produced, Cost $100,000, Chance of Your Lifetime, and so on are generally an exaggeration, and besides are discounted very properly by people of ordinary intelligence, as they should be.

IF I SAY THAT I HAVE ON AN EXTRA GOOD SHOW YOU CAN BELIEVE IT.

Should you find that I misrepresent, ask and obtain your admission money back.

GEO. A. BLEICH, Proprietor
THE EMPRESS PHOTOPLAY THEATER.
Announcement of Opening Date Will Soon Be Made.

Gives Variety.

But he does not adhere to the one style. Another cross page strip, which cannot well be reproduced here in style, includes the lines, "For photoplays of the better sort," "Seating capacity 600," "Seven exits to make it safe," "Excellent ventilation," "Perfect in small things that make for comfort."

We've an idea that Mr. Bleich is going to run the sort of house he says he is, and we hope that he keeps us posted as to his work. This style is in a sense flamboyant, but back of it is promise for good, and having attracted attention he promises to hold for patrons those who come out of curiosity.

In another announcement, which we may have room for later, he makes a square-cut issue on the business as it is and was, and promises that in his house there will be shown only the decent sort of pictures. He bars out the cheap vaudeville and makes his issue squarely on pictures.

Some Trigger Advertising.

Samuel Trigger, who is president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, is doing some good advertising for his Tremont Theater, up in the Bronx. Last week he had the first four of the "What Happened to Mary?" series as a special feature, making good use of the $100 reward offered by the Ladies' World for the best answer to the question. The reward line stands out in glaring letters and holds the attention, but once he has caught the eye with it he frankly explains that the paper, and not the theater, offers the reward. This is wholly legitimate, but have you stopped to think that you can make that reward work for you, too? The offer of a reward always catches the eye, but when it is backed up by a fact it holds the attention.

Mr. Trigger is also getting the Vitagraph company into his house on the installment plan. Maurice Costello and John Bunny have been there so far, with a lot of the others to be heard from. We would think a lot more of Mr. Trigger's enterprise if he sent in his samples himself, instead of waiting until we picked them up at the Exhibitors' Advertising and Specialty Company, where he has his printing done.

Data Wanted.

Emil Kehrlein, of the Turner and Dahnken circuit, writes strongly regarding the advance matter supplied by the makers of feature stories in two or more parts and points out that one concern, releasing a four part feature sent barely four lines of description. This, perhaps, is the only official press matter, but Mr. Kehrlein should remember that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD comes to the relief of the exhibitor and gives him the needed material.

At the same time the point is well taken that the manufacturer produces some picture of more than ordinary note and, through his failure to provide a suitable suite of press matter, makes it difficult, if not impossible, for the exhibitor to properly feature the coming release and so get his money back.

The exchange usually demands the price of the reels that ordinarily would form the program and on top of this a heavy extra payment, and something should be done to see to it that the three and four part plays carry something more than a bare line in the advertisement and a synopsis in "The Stories of the Films." The Selig specials are put out with the same completeness that marks a road attraction. There are long and short stories, cuts and special paper and with no other aid than the material in the special Selig envelope the alert exhibitor can run a full line of press matter, including advertisements.

Unless something is done by others to cover these specials more fully, there will come a feeling of opposition to the special that will react against the makers. No exhibitor wants to spend thirty to fifty dollars for some feature and then find that he must do all his own presswork for the special. He has a right to expect something more than two or three hundred words of squibs. He is not able to employ a professional press man, and if he is to be expected to take kindly to these features he must be supplied with special material for booming.

The Pennies Count.

To many houses the investment in a special feature is something more than a gamble. It means a losing game that is charged to advertising the house, and if the special material is not available, the prospect of loss becomes a certainty.

In some of the houses every penny is made to count; it must be made to count if a bank balance is to be shown, and the exhibitor who is game enough to stand to lose a few dollars for the general good of the house, should not be penalized by being unable to advertise properly. It should not take the manufacturer's press agent very long to prepare a sheet of stuff and it might mean dollars, not alone to the exhibitor, but to the manufacturer himself.

What is wanted is a lot of snappy paragraphs and perhaps three or four long stories. These should not dilate upon the extreme activity of the company in making the release. It should be held to the film and the local house. A long story telling how enterprising and generally good the company is may be of a sort to appeal to the man who pays the press agent his salary, but it will do the exhibitor no good because the local paper will not take it, and presswork that cannot get through is worse than none at all.

In time the manufacturers must, of necessity, see the handwriting on the wall and supply the demand or their product will not be used and so become a loss to the exchange, resulting in the refusal to handle further specials that do not carry ample press matter.

Mr. Kehrlein puts his finger on one of the raw spots of the business, and some remedy should be applied.

Got the Prices Mixed.

If you have some reporter friend on whom you can unload your squibs, here is something that should help you to keep your name in the paper if you change the item to carry the name of the house. Mr. Paige says it actually happened at the old Victory Theater, Santa Barabara, but that is an unimportant detail. The point is that it is likely to be used. It runs:

> He looked like the Rube who has a violent dispute with the circus usher, and later turns out to be one of the clowns. He had the regular Rube make-up; flowing lace curtains, linen duster, bulging cotton umbrella and all the rest of it. Only in this case he was the genuine article, and State Street looked to him like a roaring artery of metropolitan traffic.
> He stopped in front of one of the moving picture theaters, studying the posters, and half drawing a long buckskin coin sack from his pocket.
> "Say, be the show goin' on naow?" he asked at the window.
> "Just started," replied the ticket seller.
> "I reckon I'll look at it," he said, fumbling with the thong that closed the bulging mouth of his sack.
> Then his eye caught the big notice board. Back went the coin sack, and out came the bewhiskered jaw.
> "No I won't neither. I ain't so all fired sot on seein' it as to pay no sich price," he asserted.
> "Why, what's the matter, uncle?" asked the ticket seller, completely puzzled. "It only costs a nickel."
> "Then what you got that cussed sign telling folks the smallest price's two dollars and thirty cents?" he asked.
> The ticket seller craned his neck through the wicket and looked at the notice board. Then a smile of understanding spread over his countenance as he passed the old man out a comp.
> "You win," he said. "This is on the house."
> On the notice board, in large chalk letters appeared this legend.
> "Matinee to-day—2:30 to 4:30."

At the same time we might wish that Mr. Paige had not written that he could not be without THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, as it is the only paper for those interested in the "movies." That's an odious word and it hurts the business more than most exhibitors realize. Just now when the motion picture is being placed on a new plane the use of the slang term is detrimental.

Another Bleich.

We like that Bleich advertising and are giving another of the advertisements that preceded the opening of the house. It is rather long, but it is clean cut and effective and there is much here that others may lift.

TO THE PARENT WHO CARES, SPARE A MOMENT TO READ THIS

My photoplay theater, the Empress, now under construction, will soon be ready to open and I desire to say a few words with reference to the conduct of the place, and the influence it will have on children.

There are parents forbidding their children attending picture shows, and other places of cheap amusement of the kind, and you are the ones to whom this is most directed. I want to remove some of the prejudice you may hold against all picture shows possibly, at least, I want to tell you how I conduct my picture show, and then after you are satisfied in time that I am telling the truth you ought to assent to a removal of the ban.

In my theater, refinement prevails. This does not mean that I cater only to the "la-de-dah" sort of patronage by any means. Respectful people of all degrees are welcome in my house, and I do not discriminate except that the rowdy, the "masher" and the undesirables in general soon give my place a wide berth.

Young boys are a hard proposition to handle by many, but I have little trouble on that score. Order from them is demanded, and when I find one who disobeys, further admittance is refused.

So I warrant you good order, and this brings us to the most important part of all things, what the child sees and hears, and the influence of moving pictures.

Now eliminate entirely stage "actin' " and "vodevil" the merits or demerits of which it is unnecessary to discuss, because that kind of entertainment forms no part of my show. Mine is a straight program of motion pictures, with the addition of good music.

It may be that you disapprove of moving pictures, because you believe they are vicious, too sensational many times, and harmful and unhealthy morally for the young. There are some films of that kind extant and managers utterly unconcerned as to what kind of pictures are offered their patrons I'll admit, but fortunately for the business, few in numbers and growing less. The managers with a spoonful of common sense have long ago cleaned out and quit showing any such stuff like "The Jesse James Gang," "Five Years In Sing Sing," "Beulah Binford" and that kind of rot, but at any rate here is one of them that does not show any such pictures, and never will, and I ask you to believe this a fact.

I want to extend you this assurance: Your child, if permitted to attend my show will not see or hear anything improper in the slightest degree; never that which is degrading, never the sensational. I do not depend on that kind to attract. You may feel that I am lying to you now, because the show business seems to have a corner on all the liars in the world not in politics, but keep an eye on the Empress and sooner or later you will be satisfied that the entertainment there is wholesome and a perfectly fit place for your boy or girl to attend and I am basing my financial success on your finding this out.

But do not draw a conclusion that my aim is that of catering to children alone. Far from it. The Empress is for the grown up. Neither must you imagine that the program will consist of the religious, or scientific, or such, in the entire. Clean comedy, the wild Western, the beautiful heroine, splendid hero, and deep dyed villain, will cavort in the pictures as of old, along with the classic, the artistic, because there is good in everything when properly wrought, and I shall display no other kind.

Respectfully and sincerely yours,

GEO. A. BLEICH, Prop.

The Empress Theater, Frederica Street.

A Pretentious Book.

F. E. Rutter, of the Odeon Theater, Bellefontaine, Ohio, sends us a copy of the first issue of the Odeon News with this letter:

> This the first issue of the Odeon News, which I intend to publish monthly or oftener if necessary. I scarcely knew just what I wanted when I started on it, but it seems to answer the purpose for which I intended it. Already I have had numerous inquiries about the next issue. Lately there has been so much advertising matter distributed around the city that heralds, dodgers, etc., failed to attract the attention of the majority, but I only found four copies of the News lying on the street. Look it over and any criticism or suggestion for the betterment of future issues will be greatly appreciated by the editor. I am a firm believer in advertising and I find many good suggestions in the Advertising for Exhibitors department and have also been helped by the Projection department. I believe that a department devoted to the personalities of the photoplayers would be greatly appreciated by the readers. The past record of one or two people each week would not take up much space and I believe would be of benefit. When I started this letter I only expected to write a few words, but I see that I have said too much, so hoping you will pardon the intrusion, I will wish you the continued success that your paper deserves and sign myself as a successful exhibitor.

Twenty Pages.

The News is sixteen pages and cover, but there are only eleven pages of actual text, the rest being blank or advertising. It is in no sense an advertising book for the current films and it gives no calendar of releases coming. It is merely a well printed magazine in miniature with the running story of "Undine" (Film Supply service is used) and plenty of gossip about the players. Though the majority of the pages are in ten point, there is plenty of interesting gossip and comment. It will interest Mr. Rutter to know that we are planning to supply this demand for facts about the players. The first issue is a capital one and if the others are as good we think that this will be more useful in interesting spectators in the pictures in general, rather than merely enlisting their interest in certain releases.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

Don't Bother Universal.

DON'T send scripts to the Universal. They have their staff writers for all the studios now and are buying practically nothing from the outside, so save your stamps and the clerk's time and keep your scripts at home. We do not believe that the studio writer will last long as it is not possible with this scheme to get the proper variety to the stories, but until the scheme proves itself bad it will be tried out, so stay away.

Positively Not.

That Boonville sheet that is brought out more or less frequently in the interest of a school scheme happened along through the mails the other day in the shape of a so-called "double number" that is the same size as the last single number. It makes a promise to do better in future, possibly because of the complaints made by subscribers to the Boonville post office.

It endorses our club scheme and wants to know if it cannot get together with us. It cannot. We do not recognize as a legitimate publication any house organ and the sheet will have to be much better and more accurate than it is to be recognized as a magazine at all.

It cannot get together with us—or next. Positively not.

Unpretty.

Another of those house organs that is run by a Cleveland theatrical man who doesn't seem to know much about photoplay if he is the professor and faculty in general of a school, comes out with a blurby sort of complaint against the Photoplay Author because that magazine refused to take the advertisement of its school and then shoots off at a tangent to call William Lord Wright a liar because he told who the school was. This is unpretty journalism even in a house organ, but that's the sort of house organ this one is. And the funny part of it was that Wright seemed inclined to be angry about it until we pointed out who it was that was calling him a liar. Then he joined our laugh.

The photoplay business has brought some funny customers into the field. Nelson would be one of the funniest if he wrote with a cleaner pen, but he seems to think he is still hanging around the cheap theatrical agencies, and talks accordingly.

Must Have Money.

There must be money in the Photoplay school business. One New York concern is going into the small town papers with an advertisement four columns wide and ten inches deep. We have received copies of the advertisement from Kokomo, Ind., and Denison, Texas. It makes the usual lying statement that you can earn $25 or more a week writing photoplays, and will probably coax a lot of fools to part with their hard earned money for instruction worse than useless.

The school is now charging $8 for its course at the first offer, but will come down to $4 if you hold out and for a time did make an offer of $2 for the course as a last bid, offering four lessons for one dollar and the other four for a second payment of like amount, explaining that they wanted to get the plays to sell.

Photoplay editors can expect a fresh accession of drivel from this new crop of easy marks. In the long run the schools will put themselves out of business because they will flood the studios with the product of its victims and drive the manufacturers to shut down their photoplay departments in self defense.

Standards of Payment.

The other day Dr. Clemens, who won one of the Powers' contest prizes, wrote that he found it easier to write two-reel stories than to keep them in one reel, a discovery that others had made before him. You must have a good idea to start with, but given such an idea the rest is easier than holding in to a single reel. Beyond the mere physical features we would rather write a story of 30,000 words than one of only 3,000, and yet stories are paid for by the word and film is paid for by length.

The most difficult thing to write is a three hundred foot comedy to tag onto a seven hundred foot subject, and still have a real story in it. That is one reason why so many companies put a short scenic or industrial with a six or seven hundred foot comedy, and yet when they do get a short length they pay less than the half-reel price in most instances. Any company that could put out three good comedies on one thousand foot release each week could sell to every exchange in the country in its affiliation, but it cannot be done so long as ten dollars is offered for the subject because it is so short. We know one company that pays as much for three hundred feet as for a subject two or three times that length, but we know only one. If there were more companies with similar intelligence there would be more two-subject releases—which would please the exhibitors immensely.

He Lacks Patience.

In his Photoplay Philosopher in the Motion Picture Story Magazine, Eugene V. Brewster, its editor, writes: "I have no patience with those writers who denounce photoplay schools and photoplay school books of instruction." He goes on to explain that a book of instruction without the personal coaching of the school makes progress impossible.

It is because we know a whole lot more about schools than Mr. Brewster seems to that we, meaning mostly William Lord Wright, T. E. Letendre, A. W. Thomas and ourselves, condemn the schools, or perhaps Mr. Brewster has an eye on his advertising pages.

Mr. Brewster seems entirely to lose the point of the matter. If these schools were conducted by persons really qualified to teach; if the books were other than garbled and jumbled versions of the instruction sheets of the various manufacturers, the schools would do little good but no harm. As the matter stands these schools without an exception, so far as we have been able to learn, are conducted by men utterly incompetent to teach because they do not know what they are talking about or are too lazy to impart their knowledge if they do.

The publication of these advertisements in the Motion Picture Story Magazine has carried the seeming endorsement of the schools which its editor now makes positive, and has been the means of coaxing from persons none too well able to lose money hundreds of dollars on the lying pretext that anyone can learn to write photoplays and earn $50 a week IF they can write and SELL two scripts a week. One of these concerns, according to the postmaster of their home town, takes money without even pretending to give any return, and at that we think this is better for the prospective client than if the course or book had been sent.

Others give instruction and other services, one New York concern undertaking to vend the client's scripts after licking them into shape. Lately we have had occasion to examine about a dozen of these scripts and not one of them should have been sent out by any person possessing even a halfway knowledge of photoplay requirements.

At the present time we do not know one of these concerns that is other than a get-rich-quick affair conducted by incompetents or those who have no intention of giving the service they sell. They are hurtful in that they implant the wrong ideas of the work and this is worse than no idea at all.

No school, no matter how honestly it might be conducted, can teach a person to write. It can only tell how to write, and this is precisely what a proper book on technique teaches, but teaches correctly. And the criticism, of which Mr. Brewster speaks so highly is no more valuable than the course; good only if the critic knows what he is talking about. Mr. Brewster should cultivate patience and clearness of vision.

Putting in the Kick.

Ask any editor what he most dislikes and he'll probably tell you the same old thing, and the same old thing is generally the story without the kick, because if the story had the kick the fact that the plot was old would most likely be forgiven.

Take the old story of the hero who is unjustly accused. The bad clerk makes away with the bonds or the money and the good clerk gets sent to jail. The girl knows the bad clerk is the thief, apparently because he wants to marry her, so she gets the police and goes to the tree where the bad clerk hid the loot and they arrest him and go to the jail and turn the good clerk loose.

There are more mind readers in photoplay than there will be in real life in the next million years. The heroine always knows the villain as quickly and as certainly as the audience does, and she always seems to know where the bad clerk hides out his haul. Half the time there is so little to the working of the plot that there are a lot of scenes written in to make weight, though now and then the reverse is true and the later scenes are hurried because the first part was worked out too elaborately.

Now the real story in this plot lies in how the girl finds the bonds. All that comes before this is merely the preparation for the real story and should be gotten through with as quickly as is decent. One scene shows the rivalry between the two men, the next the robbery, the false accusation and the arrest of the hero, and the story has been started in two scenes in place of a dozen. That leaves room for the rest of the story. There are eighteen to twenty-five scenes left, and something must be done. If the girl goes straight to the hiding place there is no story because it ends too quickly. But suppose that the girl does not suspect the villain. She is even rather grateful to him for his offered assistance. But among the coins stolen is a twenty-dollar goldpiece that she gave her father to keep for her. They are dining and the clerk pays for the meal with the gold coin. She recognizes a private mark as it lies on the tray. Her suspicious are aroused. She plans to search the clerk's room. This is a rather delicate matter, but she disguises herself as a stenographer and takes a room in the same boarding house. She watches her chance and gets into the clerk's room. It looks as though she had taken the trouble in vain for a search reveals nothing, but as she is about to leave she drops her glove and in picking it up she sees that the underside of an upholstered chair has been disturbed. She investigates and finds the stolen funds. She goes to her father and tells him, policemen are called, a search warrant is sworn out, and the clerk's room is invaded.

Now it is pretty certain that the clerk is guilty, but a charge of theft has been lodged against the hero and he cannot be released until the district attorney takes action in the matter. He is not immediately released, but they go off to the prosecutor's office and there complete the formalities.

This gives rise to a more dramatic sequence of events. The audience sees that the girl is friendly with the real thief and is afraid that she will be misled. They rejoice when the marked coin is seen, but when the search is given up without discovery there is a sense of disappointment that a moment later is turned to gladness when the discovery of the chair is made. Keep them guessing, keep them waiting, and you have a story. Just run off a succession of more or less obvious situations, and you have no story at all.

This is not much of an example of a good dramatic story. It is not intended to be, but it will give the observant writer a hint as to what an Editor means when he says that a story "lacks action," even though the actors are acting. They are acting mere action instead of story. There is not enough happening to interest.

If you want to get further away from the obvious, get away from the fact that the girl is the daughter of the employer of the two clerks. Make her a stenographer in another office, make her almost anything else, and you have skipped the same old thing, but whatever you do make things mighty hard for the heroine for a time. Put her to all sorts of troubles. Give her—and the audience—something to worry about, and the verdict will be a good story. If you try to slip through a story in the easiest possible way you merely waste your time. The editor yawns over the synopsis, and there is another four or eight or twelve cents gone to swell your private postal deficit.

Did you ever sit down and figure out just what it costs you in stamps to send out the stories you don't think much of yourself, but with which you take a chance? One author figured that it cost him slightly more than $28 in a single year before he woke up.

Another Way to Work.

Burr Morie sends in his plan of work, which seems rather complicated. He writes:

I wonder if my method of study of the photoplay would be of interest to others. I wrote one photoplay about a year ago, and that one effort was enough to convince me that I knew nothing about the business. I have been studying since then, and will finish my course in about three months. If you think there is anything in the method, give it to your readers.

Go to all of the picture theaters that you can. Select one company, and attend the places where you can see the productions of this company. Study the style of the play. Learn the names of the principal members of the cast and remember the principle traits of each. Learn to pick out the minor characters that now, or will, at some future time, take the leads. Study them. This part of the course might be called the laboratory work. Finish with one company, and then take another, but do not fail to keep up with your review work. Take each company in any order you care to, but be sure that you have finished with one before you take up another.

Read every story of the plays you have seen and then shut your eyes and see them over again. Take two of these stories each week and write a synopsis of your own. After you have succeeded in writing the story in 250 of your own words so that you can see the same action that you saw on the screen, write this action out, scene by scene, and hand it to some one who has seen the same play and who will give you an honest opinion of its completeness.

In addition to this course of study, it is well to start a card system record of all plays produced. Prepare a set of classification letters, something after the following manner:

Class A—Drama. B—Comedy. C—Costume. D—Western, etc.

Arrange your cards with the name of the producing company at the top, and with spaces for the date of release, name of the play, class and remarks below, on the body of the card. Each card will accommodate nine plays. (Card 3 in. x 5 in.). Don't use the same card for more than one company. After a few releases you can tell how the productions of each company are running.

This is merely my method of study, but perhaps it will be of value to some others who are not in too big a hurry to become script editors. Such study will lead to this position a great deal sooner than haste, and I believe the job will last longer after it does come.

We confess that we fail to see the reason for this elaborate system, but no two men have precisely the same method of work and perhaps this classification stuff helps to fix the style of production in Mr. Morie's mind. For another purpose we keep a record of titles by companies, but we use for this purpose the list run each week in the back part of this paper, not the weekly calendar but the list classified by companies. The character of the releases we carry in our head, but unless we have an order from a company, we do not write to suit a company. We write a photoplay and then send it where it is most likely to sell. If you write a story to suit Jim Jones, Sam Brown and Mary Smith of the Gumph Company and Mary Smith goes into vaudeville, giving place to someone else her complete opposite in appearance and methods of work, you are apt to find yourself with an unsalable play on your hands.

It is a good thing to study the screened picture minutely, but study it for hints on production and technique and less for the personality of the popular players and those apt to become popular. Don't write to order unless you have the order.

What Advice Is Worth.

This morning we had a glance at a letter from a man who wrote an editor that he was hopeful that the story sent would be taken, as the editor of a magazine had told him that no office would ever reject the photoplay on its merits. It went on with the full history of the seven scripts the author had written, all ticked out on a cheap typewriter on cheaper paper. There was an air of cocksureness about the communication that tired, but it did not need this to seal the fate of the script. No company would probably take it for merit or any other reason short of a shotgun.

The point is that advice is good only when it is backed by positive knowledge. The mere fact that a person should know what he is talking about doesn't mean that he does, and some of the advice handed out by supposed authorities is positively hurtful.

There is only one real test as to the value of your work. If you sell your scripts, you are writing the right sort of stuff. If you are not, look to the screen and see what is being produced. Then look at your scripts and see wherein they are different. Of course, you are likely to think that they are infinitely better than the stuff put out on the screen, but that is not the point. This poor stuff sells, and yours doesn't. See wherein your script is different from the script that sells. Do not write down to the level of the stuff you see but write along the same broad lines. Don't be too ready to seek or accept advice. Find out first if it is worth anything. If you are worth helping, if your work shows promise, you'll probably get all the help you need from script editors themselves if you keep at it long enough to win their attention, but do not be in too much of a hurry.

Just So Much.

The sooner the novice realizes that there is just about so much hard work to be done the sooner will that novice get ahead—by doing the work. You may sell one or two stories by chance at an early period in your endeavor, but this should be regretted rather than rejoiced at, because no matter what you may think, there is certain work before you and you must do it. The sooner you do it the more quickly you pass your initiation. If you sell two or three stories right at the start you get the idea that you have only to dash them off and that may mean an extra six or eight months of hard work and rejections to knock the foolishness out of your head.

You can be helped by the advice of others to avoid certain errors. You may be helped over some of the rough places, but practise, after all, is the only real teacher and if the editors of every studio in the country were to get together to help you out and speed your progress, there is none the less certain practise work you must do yourself.

This holds good in every line of work whether professional or artisan and the sooner you make up your mind to go to work the more quickly will that work become of merit. A thousand dancing teachers cannot teach you to waltz. They can show you how but your own feet must catch the trick. A thousand musicians cannot teach you to play the piano if you only look on. Your own fingers must be trained through constant practise. You may learn to waltz more quickly than another because you have an aptitude for dancing. You may become a famous concert performer because you were born a pianist, but without practise you are nothing in any line of endeavor and no matter how attractively school advertisements may read, you must make up your mind that success comes through practise and through practise alone. It must become second nature to you to write scripts if you are to write good ones, and this facility comes only through practise backed up by a natural aptitude for the work and an imagination fertile in desvising plots and situations. No one can do the work for you. If you are not willing to work yourself stop now before you waste further time.

Don't Be Local.

Sometimes we get tired of saying the same things over again and we are pretty certain that some of our readers tire of hearing some of the points repeated, but some things cannot be hammered home hard enough, it appears. One of these is the foreign market.

Outside of the United States, subjects sell on their individual merits. If a picture is generally useful it may sell into the hundreds of copies. Of others the sale may not run into two figures, let alone three. Five and six copies are sold of some pictures, two and three hundred prints of others may be ordered. It stands to reason that most of the manufacturers keep an eye on the foreign market.

That's why it happens that your clever little story about putting the hat in the ring and having it kicked out again, met the same fate as the hat last summer. It may have been clever, but what do audiences in Germany, Russia, China and Australia know of the hat in the ring? Some silly little story that is likely to get a laugh from a man in China was bought and your masterpiece was sent back. Now you know the reason. Photoplays are not made for the United States alone. They are made for the whole world, and the really successful play must be world-wide in its appeal. Some purely local stories are taken, but they are not many—just enough to make the exception to prove the rule.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—No question can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

H. C. Z.—Please give the name of the character and description. We have the Bison cast, but the "lucky lover" is not cast as such. Address the manufacturers for the postcards.

ORIENT—Miss Ormi Hawley was the girl in Lubin's "The Players." Paul C. Hurst was Carlyle Blackwell's brother in Kalem's "When Youth Meets Youth." In Lubin's "Caught Bluffing" Miss Dorothy Mortimer was the widow and Miss Jennie Nelson her daughter.

VIVIAN—There is no connection between Keystone and Biograph. Most of the old Biograph comedy players are now with Keystone. Miss Mabel Normand was the girl in "He Must Have a Wife." Miss Pickford was the girl in "A Pueblo Legend." Miss Blanche Sweet is known in England as Daphne Wayne because her right name was not communicated to the English agent along with the picture. We must pass the other questions.

Mrs. R. H.—Edwin August was the schoolmaster in "The Schoolteacher and the Waif."

MOBILE—The Pathe press man says J. Johnson and Miss Betty Gray were the leads in "The Lass of Gloucester," but we are fain to admit that we think the festive P. A. is "kidding" us. He hates to give up names because he is too lazy to go after them.

M. E. P.—Dell Henderson was the husband in "The Furs." The Kalem player is not given in the cast, but he was not with Edison.

H. G. R.—We can get no data on the Helen Gardner releases. The Thanhouser Company sells photos for one dollar a set, including those you name.

GRATEFUL PLAYWRIGHT—We have better use for the space than printing our own picture. It is not good form to print your own picture, and it is not for us to be in bad form.

A. I. A.—We think that Miss West left Biograph some time ago.

J. G. H.—Pathe's "Passion Play" was made several years ago, we do not recall the exact date. It was a costly production, but reliable figures are not to be had.

DOROTHY D.—Miss Winnifred Greenwood seems to be the player you indicate, but your questions are so loosely framed that we cannot get you exactly. Ask definite questions and you'll receive definite replies, but inquiries about "that girl" are too vague. Miss Sweet has played only with the Biograph.

N. O. S.—Miss Edna Payne had the title part in "The Moonshiner's Daughter." In "Paying the Board Bill," Bob was Ed Coxen, Horace was Lew Weston and Wilbur was John E. Brennan.

STUNG.—There are no reliable correspondence schools. Get a copy of Technique of the Photoplay, to be had of this paper for one dollar.

F. S.—We lack the cast you ask for.

Miss T.—Miss Blanche Sweet was the girl in "The Painted Lady." It is not certain that Miss Lawrence will return to Lubin.

H. G. W.—11 East 14 street.

THANFAN.—We do not find the part you ask for in the Thanhouser cast. Sure you have it right? Miss Cleo Ridgley is riding to California with her husband and playing in the photoplay houses on the way, at the same time advertising a magazine. Mr. Smalley and Miss Weber have not located yet.

Comments on the Films

"THE MYSTERY OF GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK" (Kalem), Nov. 6.—A picture whose chief merit is in some of its very pretty, artistic scenes, rather than in the story which is not very convincing, indeed the finding of the deed on top of the old clock, considering the fact that it had been moved to a new house, is improbable. Alice Joyce plays the lead as the granddaughter whose father wants her to marry a rich banker, a not very real character, and who prefers the young clockmaker. The girl fixes the clock so that he'll have to call often and this is cute and pleasing. The clockmaker is indirectly the cause of the old deed coming to light. So the father relents and gives the girl to her sweetheart.

"MICHAEL McSHANE, MATCHMAKER (Vitagraph), Nov. 6.—Much credit is due Larry Trimble, this picture's author, for the pleasing, human situation that it so freshly presents. But, fine as the situation is, there is something in it finer still, and it is nothing else that the love making of Danny O'Toole, bashful laddie-buck that he is, to pretty Colleen O'Brian. Of course, Larry Trimble saw it all in the picture; but how could he have found a way to make us see it, except in this that he was also the picture's producer. The pig in a poke that Danny was carrying was a bit in the laddie's way. He wants to be holdin' out his arms too, but doesn't dare. Then the pig escapes and Danny and the girl have to chase it, giving more good fun to the audience. All this is as natural and unconstrained as it can be.

John Bunny plays the picture's central character, Michael McShane, a donkey cart peddler, who teaches Danny how to make love successfully. This character is very skillfully drawn and made perfectly consistent; but Michael shows himself to us through the workings of his mind and interests the intellect rather than directly the imagination. It is the man's humor and his shrewdness, finding in Bunny's face and gestures, full of dealings with the world, absolutely consistent expression, that we see, and that strongly attract us. The firmness with which this character is established and the consistent way in which it is used add much to the picture's strength. We know him thoroughly from his way in making a trade before Danny thinks of going to him for advice. We think it one of the best things Bunny has done.

Producer Trimble's whole method in making the offering is worth high praise. It is thoroughly Irish in its characters, its scenes and its action. It was photographed in an Irish village and we have the thatched cottages, mud puddles, pigs, dogs and all Irish. Mabelle Lumley (Colleen O'Brian) is lovely as a lassie just budding into womanhood. Charles Cox's Danny is perfect. Beatrice Grovner, as Colleen's mother, and James Pryor, as her father, fill their parts in perfect satisfaction. A true, spontaneous comedy and as dandy a picture as warmed the heart of an audience.

"VICTIMS OF FATE" (Pathe), Nov. 7.—A very dramatic and speedily drawn Japanese-American picture, in length a little over half a reel. It stands on the suddenness with which the climax comes rather than on its humanity, for it isn't convincing. There are three or four Japanese in the cast in unimportant parts; but the two American players who take the two important Japanese's roles are not naturally what they represent and give an artificial air to the whole production. Merely as a suggestion, would it not have been wiser to have made the villain a foreign rather than an American army officer, seeing that the picture was for American spectators? The sets are very prettily trimmed, especially those in Japan; they are lovely. The story is good and will be liked.

"DINAN, FRANCE" (Pathe), Nov. 7.—A hand colored film, giving well photographed views of a deeply interesting and very old city. It has very high educational value. The two on one reel make a good offering.

"BROKEN HEARTS" (Pathe), Nov. 6.—A substantial situation makes this humanly convincing picture far more interesting than the average offering. But, if it is a picture of "broken hearts" they are "broken" only for a time. The title leads us to expect a very unhappy ending and, when we see the course that the story is taking and, from the title, expect a bitter ending, we are repelled. The ending is unexpectedly happy and the picture surely deserved a better title. It is a western story that seems made in the East; but after it is well begun that will bother nobody. Its chief characters are a miner, who has received notice that capitalists will give him $100,000 for a mine, his wife and their Indian man servant. The man, wanting to surprise his wife, refuses to tell her his plans and leaves her for a couple of days while he goes to Cripple Creek for the money. She thinks he has gone off with another woman. Three times tragedy lifts her mace to crush that home and is stayed by a hair. There is excellent relief in the faithfulness of the Indian servant and then comes the happy ending. It is a very commendable offering.

"QUEEN FOR A DAY" (Edison), Nov. 6.—A very farcical, and, although acted by good players, a very artificial picture. There is little true Edison quality in it. A Broadway audience watched it solemnly; but, at another theater, there was some laughter, not much. The scenario is by Mark Swan. Louise Sydmeth, as the darkie maid of the missionary's daughter, and Arthur Houseman, as the Zulu chief, made all the laughs.

"QUEEN OF SPADES" (Eclipse), Nov. 6.—If the suspense created by the first half of this unusual picture, had been sustained to the end, it would have been a masterpiece. As it is, it is very interesting, dealing with a suicide club in which a reporter, who wants to write it up, gets caught and has to be rescued. It is very fair entertainment.

"THE SUBSTITUTE HEIRESS" (Lubin), Nov. 5.—A situation, such as is offered in this picture, is sure to be popular. It shows a man, who happens to be a millionaire, from the West, breaking through all the artificialities of modern life and marrying his hostess' maid whom he knows and whom the spectators know to be a worth-while woman. The man is played by Arthur Johnson. Lottie Briscoe plays the girl. The Westerner comes to New York to do business with a broker whose office is on a very rural Wall street. This man is called away and sends the Westerner down to his country home at the seaside. His daughter makes her maid play the lady and entertain the stranger while she goes to a friend's home. He falls in love with what he thinks is his friend's daughter and is shocked to get an invitation to her wedding (it is made an announcement, a bad mistake, for it confuses the action). At the ceremony, which he attends, he is glad to find that the girl he loves is not getting married. A very entertaining, not an artistic offering.

"THE RANCHMAN'S ANNIVERSARY" (Essanay), Nov. 7.—While this picture's final intention is not made clear for many scenes, it keeps us expecting the story and therefore keeps us interested. It deals with a ranchman and his wife, with their cowboys and a few neighbors, and turns on the jealousy awakened in the man by the mystery his wife makes of presents she is collecting for their wedding anniversary. The boys get wind of it and, for a joke, after removing "Dad's" bullets, "put a job up on him," make him think his wife (a cowboy in a skirt and wig) is kissing one of the punchers. The photography is clear enough; but is not as good as usual with Essanay prints. The whole makes fair entertainment.

"A MONEY?" (Essanay), Nov. 6.—A fresh comedy of situation full of unexpected twists and spontaneous humor and, like every other true comedy, a good deal of humanity too. It made a big house laugh heartily and often. Three young men, Steppling, Calvert and Mason, have come to spend a short vacation in town. The two younger leave their money with Steppling who is to dole it out every day and make it last. He won't "come across" at odd times and the two have met girls. They don't know that the money is in Steppling's coat lining and pawn his clothes while he is asleep. This is only one laughable situation. Howard Missimer, as a tramp, comes into possession of the suit. It is very good indeed, a fine offering. We can't guess the reason for the title.

"HER EDUCATION" (Selig), Nov. 6.—The heroine of this picture, played by Betty Harte, is a very convincing Western girl, even a type, in a limited way, and Marjorie Benton Cooke, the authoress, deserves much credit for creating her. A little rough and somewhat breezy, she is, nevertheless, a true woman. Her dad had wanted her to get an "eddicashun" and although she can't read, she starts for the university to get one, leaving behind her the wild life of drunkeness, murder, coyotes and sheep, in which she has been brought up. Her experiences are convincing enough; but, in general, the picture seems artificial, perhaps solely because of one or two weak scenes. It is good entertainment though, and was warmly applauded by an East Side audience. The producer is Lem Parker. In the cast are Wheeler Oakman, Wm. J. Burns, Frank Clark, Al. E. Garcia, Wm. Hutchinson, R. E. Green, Eddie James, Forrest Littlefield, Geo. Hernandez and a host of undergraduates who, by the way, are usually very unprofitable in a picture; they harmed this one.

"THE DYNAMITERS" (Selig), Nov. 5.—William Duncan has made as writer and producer a little masterpiece in this picture, at once human and full of thrilling action. He himself plays the hero very acceptably with Myrtle Stedman, as pretty a girl for a heroine as any picture needs, as his sweetheart. Lester Cunio plays the jealous villain, who blows up the dynamite shack and gets the other man suspected of it. We see the shack go up. The suspense is very skillfully built up from lesser to greater climaxes. It is fresh, pleasing and looks like the real thing. A very desirable offering, indeed.

"CARMEN OF THE ISLES" (Selig), Nov. 7.—An interesting character sketch by Bessie Eyton, as a coquette fisherlass, rather than a good story gives this picture place with good offerings. The ending, in which we see the struggle between the girl's lover (Thomas Santschi) and the cowardly stranger (Herbert Rawlinson), with whom the girl has, almost maliciously, flirted and who, in an ugly frame of mind, has tried to shoot him, and after that the death of the frightened girl, who falls over a cliff, is certainly dramatic, but it is only the ending. The larger part of the picture serves as a statement of the situation that makes this possible; yet the statement is very interesting as showing the girl's character. The scenes were taken close to the sea and its rocky shore.

"YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK" (Edison), Nov. 8.—Due, no doubt, to some unlucky chance, the very worst photography that the Edison studio has turned out in a long time, comes in this picture that truly needed good photography. This doesn't apply to all its scenes, but it surely does to most of them. Several pictures of waterfalls are fine.

"HIS AUTO'S MAIDEN TRIP" (Biograph), Nov. 8.—A very amusing farce of tramps who have made Mr. Mark think he has run over one of them. Nothing could be more comical than the facial expression of this leading hobo, coddled in the home of the auto owner. It makes a very pleasing offering.

"THE CLUB MAN AND THE CROOK" (Biograph), Nov. 8.—On the same reel, a farce with nothing new except one single, but very laughable, joke at the end.

"THE SHERIFF'S MISTAKE" (Lubin), Nov. 7.—When a typical cowgirl and badman picture, such as this, is very poorly photographed, as poorly as is this, very little can be truthfully said for it as entertainment for the many. To us it was wearisome.

"THE PONY EXPRESS GIRL" (Kalem), Nov. 8.—The express rider is wounded by desperadoes. The cowgirl rides to his assistance and carries the invoice of money to its destination. Then there's a love scene. Very slight; but the heroine is acceptable.

"STENOGRAPHER WANTED" (Kalem), Nov. 8.—A short sketch on the same reel. Ruth Roland applies for the job and is accepted. She doesn't tell the two men in the office that she is married. Pretty soon hubby comes. It would have been very stale had not Miss Roland played it.

"THE SMUGGLER'S PRISONER" (Melies), Nov. 7.—A picture with good views of a rocky shore on the western coast, including a picture of seals scared off rocks by people in a row boat. The story is slight but very fair though not new. It is better than any story we've seen today (Nov. 7), but we have missed today's Vitagraph.

"WHEN WEALTH TORMENTS" (Essanay), Nov. 8.—An entertaining picture in comedy vein. It gives Francis X. Bushman a chance to play three characters in quick succession, and the cleverness with which he does it is the best thing in the offering. The story is the not very new one of the washerwoman and her daughter who inherit a very large fortune and the poor sweetheart of the girl who has to use his wits to overcome the mother's suddenly acquired dislike to him and his overalls. The usual fault with this story (we find it markedly in this picture of it) is that it fails to convince. It was for the comedy possibilities in it that the Essanay people produced it. It has pretty sets and pretty dresses. Mildred Weston, when in dainty gowns, takes a lovely picture. Helen Dunbar, as her mother, makes a distinguished looking matron.

"HALF A PINT OF MILK" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 8.—A large audience found good entertainment in this farce of malaprop happenings. It is very amusing.

"THE SCARAB" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 8.—On the same reel. A short but highly entertaining series on the black beetle. He is an industrious worker and very plucky. We see him put up a couple of good scraps with other beetles who want to steal his gleanings. It is fine offering.

"A TRIP UP THE ELBE" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 8.—Also on the same reel. It provides a beautiful and very interesting series of well photographed views. The three on one reel make a desirable release.

"FELIX AT THE BALL" (Lubin), Nov. 8.—A farce in which a torn pair of trousers figures at a ball. It pleased three or four in the audience very much. Others may have laughed less loudly. We found it rather coarse.

"AN ACCIDENTAL MILLIONAIRE" (Lubin), Nov. 8.—On the same reel. It didn't bring out so much laughter and is also a somewhat rough farce.

"A DOCTOR FOR AN HOUR" (Edison), Nov. 8.—A farce in which a tramp finds the clothes and the satchel of a doctor who is in swimming. The doctor had just bought a practice and was not known in the village. The tramp is taken for him and enjoys an hour's practice. There was a good deal of laughter and it seemed to please. The author, Bannister Merwin, doesn't deserve very much credit. Wm. Wadsworth is the doctor, Edward O'Connor is the tramp, Mrs. W. Erskine is the widow of the former doctor. Martin Fuller is a G. A. R. man who takes a dose the tramp prescribes and throws a fit. Alice Washburn is a woman with a cold. Violet Erskine is a young girl with a headache.

"THE FRAUD AT THE HOPE MINE" (Kalem), Nov. 9.—A melodrama depends on its love story, even when it contains the most exciting action. Without a strong love story, it is hard to make any story of villainy convincing, and when, as in this case, the love story is strictly subordinate, the whole suffers. The love is weak and unconvincing, but we have a struggle in the dark with revolver flashes only seen. This can be made very effective by a good sound effect man. We also have in the picture a dynamite explosion in a mine which is an exciting incident. As a whole, being well photographed, it makes a very fair offering.

"FROM THE SUBMERGED" (Essanay), Nov. 12.—There is a fine idea behind this picture; but, nevertheless, it comes short of being a first class offering. It lacks probability as it is handled and, while E. H. Calvert, the leading player, does very well as the rich man, his tramp didn't ring true. It seemed overworked to excite pity which, except when done with great art, is apt to displease. Ruth Stonehouse plays a poor girl who saves the hero from committing suicide. He soon becomes rich and is in love with a rich girl, played by Dolores Cassinelli. On a slumming excursion, he finds that this girl is hard hearted and goes back to lowly life to find the first girl, arriving in time to save her from suicide. Then they are married. We can't help thinking that this double attempt at suicide is too improbable to be effective. There are good slum views; but these are no novelty.

"DAYS OF '49" (Kalem), Nov. 11.—An exciting picture of adventure in the West. Its feature is a spirited attack of a band of Indians on gold seeking prospectors and a train of prairie schooners. The hero and heroine are away from the camp when it is attacked, the attraction being a gold mine, and when they find it impossible to get back, ride away and manage to bring assistance. The story is clearly told, naturally produced and beautifully photographed with large sweeping views. A very good offering.

"THE WAY OF THE MOUNTAINS" (Lubin), Nov. 11.—A dramatically pictured story of love and jealousy in a mountain neighborhood. It pleased a large audience and is good entertainment. Robert Adair plays the preferred lover of a young mountain lassie, played by Mary E. Ryan. George Miller plays the unfortunate lover. The picture shows the working up of a jealousy that culminates in murder and a fight in the woods. The guilty one, the unfortunate lover, is brought to justice. It is a cleverly produced picture; but the photography, especially of the latter scenes, is not so good as it might have been.

"SAVED BY FIRE" (Selig), Nov. 11.—A sensational fire in the tanks of an oil well reservoir suggested this picture. But although it was made to feature this, a really stupenduous blaze, it doesn't show it; for the story is as smoothly told, as naturally conducted and as convincing as the majority of films. As a release, it is good for a feature.

"LINKED TOGETHER" (Edison), Nov. 12.—On the same reel we find this light-hearted farce comedy. The idea is not wholly new; we have seen two young people (lovers at odds) handcuffed together before; but the Edison players in comedy vein are always acceptable and they make a pleasing offering of the situation. Abigail Marshall, the authoress, has added some freshness and it has been well produced. Elsie McLeod plays the girl; Harry Beaumont, the young man; Bigelow Cooper, the girl's dad, a policeman, and Edna Hammel with a dozen little girls, helps out a good deal.

"THE SPAHI'S FIANCEE (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 12.—A hand-colored picture, taken in North Africa, and giving a slight love story of a Spahi, an Arab soldier in the French service. He leaves his fiancee in the city while he goes into the interior with his regiment. In a Sahara city, he meets another girl and, for a while, forgets his fiancee. But she follows and finds him fighting with a French traveler for the other girl, who is a light-'o-love. The Spahi and his fiancee make up. The views of African scenes are very well made and give much interest to the picture.

"THE DINKA CHIEF'S RECEPTION" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 12.—On the same reel is this educational which we might call an instructive comedy. It is a picture of an actual state reception of an African chief who gives a dinner. Perhaps the camera man presented the chief with a woman's petticoat and a plug hat just to have the same in the picture; but we do not think so. Dinka table manners are amusing.

"THE PROFESSOR AND THE LADY" (Vitagraph), Nov. 12.—A comedy in which Chas. Eldridge, the only male professor in Flora Finche's boarding school, makes love to the rather angular proprietress. He hires two tramps for two dollars each to scare her so that he can play hero. They come back at night and his real chance comes and he makes good. It is a slight, but pleasing offering. Mrs. Breuil is the authoress and Ralph Ince the producer. Kate Price, as cook at the school, is even more of a, shall we say hero? than is Prof. Eldridge.

"AQUATIC ELEPHANTS" (Vitagraph), Nov. 12.—On the same reel, a laughable picture of three elephants in bathing.

"GOLD AND GLITTER" (Biograph), Nov. 11.—A character sketch such as many Biographs have been, but not quite up at the remarkably high standard of this company. In the background, we have a fresh and very interesting glimpse, it is hardly more than that, of the lumber business. The story shows how a light-'o-love traveling salesman is cured of his too ready liking for other pretty women and goes home to his wife. In its object, it is serious; but there is comedy of a rough kind in it that comes up in a fight the man has with a little mountain girl's lumbermen friends. He was caught trying to elope with the girl and made to confess to her that he is married. It pleased an East Side audience very much. The photography is good.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 46" (Nov. 11).—A very interesting number. One of the best of its items gives an unusually good view of the Russian royal family taking part in a stately religious ceremony.

"KINGS OF THE FOREST" (Selig), Nov. 11.—A fine two-reel feature picture in which three or four lions are used with far more than usual effectiveness. It really needs a sound-effect growler, which will make it a hair raising offering. The Selig people were the pioneers in this peculiar kind of picture, and we are glad to say that they have distanced all competitors and even gone ahead of their own former work. A point has been reached where the animals appear in the jungle background of the picture and also come out into the foreground, where the action of the story depends upon them, with absolutely convincing naturalness. The effect is startlingly realistic.

The story is simple and not melodramatic. A young pioneer and his wife live with their little girl in the jungle. There is a misunderstanding and the woman, with her child, starts off scross the jungle to her mother's. They are in a bullock cart; but, at night, are attacked by lions; we see three big ones. The husband, who with a friend, the innocent cause of the misunderstanding, follows, rescues them. It is a big picture, a sure feature that will please every audience.

"CAPTAIN BARNACLE, REFORMER" (Vitagraph), Nov. 11.—The Captain Barnacle stories have all been very popular, and while this is not so good as the best, it is better than the average. We miss Bunny's Cap'n Bunce; but though the player who takes the role is not our most amusing friend, he does very well. Cap'n Barnacle is still played by Van Dyke Brooke, who, as of old, also produces the picture. The scenario is by W. L. Tremayne and the story is at least in outline, not new; yet it has newly conceived characters and much freshness. One of its scenes is a thunder storm in which the lightning flashes around the captain's little cabin in a very effective way. A ship has come ashore on the beach and this gives Cap'n Barnacle's protege, the young man whom he has reformed, a chance to prove himself a hero. Afterward Barnacle manages a reconciliation between this lad and his crusty old father who had disowned him for drunkenness. In the cast, Hughie Mack plays Cap. Bunce; Norma Talmadge, Cap. Barnacle's daughter; Courtney Foots, the lad; Robert McWade, the miserly father; and Mrs. Maurice, the mother.

"WATER RATS" (Lubin), Nov. 9.—A fighting chase between cops in a tug and a water rat gang of gunmen in a power boat, is the big feature of this picture and this part of it is fine. Taken as a whole, the story is not humanly convincing; but it is very well put together. Its worst defect, for many audiences, is that it pictures very brutal happenings and is acted more hysterically than usual. It is a love story. The policeman's sweetheart helps a sick gunman. The policeman, later, has a pistol fight with the gang as a whole, on one of the docks. The girl goes for the police, who arrive just after the first policeman's ammunition has given out. Then comes the chase. The ending, where the chief gunman puts the handcuffs on himself just because he finds that the cop is the girl's sweetheart, and so that he can have the reward, is almost impossible.

"THE HAND BAG" (Vitagraph), Nov. 9.—Flora Finch leads in this slight, but laughable farce and gives one of her inimitable character sketches. She loses her hand bag with her cards in it. Rosemary Theby finds it. On a car, a susceptible youth (Frank Bennet) falls in love with her good looks and, when she leaves the newly found bag behind her, he acts as though he has the address of a pretty girl. Flora Finch gets his ardent letter and expects a caller. There is disappointment on both sides, but Flora is not going to let a chance slip without a struggle.

"ARABIAN SPORTS" (Vitagraph), Nov. 9.—A picture taken in Tunis, a French protectorate in North Africa. It shows us a company of several hundred athletes going through graceful exercises before the Bey of Tunis.

"SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, AND ITS SURROUNDINGS" (Edison), Nov. 12.—The photography of this film is markedly in contrast with that in the very recent Edison, "Yellowstone," picture. The opperators complained of the former; they are praising the clearness and good focus of this. It is a very interesting picture.

Independent

"THE BLACKFOOT CONSPIRACY" (Bison 101), Nov. 12.—Pioneers in coonskin caps, the tribe of Blackfoot Indians in the throes of treachery, and warfare fast and furious mark their offering. The plot centers around the imposition of a young Blackfoot on the aged and blind chief, which leads him to usurp leadership of the tribe after the chief's death. But at the last the truth comes out and the feathers of the chief are restored to their rightful owner, the real successor. For realistic effect the fortress was built in a hollow in this picture, thus allowing the Indians to fire directly into it. An instance where too much attention was paid to realism.

"JIM BENTLEY'S ADVENTURE" (American), Nov. 16.—A speedy, typical, Western picture of rough doings. It is fresh in incident rather than in quality. There is a squawman in it and a very pretty child, who has the squaw for step-mother, by strong implication, at least. It is rather characterless.

"THE THIEF'S WIFE" (American), Nov. 18.—The chief thing in this picture is a thief-chase in the best Flying A style, which means that it is as effective and as fresh as the incident, surely no new one, can be made. Jack Richardson is the thief, Pauline Bush is the wife, Warren Kerrigan the sheriff. It is too bad that the photography is not as good as usual in this make of picture, for the backgrounds are plainly very beautiful.

"THE INTRUSION AT LOMPOC" (American), Nov. 14.—Lompoc, as we see it, is a rough little town of the Southwest. Pauline Bush plays the innkeeper's daughter and her chum is Jessaline Von Trump. Warren Kerrigan plays Pauline's lover and Jessaline has a beau, too. Jack Richardson visits the town, black mustache, neat clothes, derby, a dashing black-hearted villain. The girls plainly think him the grandest ever and the two boys disapprove. Down a side-street, in a slatternly doorway, sits a cigarette smoking senorita, good looking in a tough way. Richardson passes and we see that they know each other; a good deal is insinuated and it makes the situation clear. In its development, there is newness rather than freshness; but it is effective. The fate of the villain is plain.

"THE COUNTY'S PRIZE BABY" (Thanhouser), Nov. 12.—A very pretty picture. It contains matter hard to believe possible; but it is well made and acceptably acted and has the Thanhouser hall-mark in the beauty of its scenes. The story's climax comes at a county fair and at its baby show. The prize baby's father, who, long before had separated from his wife, is made judge of babies and awards the prize to the "Thanhouser Kidlet," who deserved it, not knowing that it is his own. The kiddie had merely wandered in. Her mother thinks her lost and is wildly searching the fair grounds among the crowds. The result is a reconciliation. A good, popular picture. Florence La Badie plays the baby's mother.

"BEDELIA AND THE NEWLYWEDS" (Reliance), Nov. 9.—Bedelia has won many a laugh in Reliance films before now. As usual, her doings make a rather rough, but laughably ridiculous farce in which a good deal of crockery is smashed and a good deal of flour and dough spattered about. It has little spontaneity; but it gets over.

"THE DEACON'S SHOES" (Majestic), Nov. 10.—A good but light predicament comedy in which a worthy deacon is made to seem guilty of chicken stealing. His wife had given his old shoes to a tramp. The deacon was soon seen taking the new shoes off in front of his neighbor's coop. The sheriff's blood hound comes straight to the deacon's; but fortunately, the tramp is discovered with the goods.

"HIS COOK LADY" (Majestic), Nov. 10.—On same reel. A much criticised wife employs a prize fighter as cook. He dresses as a woman, cooks some food and makes criticising husband eat it. A gallery picture, but it will please the gallery.

"MAN'S CALLING" (American), Nov. 11.—The situation developed in this picture makes an interesting study; but, although the producer has made the most of his material, it is not very dramatic. It is a one character picture, played by the premier company with Warren Kerrigan in the leading role. We find him as a young man in a lonely cabin on the mountains with his old father. He is fond of reading the Bible and decides to become a monk. At the gate of the monastery, in the valley, he meets a girl who has been to the well for water. He finds another "calling." A well-made naturally acted picture; but not very well photographed. A better title might have been found; it has an unintentional anti-monastic suggestion.

"FOUR HEARTS THAT BEAT AS TWO" (Gaumont), Nov. 21.—The Gaumont producers are apt to set their pictures in beautiful country places; it gives a distinguished atmosphere and permits framing the human part of the stories in lovely scenes. This story suffers now and then in consequence. The little comedy is in truth so slight that the backgrounds almost drown it; but, on the other hand, the backgrounds, as scenics, make it good entertainment.

"THE BROKEN IDOL" (Gaumont), Nov. 19.—Strombolini, a famous Italian tenor, and Yvette, a young and inexperienced girl, are the principal actors in this delicate little comedy. She is infatuated with his voice and his appearance on the stage, but when she sees him on the street as an old gray-haired man with a large family, she is disillusioned and goes back to her old sweetheart. The whole is well presented and will have a strong appeal for those who enjoy finely tempered humor.

"THEIR CHILDREN'S APPROVAL" (Eclair), November 4.—In this clever little comedy Alec Francis, whom we saw a week ago is a stirring tale of the Northwest, proves his versatility. As a drawing room artist, he is the John Drew of the silent drama. A pretty Hudson river love encounter lends charm to this film and the story as a whole is bright and entertaining throughout. Altogether an attractive production.

"A COWGIRL CINDERELLA" (Nestor), November 15.—Aside from its interesting adaptation of the Cinderella lost-slipper idea, this picture is to be commended for some good character work. The part of Abigail, as played by Laura Oakley, helps the picture wonderfully. Western films which tell somewhat conventional stories should pay particular attention to character work, as this gives them individuality. The burlesque of the slipper incident is very amusing. A good film.

"DAD'S MISTAKE" (Nestor), November 13.—This picture has a slow, uncertain beginning, but the latter half tells a strong story. The fond father thinks the new ranch owner loves his fleshy daughter, when in fact he loves the other one. This puts the corpulent girl in an embarrassing situation, and she handled it with just the right touch of pathos.

"GOLDEN HAIR" (Eclair), November 10.—It is an unfortunate situation for a girl with a head of pretty blonde hair to contemplate selling it in order to gain for herself a dowry. Yet the heroine of this picture had this experience. Her lover's father would not accept her as a daughter-in-law unless she had more money, but the hero discovers her intentions in time to prevent the sacrifice. This is a French picture and well portrayed throughout. The father, however, had on too much make-up, in contrast to the others, who appeared in their natural persons.

"CONSTANTINOPLE" (Eclair), November 10. On same reel with above. Timely scenes in the famed city around which the war clouds have been hanging. Instructive and especially interesting just now.

"WHEN CUPID RUNS WILD" (Imp), November 11.—The title to this film is particularly apt, for the love affairs of two young couples run anything but smoothly in it. Ben forsakes Sue and begins paying attention to Florence. Sue and Harold, both jealous, of course, set about to even up the situation. In the end Harold and Sue marry and Ben marries Florence. The two girls, one blonde and the other brunette, are in good contrast, and the parts are well handled.

"THE LIGHTING OF LOVE'S WAY" (Gem), November 12.—There is some powerful drama in this, almost melodrama, but it deserves the more dignified term. Adolph, the hunchback, loving Miles' wife, climbs into the lighthouse and tries to put out the light. The wife struggles with him desperately and Miles arrives just in time to avert disaster, by casting Adolph into the waters below. A few of the scenes are not so clear photographically as they might have been, but they will pass. A strong offering.

"THE HONOR OF THE FIRM" (Eclair), November 12.—A first-rate tale of business life, wherein young Cooper, after succeeding his father as the head of the firm, discharges an elderly employe. This employe, it develops, had promised to look after the young manager and the welfare of the business. He does this, even after being discharged, by bringing about an oil strike on the company's property. The picture would have been stronger without quite so much plot, as certain features were not cleared up properly. The love affair was scarcely necessary at all in this instance. But as a whole it is better than the average business story.

"A WHITE LIE" (Nestor), November 11.—Grace's brother comes to grief in the West after a dissipated career. He is driven out of the town for cheating at cards, but on the plains saves a girl from death by snake-bite. He goes back to town and is shot on sight, before his errand was known. His sister is sent for and a slab of white is erected at his grave, stating that he died a hero. The end is rather prolonged and a little overworked.

"THE GALLEY SLAVE'S ROMANCE" (Rex), November 10.—A strong film, with some good scenes of a French estate and later some views of French prison life. Jean, the galley slave, saves the life of the governor of the prison, almost at the expense of his own. He is pardoned for this and in the end is united with his sweetheart.

"JUST HATS" (Solax), November 8.—The story, such as it is, centers about a youth named Billy, who is hoodoed on the subject of hats. He sits on high silk hats, mashes them in one way and another wherever he goes. At last he gets a job in a hat store and almost breaks the proprietor up with his wholesale destruction of headgear. It is a comic supplement series put in motion.

"BOXING UNDER DIFFICULTIES" (Lux), Nov. 15.—Two men, a white and a negro, box each other clear out of a prize ring, on to the street. They upset restaurant tables, etc., and wind up by falling in a lake.

"THE ADVENTURES OF A TIMID YOUNG MAN" (Lux), Nov. 15.—Much better is this French absurdity, on the same reel. A young cyclist is taken into a strange house, after an accident. He leaves his room, in his pajamas, and cannot get back to it. There is much delightful confusion, and he finally climbs a ladder into a young lady's room. He is about to be made the victim of a forced marriage, but escapes on his wheel.

"HAZEL KIRKE" (Reliance), November 17.—That sterling old romance of love, tears and eventual happiness to all concerned, is of course the subject of a successful film. It runs two reels. The plot is familiar, and will therefore be welcomed, but we have seen this company to better advantage in other pictures. The costuming and general atmosphere of the production did not quite visualize the English nobility. The final reconciliation of Hazel Kirke with her blind father was affecting.

"FLESH AND BLOOD" (Solax), November 15.—This two-reel offering is very good photographically throughout. The story is not the pleasantest imaginable, but it is stirring and there is some good character work in it, particularly that of Lee Beggs as the father. The son, who stole the jewels to please his sweetheart, came to grief at the hands of his own father, who acted as detective in the case. The father then assumes the gilt, to save his son's reputation, but the youth makes a dramatic appearance in the court-room and confesses all. In so doing he redeems himself in his father's eyes.

"WHEN LEE SURRENDERS" (Kay Bee), Nov. 8.—A war drama in two thrilling reels, giving a love story which is pictured mostly against a very realistic and fiercely contested battle. This takes place over a broken cluster of hills and the powder smoke alone that went up in the making of it cost a heap of money. It is shown now and again in full, covering a wide area, but many smaller scenes, details, are thrown in, such as a battery in action, a regiment charging over a stone wall or, in rout, breaking through long grass. The mist of musketry creeps slowly up from along hill crest or from protecting ravine; the shrapnel, bursting in air, leaves its mushroom of smoke to drift away, and the lyddite high-explosive shell is shown throwing up its volcano of dirt or shattering an ammunition wagon and lifting the heavy front wheels and axel high in air. One shell throws horse and rider—a real battle, even in picture-making, is no fun for those who fight it.

The love story is good and, in its realistic setting, is made very effective. It is simple in outline. The wounded Union officer takes refuge in a Southern home and is helped by the heroine. His coat is found in the library by Confederate officers; but he escapes. The battle changes and the coat is found by Union officers who suspect that he has been murdered. In the end, the Union man, with the girl, gets her father out of trouble and, later, the pair are married. A fine picture and a very desirable offering.

"MARY OF THE MINES" (Broncho), November 13.—This film, while excellently acted and containing fine scenic effects, suffers from mixed motives on the part of several characters. Why did the young husband salt his father-in-law's mine? Why did he and his girl-wife quarrel? These questions rise, quite naturally, but they are not explained. It is not known till the end of the film that the young husband is worthy of the girl. Except for these obscure details the picture will pass.

"THE DEACON'S TROUBLES" (Keystone), November 11.—The deacon, as a leading light in the Purity League, starts out to reform the theater. But he falls in love with a Salome dancer and gets in trouble with the other members of the League.

"A TEMPERAMENTAL HUSBAND" (Keystone), November 11.—This picture, on the same reel, is well acted, but the incidents are somewhat confused. Three sets of actors, working at cross purposes, make the action so lively that it keeps the observer busy tracing the plot-thread. It is pictorially good.

"THE PRODIGAL WIFE" (Solax), November 13.—The old story of the indulgent husband and the spendthrift wife in a new setting. At length, when the financial crash is pending, she has a dream before the fireplace, which brings her to her senses, and thus trouble is averted. Such pictures get uncomfortably close to real life and for this reason exert a good influence.

"THE FAITH HEALER" (Reliance), November 13.—This picture play, written by Henry C. Carey, invades that realm of spiritual things which is hard to make convincing. A man, patterned somewhat after the figure of Christ, becomes blind. Another man takes his wife from him. The blind man becomes a faith healer. The lame and physically sick people come to him and are instantly restored to health. But the man who stole his wife becomes paralyzed and the blind man's prayers cannot heal him. There are some good scenes in this, and Irving Cummings in the leading role makes the most of his part.

"THE GYPSY FLIRT" (Crystal), Nov. 10.—Chester Barnett and Pearl White have the leads in a comedy-drama set among pretty woodland scenes.

"MAN WANTED" (Crystal), Nov. 10.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this comedy of a matrimonial agency entanglement.

"A BLACKFOOT CONSPIRACY" (Bison), Nov. 12.—In this stirring picture advantage is taken of a blind chief to induce him to proclaim as his successor another than the one he had in mind. The treachery is discovered, the blind chief is informed, and is about to denounce the conspirators when he drops dead. Through the aid of a band of trappers the cheated Indian is restored to his rights. Mona Darkfeather takes an interesting role in the drama.

"OFFICER 174" (Imp), Nov. 14. The interest in this drama increases steadily right to the climax. There are strong scenes. King Baggot has the part of Officer 174; Jane Fearnley is his wife and Joe Moore and Edith Halderman are the children. It is all well done.

"THE COWBOYS' LEAP YEAR" (Powers), Nov. 13.—This is a comedy; but when a woman cook on a ranch, the only one on the ranch who can cook, makes the threat that she will quit unless she is furnished a husband, the situation becomes serious. That was the way it appealed to the cowboys. There was some fun in the working out of the situation.

"THE TROUBLES AND PLEASURES OF A SAILOR" (Powers), Nov. 13.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this review of the life of a sailor afloat.

"THE BEWITCHED BANDBOX" (Milano), Nov. 16.—A comedy with some camera trick work.

"KELLY ON A TIGHT ROPE" (Milano), Nov. 16.—On the same reel as the foregoing are some good pictures of a rope walker, with a little comedy interjected.

"CAMPING OUT" (Rex), Nov. 14.—Detailing the experiences of three couples camping out, complicated by the appearance of two tramps.

"THE SIREN'S CALL TO DUTY" (Ambrosio), Nov. 13.—A good picture. Its basis is the refusal of men employed in a mill to remain at work because one of their number has been discharged for being late at work, he having been detained by reason of a sick wife. There is a strike. The men send a note to the employer to the effect that unless they hear the siren calling them to work at the usual hour in the morning they will assault the works. This, of course, is silly. There is in the picture a most interesting little girl. She it is who becomes much interested in the cause of the men, and while the trouble is brewing outside the works at the appointed hour surreptitiously pulls the lever which blows the whistle and starts the engine.

"THE LADY LEONE" (Victor), Nov. 15.—In these two reels Miss Lawrence shows her old-time enthusiasm and does much to make the interest in this picture of Old England. Owen Moore has the part of Jack Wilde, the son of a yeoman.

"THE ALTAR OF DEATH" (Kay-Bee), Nov. 15.—The striking feature of these two reels is the photography. The few interiors shown fully match the scenes in the open. The picture, the second part especially, is spectacular. Particularly is this true of the running fight between the soldiers and Indians on a mountainside. Advantage is taken of a narrow pass in the mountains to stage a realistic battle. The picture may be featured.

"FUNNICUS AND HIS DOG" (Great Northern), Nov. 16.—The dog at the wheel of an automobile will make a lot of fun for old and young alike. Also will the scenes in the hospital, where the little animal is treated for his injuries.

"ELEPHANTS IN INDIA" (Great Northern), Nov. 16.—On the same reel as the foregoing are these pictures of elephants in the water, going through tricks with their keepers. The half reel is interesting; the photography is good.

"THE VIRGIN OF THE FIRE" (Reliance), Nov. 16.—A drama of ten thousand years ago. The photography is unsatisfactory, or rather the pictures were taken in the shade of the woods. It may have been the object of the director thereby to minimize the effect of the half-nude participants.

"MISS TAKU OF TOKIO" (Thanhouser), Nov. 19.—Good drama. Little Miss Taku dominates the picture. Her acting is of the best. It is of the sort which not only creates a situation, but through artistry sustains it. Mr. Hale, who directed the picture, also comes in for his share of credit. There was careful attention to the little things that go to make the good film. The photography was of the best Thanhouser quality.

Kinemacolor

"CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION AT TORONTO" (Canadian Kinemacolor).—A picture containing views of the buildings of the exhibition, the Midway, Scotch cadets in musical dance, judging horses, prize animals, a fine review of the Withington Zouaves and many other interesting scenes.

"FRESHWATER AQUARIUM" (Kinemacolor).—In the educational series. Views of many beautiful fish, including among others Alpine newts, golden carp, fresh-water crab and a crab eating a worm.

"STRANGE MOUNTS" (Kinemacolor).—Views of many strange man-carrying animals, llamas, camels, zebras, jackasses, etc.

"FLOWER BATTLE AT NICE" (Kinemacolor).—Many beautiful pictures of the recent carnival.

"THE MIGHTY DOLLAR" (Kinemacolor).—Two reels of English-acted drama. It is noteworthy more on account of the fine scenery and sharp photography than for its dramatic value.

"SUNSET IN EGYPT" (Kinemacolor).—This marvelous scenic, when shown at the Kinemacolor Theater, aroused much enthusiasm, and deservedly so. It was then called "Sunset on the Nile." It is doubtful if a more remarkable picture was ever thrown on a screen. The film has now been incorporated in the regular Kinemacolor programme.

"SCENES IN DELHI" (Kinemacolor).—Views in the new capital of India, among them of vehicles drawn by camels, oxen and horses. Also there are illustrations of some of the more prominent of the arts and crafts, and pictures of many of the prominent bridges, highways and buildings.

"TULIP STUDY" (Kinemacolor).—Showing many varieties of tulips, in various stages of development. Some of the more notable views are of whole fields in waving flowers.

"CURIOS PETS" (Kinemacolor).—Pictures of many animals, mostly wild, including tame serval, kinkajou, Italian squirrel, Russian Teddy bear, pet fox, ferrets, Queen Alexandra's Siamese cat, etc.

WOODWARD RETURNS TO CHICAGO.

Mr. L. A. Woodward, general manager Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, will return the early part of this week to Chicago by way of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Mr. Woodward has spent two weeks in New York City supervising the opening of the new Eastern office, which now is running in full blast under the able management of Mr. Fred A. Clark, formerly New England representative and now Eastern representative at large. The offices are located at 30 East 27th Street and equipped with a large stack of Motiograph machines and supplies. A feature of the new office will be a very complete repair department.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

This is to notify you that the Thanhouser Company has been merged into a new corporation, known as the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

On and after Friday, October 25, 1912, all business of the company has been and will be transacted by and under the name of the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

The policy of the new company remains the same as heretofore.

Respectfully yours,
Thanhouser Film Corporation.

Voltage and Incandescent Lamp Amperage.

OF late there has been a decided tendency to establish isolated light plants, and these plants range in voltage from 60 to 110, the favorite pressure being 50, 60 and 110 volts. This has led to considerable inquiry as to the amperage consumption of incandescent lamps of varying voltage—that is to say, the amperage of a 60-volt, 70-volt or 110-volt lamp necessary to produce a given number of candlepower. In view of these facts I have made an investigation of this subject, with the following results, subject, however, to considerable variation, according to the type of lamp and the efficiency of the individual lamp. The figures as given are based on the ordinary carbon filament incandescent globes. But, before giving figures, let it be understood that the candlepower of any given incandescent lamp will depend upon the wattage it consumes; therefore, the wattage being the product of volts times amperes, it follows that it will require a larger amperage to develop a given candlepower in a 60-volt lamp than in a 110-volt lamp.

The approximate efficiency of 110 to 130-volt lamps is 5 watts per candlepower in ten-watt lamps, 4.15 in twenty-watt lamps, 3.3 in twenty-five-watt lamps, 3.25 in thirty-watt lamps, 3 in fifty-watt lamps and 3 watts per candlepower in lamps of larger size. In 200 to 275-volt lamps the efficiency is 5.9 watts per candlepower in thirty-watt lamps, 4.4 in thirty-five-watt lamps and 3.7 in larger ones. The amperage of lower voltage lamps may be had approximately by dividing the watts by the voltage, thus: Supposing we have a thirty-watt, 60-volt lamp, we divide 30 by 60, which gives us one-half as the amperage consumption of that particular lamp.

Let me again caution you that these figures cannot be depended upon for accuracy. They are approximate only, for the reason that there is a considerable difference in the efficiency of lamps, even though they be the same size and presumably exactly alike.

Rank Work.

Chicago sends in another kick concerning the sub-title faults in one of the films of a certain prominent manufacturer; also of another manufacturer who is constantly offending by printing his films out of center, so that the sprocket holes show on one side or the other.

I have sent the letter to the president of one of the companies in question, and have received reply frankly acknowledging the fault and saying that it has been remedied. You will readily understand that this paper does not desire to publish the names of manufacturers in such a connection as this, unless the manufacturer persists in ignoring complaints. The out-of-center printing has been called to the attention of the manufacturer before. There is no question but what the fault exists, or that it is the result of rank carelessness or ignorance on the part of some employe. Unless this nuisance is remedied it will become the duty of this department to name the offender.

From Vermont.

Burlington, Vt., sets forth his experiences as follows:

> I take pleasure in complying with your request for reports from those having used window glass in the operating room ports (October 19th issue). I have used glass in the lookout port of my operating room for two years past. It has given excellent satisfaction. Before doing this I was obliged to wear glasses to prevent the burning and watering of my eyes. I have made the glass to slide back and forth. Should I change operating rooms, I would immediately install glass in the lookout ports. I have never noticed, in the department, any reference to a water pail. I have been using one for my carbon stubs; also in case of emergency. I am looking for the new Handbook, as the old one was a great educator. I have been operating for the past seven years, but I want one of the new books as soon as they are ready, since I fully realize that I still have something to learn. Our equipment consists of a Power's "Six" with dissolver. There are four houses in this city, and we expect a new theater in the spring, having about 1,400 seating capacity. That is one thing I want the new book for—to get pointers for improvement in the new place.

Many thanks for your report on the glass ports. A metal pail, containing water, in which to deposit carbon stubs is used in all well-regulated operating rooms. Its use is so very common that I suppose no one thought to mention it. Yes, Burlington, I would get the new book before building the new operating room. I think you will find a number of pointers worth several times the price of the book. You are perfectly right in assuming you have something to learn yet, my brother; so have I, and when I get so wise that I know it all I am going to die and go to heaven, because I will then be altogether too good for this world.

From the Mexican Border.

Laredo, Tex., desires information as follows:

> I would like to know what kind of lens to use for a 16-foot, or larger, picture at 105 feet. I do not care to show a small picture. Have tried an Edison No. 3 and a Universal lens, but they do not give satisfaction. Is there some house making special lens for that distance? Have two Edison machines and have tried their lenses.

You do not need any special lens, Texas. The Edison Company should furnish lenses to fit your case, and I have sent your letter to that company. I presume you will hear from them at once. Caliper the width of the aperture of your machines accurately. Multiply the distance from the screen to the lens, in feet, by the exact width of the aperture to the fraction of an inch. Divide this product by the width of picture you desire, in feet, and the result will be the equivalent focus of the required lens. In this case I think you will want about a 5½ e. f. lens, which will give you a 17-foot picture at 100 feet, provided your machine aperture is exactly 15-16 of an inch wide. If it is wider than that, the increase being but .01 of an inch, then the picture will be a little larger, and vice versa. Such a lens can be ordered from any first class supply house, but you should inform them that you want the lens of exactly the focal length you order, or else give them the precise width of the machine aperture, exact length of the throw and the width of picture you want. The lens above named will increase the width of the picture .17 of a foot to each foot of throw; therefore will give a picture .17x105=17.85 feet at 105 feet.

That Curtain Coating.

Michigan writes:

> Notice in your request, in the department, that I supply more information concerning the screen coating furnished by the National Exhibitors, mentioned by me on page 46, October 5th issue. I do not know the receipt for making this coating, nor can I get it. Here is the history of it, as I got it from one of my employers: One of the fellows in Ohio mixed the coating and made a curtain. He then exhibited a sample to the exhibitors of Ohio, during their meeting. The Ohio State Exhibitors' League purchased the receipt and for a time would not allow anyone except their members to use it. Finally, however, it was given to a certain party, from whom my employer secured it, under promise not to give it to anyone else. It is a flesh color and looks like these patent paper towels sometimes used in public wash rooms, only not quite so porous looking. I believe Mr. Neff, president of the Exhibitors' League of America, has the receipt, and possibly it could be secured from him—I do not know. We covered our curtain, which is 18x22, for four dollars.
> And now for a question, and I will close: Why does the waterglass, or whatever the white powder is that comes from carbons, collect more in a Motiograph lamphouse than in any other one? I use a Motiograph lamphouse on one side, and must clean it every day. Along towards closing time my back condenser gets so dirty that I can hardly get light through it.

We thank you for the information set forth. I know of no reason why a Motiograph lamphouse would collect more carbon ash than any other, nor do I believe they do. It may be some peculiarity of that particular lamphouse. Would suggest that you write the Enterprise Optical Co., 564 West Randolph Street, Chicago, describing the case accurately, asking them for advice. That would be the best way in a case of that kind, I believe.

The Jumping Film.

Charles City, Iowa, orders one of the new Handbooks, and puts up the following kick:

> The picture projected by my Motiograph jumps like the dickens. Sent it to my exchange and they put a new upper sprocket, guide rollers, aperture, tension shoes and springs. The intermittent sprocket is new, just put in a short time ago; therefore I cannot see why the picture should jump.

If those propounding questions of this kind would accurately describe the "jump" I could tell them, almost with mathematical certainty, exactly what is wrong. Simply saying that the "picture jumps" is altogether too indefinite. If it moves up and down rhythmically, four times to every turn of the crank, then it means either (a) the intermittent sprocket shaft is bent, or (b) the intermittent sprocket itself is not true. If the movement is sidewise, and occurs four times to each turn of the crank, then the intermittent sprocket shaft has end play and this occurs once every time the sprocket goes around, and so on through half a dozen things, each of which produces a different kind of movement. Describe the jump accurately, Charles City, and I can probably aid you.

That Ground Detector.

Conneaut, Ohio, writes:

> Regarding those ground detectors, concerning which you desire information, will say that the lamps do burn at half candlepower, but, in case of a ground, one will burn at full candlepower, while the other goes out. I wrote Mr. Chambless to send one of his attachments for your inspection. It would be to his interest to do so. When I read Erie's questions in October 26th number it made me blush to think I lived so close to that town; nevertheless there are competent operators in Erie. I believe a great many operators are troubled with condenser breakage simply because they open the lamphouse door too quickly after shutting off the arc, but of course if a man only has one machine this cannot very well be avoided. What you say about the operator keeping his eye on the picture is the gospel truth.

Many thanks for your explanation of the ground detector. I know it sounds funny, but nevertheless it is a fact that after reading your explanation I remembered the thing myself. I do not know whether I had read the description of its action in a book somewhere years ago, or had one explained to me; but anyhow I had forgotten all about it. For the benefit of those who do not know what we are talking about, will say that the ground detector in question is made by attaching two ordinary incandescent lamps, of the feed-wire voltage, between two wires of a circuit, running another wire from a point between the two lamps to a known ground, such as a water pipe. The action is then as described by Conneaut, and a ground thus instantly makes itself manifest. I have not received the device from Mr. Chambless. Yes, it is to the benefit of any manufacturer who has a really good appliance to send one to this department for inspection; of course, on the other hand, it is not to the benefit of those who are putting out something which is not good.

Intermittent Action.

Dallas, Tex., propounds the following question:

> We often read statements of the various manufacturers of machines, in which they set forth the fact that the speed of their intermittent is thus and so. They seem to have the idea that the faster the speed of the intermittent movement the better—in other words, there is great advantage in fast intermittent movement. Will you kindly explain why this is so—if it is so?

Yes, Dallas, the speed of the intermittent movement is a very important consideration—a very important one, indeed. So much so that it will justify a rather elaborate explanation of the whole proposition, in which several things are involved. When you are running your machine at 60 turns of the crank per minute you are showing 16 pictures every second—that is to say, one foot of film is passed through the machine each second, and on that foot of film there are exactly 16 photographs, every one of which must be pulled down by the intermittent movement, stopped in front of the aperture, exposed and moved out of the way, giving place to the next succeeding picture, which complete operation must take place in exactly 1-16 of one second, or 16 times each second, or 960 times each minute. Now, this period of time (1-16 of a second) is taken up by two separate, distinct operations, viz.: (a) The moving of the film down, thus taking away one picture and substituting the next one, during which time the light is absolutely shut off from the screen by the revolving shutter; (b) the exposing of the picture to the light, and its projection to the screen, during which time the lens is open—that is to say, is uncovered by the shutter. Now, if you will stop a moment, Dallas, and apply your mind to this proposition, I think you will see the point. You have two operations to perform, and a given period of time in which to perform them, viz., 1-16 of one second. If the intermittent movement is very slow and the film completes its movement, displacing one photograph and substituting the next in 1-32 of a second, then we shall also have 1-32 of a second during which the picture will be exposed to the light and projected to the screen. We shall therefore have one-half of the total 1-16 of a second for the actual projection of the picture, and an equal space of time for the movement of the film—one-half of the time the picture will be on the screen, and one-half of the time when the screen will be dark. All this means that, with such an intermittent movement, the shutter must cut essentially 50 per cent. of the light with a single blade.

Let us suppose we have an intermittent movement so fast that the movement of the film is accomplished in 1-64 of a second. Then we shall have one-fourth of the total time occupied in changing the film, and three-fourths occupied in projecting the picture, which would give us 75 per cent. of light and 25 per cent. of darkness, but for the fact that a flicker blade must be added to the shutter in order to eliminate the objectionable flashes of darkness, known as "flicker." If we can so construct our geneva—that is to say, give it a speed which will allow us to have three blades to an outside shutter, each one having essentially the same width, and still get 50 per cent. of the light—then we have secured about everything that can be accomplished with an intermittent movement, since that is as fast as the strength of the film stock itself will stand; and the shutter itself will practically, under these conditions, eliminate all the flicker. The speed of the intermittent is, as a purely mechanical proposition, almost without limit—that is to say, it could be made very, very fast, but the faster the speed the stronger must be the tension applied through the medium of the tension springs; hence the added strain on the film mounts up about in inverse proportion as the speed is increased, and with the condition above named the limit has about been reached. I trust, Dallas, I have made this matter reasonably clear to you. If not, then write me again, and I will try to explain the thing further.

More Canadian Views.

Chesley, Ont., writes, saying that he is much pleased with our comments, October 19th issue, on the Ontario license proposition; also sends a clipping he has inserted in the local papers, calling attention to the evils of excessive license. Says he would like to read more Canadian news in the paper.

You will be able to read more Canadian news, Chesley, when the Canadian friends wake up and supply us with more. If we were to send reporters, or have representatives all over the country, the Moving Picture World would cost you several times $3 a year. As it is, we are only able to supply it at that price at an actual loss, so far as the actual subscription is concerned, and for the news part of things we must depend largely upon our readers. As to the clipping, those things do a certain amount of good, but I am a firm believer in calling a spade a spade, and I want to say right now that the imposng of a $75-a-year tax on the use of a projection machine is nothing more nor less than a swindle. It is robbery, pure and simple. Why not put $2, or $10, or $1,000, or any other sum which happened to strike the whim of the authorities on the piano? What is an "authority," anyway? Merely the man hired by the people to perform certain duties for them. They might also slap on $50 a year on the sidewalk, and charge the manager $6 per annum for each lead pencil he carries. Twenty-five dollars a year would be a trifling sum as a tax for the paint on the walls, and if they could only put, say, a $1.69 tax on each hair the manager has on his head they might succeed in developing a race of bald-headed managers. Of course, all this sounds like a joke, but there is just as much reason and common sense in any one of these taxes named as there is in assessing a $75 tax, or any other tax, for using a projection machine. If the Canadian people are so infernally hard up, why don't they instruct their representatives, "the authorities" or "government," to purchase a brace of shooters and go out and get the coin in the good old-fashioned Dick Turpin way. A $75-a-year tax on a projection machine is about as near to it as they could get and not actually turn highwaymen.

No Quarrel.

The accompanying picture shows the new Majestic Theater, Greenwood, S. C., which has recently been opened. Mr. George L. Wilson, whom I presume it its manager, writes:

> We have been in Greenwood two years, in the old Majestic, a small house; have just completed the new Majestic and moved into it last week. You will note it is next door to a church (Baptist).

> Just west is another church (Presbyterian), the same being but two doors above us. The house seats 700; inclined floor clear to the curtain; mirroroide screen and two machines. The operating room is well arranged and is 14 x 16 feet, with a 24-inch flue through to the roof. I find the World is a great help to me, especially the projection and advertising departments, both of which I have used to advantage. The fact that we are situated as we are, without opposition on the part of the churches, shows what the picture business has grown to in popular favor when it is conducted as we have conducted it here—clean in every respect. We have built up a growing trade in a town of 7,000, though we have had several competitors who have run airdomes with cheap vaudeville. We have stuck to the pictures and the opposition has fallen by the wayside, so we are by ourselves once more.

There is a lesson in the picture of a theater situated between two churches. As neighbor Wilson says, the moving picture business has grown into immense popularity with the public, both church-going and otherwise; wherever it is cleanly and decently conducted. There is, however, a certain type of manager who covers the front of his theater with flamboyant advertising, in the shape of many flaming, colored posters, depicting murder scenes, burglaries, hold-ups, and about every form of crime he can secure to place before his patrons. Such houses are rapidly disappearing, either being put out of business by the authorities, or left severely alone by the public. Vaudeville is the greatest burden that the moving picture has to bear. Many a selfish exhibitor has introduced it with the expectation of driving his competitor out, only to find that vaudeville is somewhat of a boomerang which knocked him out first. We secretly trust neighbor Wilson's business will continue to prosper, and it will, too, so long as he continues to pursue his present policy.

Millimeter.

St. Louis, Mo., asks what diameter of carbons is meant when the same is expressed in millimeters. For his benefit, will say that millimeters divided by 25.4 equals inches, or millimeters multiplied by .03937 equal inches. In other words, a millimeter is 1/25.4 of an inch. A ⅝ carbon is 16 mm in diameter; a half an inch carbon is 13 mm in diameter; a 14 mm carbon is 9/16 and a 15 mm carbon is 19/32 of an inch in diameter. Unquestionably, St. Louis, the millimeter measurement has distinct advantages as applied to carbons, since the division by an eighth of an inch, such as we have in this country, is much too large. If inches are to be used we should use thirty-seconds instead of eighths.

Beeswax

Shawnee, Okla., contributes the following valuable information:

> Enclosed find money order for $2.50 for a copy of the new Handbook. Operators using motors and round belts will find beeswax to be the best belt dressing there is. Patent dressings I have discovered will rot the belt. Oil will not stick to or penetrate a belt coated with beeswax, and it may be run very much looser. Belts should pull from the under side rather than the upper side of the pulley, since it increases the arc of contact by allowing the top of the belt to sag. I find that a belt hook will give much better satisfaction if not closed down so that it clamps the leather.

I call this valuable information, clearly and concisely set forth. The thanks of myself and our readers are due to Shawnee for contributing the same. And now, brothers, I want to ask a favor, viz.: Make your letters as concise as you can without injuring the sense. The department mail has become so large, and our space has been necessarily somewhat restricted; therefore, I am constantly confronted with the absolute necessity for boiling down correspondence, while much of it cannot be published at all. I want to give you all a show in the department, so far as possible, therefore make your letters as short as you consistently can.

Gear Compound.

Mr. William Mason, New York City, sends a sample of plumbago gear compound, which he says he can furnish at the rate of five pounds for $1.25. He requests me to try it on a machine. I have not done so for the very simple reason that when spread on paper the compound feels gritty and is evidently not a perfect lubricant, therefore without knowing what it is composed of I could not give it my recommendation. In fact, I doubt if there is anything except ground mica which could be mixed with graphite or plumbago to advantage. The cheapening of the lubricant is a secondary matter. Seventy-five cents worth of high grade graphite, if properly and economically used, will last for months, therefore why seek to cheapen it? Sorry, friend Mason, but I do not believe your proposition is a good one.

Lenses.

Little Rock, Ark., writes:

> What size condenser would you advise for spotlight at a distance of 100 feet; also for projecting 20-foot picture same distance? Local Union No. 204 is in good condition.

A lens 6 inches in diameter, having an 11-inch focal length, would be best for the spotlight, Little Rock, but the ordinary spotlight lamphouse would not allow you to pull your lamp back a sufficient distance to get a small spot with such a lens. If you can have an extension put on your lamphouse you will get the best results with the lens named; otherwise a lens 5 inches in diameter, of very short focal length, say 4 inches, would be best. I would advise two 7½, or one 7½ and one 6½ lens for the projection machine, whichever gives the best results.

Denial.

In a recent number we published a letter from Jackson, Mich., in which an operator complained of the treatment received from his employer, a Jackson exhibitor. A letter has just been received from the said employer, in which the charges made by the operator, Mr. Fred Smith, are denied, and the matter contained in the letter is not at all creditable to Mr. Smith, who, it seems, did not state the facts as they really were. The employer writes a very courteous letter, and seems to have set matters forth about as they are. Our purpose in mentioning this matter is to say that we are absolutely opposed to the operator being required to get films, put up posters and do other similar work, which is entirely outside of his duty as an operator. We are opposed to this regardless of whether the operator takes a position understanding he will be expected to do these things or not. That is entirely beside the question. We are fighting for high-class projection. We are bending every energy, through this department, to bring about high-class work in the operating room. This, however, can only be brought about when high-class men are employed as operators. You know, Mr. Manager, and I know, that no man of real brains and ability is going to act as general theater chambermaid, combining in one position the office of errand boy, bill poster, operator, etc. Hire an operator, and let his work be confined to operating, but require of him absolutely first-class service, and do not stand for anything else. The Jackson manager writes, as I have said, a very courteous, sensible letter. He therefore ought to be a man of too much good judgment and common sense not to grasp the idea I am trying to convey.

Condenser Breakage.

Philadelphia sends in a very complete statement of the conditions surrounding his stereopticon, in which he is breaking condenser lenses every night. He is using a Lubin lamphouse. After carefully reading the letter I can see only three things to suggest, viz.: Be sure the ventilation in the top of the lamphouse is open and perfectly free. Cut some asbestos rings and place between the edges of your condensers and the metal, so that the lens does not touch metal at any point. Condenser breakage is a very, very difficult proposition, and one which often is very baffling. I have had cases of condenser breakage that I could do nothing with, even when right there on the ground, though that does not happen very often. You might also try drilling a row of ⅛-inch holes in the lamphouse wall just over the condenser casing. This has been known to stop condenser breakage, though I would not like to guarantee it. Is there any ventilation in the condenser mount itself? If not, then I would drill some holes in the mount. I am sorry, Philadelphia, but this is about all the advice I can offer you, as you seem to have tried everything else.

Length of Throw.

New Haven, Conn., propounds the following proposition:

> We are completing our new theater, and the question of the installation of the machine and operating room is now before us. Our building is 96 feet long, and we thought it advisable, in order to eliminate the flicker due to the motion of the film, that we suspend the operating room from the rafters, in the center of the building, at a distance of, say, 40 feet from the screen. Our idea in this is that any irregularity of the film would not be so greatly magnified on the screen, as would be the case if the beam of light were, say, twice the length, in which case, we reasoned, any irregularity would be magnified more than double. We have, however, been told by others in the business that this is not true, and that the longer the throw the less is the flickering so produced, provided the screen is of the same size. We therefore respectfully refer the matter to your department for advice.

Your ideas, New Haven, are entirely wrong. In the first place you speak of a flicker, which is the effect of flashes of darkness on the screen, due to the revolving shutter of the machine. With this the throw has absolutely no connection whatever. The length of the throw would have nothing whatever to do with the magnification of any jump in the film which might occur through poor perforation or from any other cause other than a certain kind of vibration in the machine itself due to the floor not being solid. The only case in which the vibration of the picture would be magnified on the screen would be where the whole machine vibrated in such manner as to cause the entire beam of light to move up and down after the fashion of a lever with the front legs of the machine as a fulcrum. To make this matter more clear let us suppose you set the machine 100 feet from the screen, and then cause the whole machine to vibrate straight up and down 1-16 of an inch. In this case you would have a movement on the screen of 1-16 of an inch, utterly regardless of whether the throw be 100 feet or 20 feet. Let us, on the other hand, suppose that you set the machine 100 feet away from the screen, and then, with the front legs resting on the floor, would raise the back legs 1-16 of an inch; you would then have a very great movement on the screen, and that movement would be very much greater than it would be were the machine 40 feet from the screen. Do you see the point?

However, you should have a perfectly rigid operating room floor, so that nothing of this kind will occur. I would by all means advise you to locate your operating room at the rear of your theater. A 90 or 100-foot throw will give you far better results than you can get at 40, provided the picture be of ordinary size. You could project a picture 8 feet wide better at 40 than you could at 100, but you can project a 12-foot or larger picture much better at 100 feet than you can at 40, due to the fact that short focal length lenses seldom are perfect, and due, further, to the fact that the short focal length lenses used on short length throws require an extra wide blade to the shutter, if it be an outside shutter machine, which produces flicker and cuts off an additional percentage of the light.

I trust I have made this matter clear to you, New Haven. I see that your knowledge of such things is weak, and would therefore suggest that you forward $2.50 to the office of the Moving Picture World at once. You will receive in return therefor the new Handbook just as soon as it is off the press, and this book will explain this matter to you (on page 71), as well as hundreds of others, and be worth many times its price.

Motiograph Manufacturers Make Important Move.

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Co. has opened a New York office at 30 East Twenty-third Street. The branch office began operations November 1st. This office will be under the management of Mr. Fred A. Clarke, who is well known in this territory. Not only is it intended as a sales office, but there will also be, in connection, a complete repair shop, in which Motiograph mechanisms can receive the same expert attention accorded at the home factory in Chicago. The new office will carry a complete line of Motiograph machines and a complete stock of repair parts. The Enterprise Optical Co. extends, through the department, a cordial invitation to managers, operators and others who may find it convenient to visit the new office, in which the 1913 model Motiograph may be seen.

Isolated Plant.

Mr. B. L. Noyes, M. D., treasurer of Stonington Opera Co., Stonington, Me., contributes the following:

> Just as soon as I get time I will write you more fully of a plant for supplying moving picture illumination which excels anything I have ever seen proposed or tried for that purpose, being the most reliable, effective and satisfactory source of electrical energy extant. With this plant all worry is ended. Briefly, it consists of one 7½ h. p. gasoline engine, governor type; one 5 k. w. d. c. 115-volt shunt wound generator or dynamo; switchboard with one double-reading storage battery, 50-ampere meter; a d. c. 150-volt voltmeter with necessary switches, rheostat and 50-ampere fuses; a lead and acid storage battery, consisting of 40 cells (averaging 80 volts), each with seven plates (three positive and four negative) 7½x7½ inches. The battery alone will supply an arc for an average of three hours, and no interference will result at any time the engine should be started up to run in conjunction with it. Gasoline plants alone are too capricious and undependable to warrant calling an audience of 500 people together for an entertainment which might be a fizzle at any time on account of some minor break on the part of the mechanism. Again, the storage battery maintains, as a governor, a constant, unvarying voltage on the mains, no matter how bad the engine behaves. This is the ideal plant. We have never lost a second's time yet. If one wishes incandescent lights, order 75-volt bulbs. The extra five volts take off the dull red rays of the filament and whiten the light. We made our own storage cells and cast our own grids.

We will be glad to have a complete, circumstancial description of your plant, friend Noyes, and just how you use it. As I understand the matter, you run from the storage battery altogether, merely using the engine and dynamo to charge the same. Of course this would make a very excellent arrangement in some ways, though I should suppose it would be very costly. I would like to have complete data as to the cost of such a plant, the cost of its upkeep and the cost of operation per hour. I cannot agree with you that a properly constructed gasoline plant is unreliable. Of course the storage battery introduces an absolutely dependable element, not otherwise present, but I believe a good many users of gasoline plants will have more or less emphatic remarks to make as soon as they read your charges of lack of dependability. I do not understand why you have a 115-volt generator. You could not feed 70-volt lamps with a dynamo of that pressure, and you would have to introduce resistance, which is waste, to charge the batteries.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IT has been repeatedly contended in these columns that the newspapers of the country were doing the motion picture business a gross injustice in throwing upon the shoulders of the exhibition places and their proprietors the responsibility for the misleading of young people. The injustice was aggravated by the fact that the papers added to the reports of cases that arose from time to time editorials, tending to provoke public condemnation and official action against the business as a whole, and the additional fact that the reports and comments were based wholly upon the accusing statements without the slightest efforts to verify them by investigating the designated places, or getting the statements of the owners.

For a long time these plainly biased reports worked the greatest kind of hardship upon the picture business in creating a distrust on the part of the more respectable class of people whose patronage was being sought and depended upon to help raise the business to the standard it has since attained. The people recognized that the pictures afforded an interesting, pleasing and instructive form of entertainment, but they feared the contact of themselves and children with the exhibition places and certain patrons and employees in them. One could hardly blame the people. The newspapers seized every opportunity to stamp the houses as places of moral destruction and it seemed that anything that would tend to the reverse was studiously suppressed. If a girl became wayward she blamed it upon associates with whom she became acquainted in a picture theater. If a boy was caught stealing, or doing something else wrong, he claimed he was impelled to commit the act by an impression made upon his mind by a motion picture he had seen.

In some cases where girls went astray the statements, unfortunately, proved true. The charges were substantiated and the accused parties were convicted and punished. In most of the cases careful investigation showed that the excuses given by the young people were mere subterfuges, but this was never learned through the press, and the convictions stood alone to keep the picture houses under a most serious handicap which, it must be conceded, was not removed until the better class of people became interested in the pictures through the establishment of the higher grade of theaters. It is quite true that the owners of the nickelettes had worked hard in the meantime to better conditions by discharging and refusing to hire the class of people charged with being responsible for the conditions, and also tried to keep such people out of their places, but with the fearful public their efforts had little effect. With the newspapers they had none. But when the larger and more pretentious theaters took up the pictures and the better class of people commenced to adopt them as a form of entertainment the press was forced to admit that picture houses were not established to destroy the morals of the young, as they had repeatedly declared.

All the small exhibitors contend, and very truthfully so, that the big theaters are their enemy on account of the exhibitions being on a larger scale at a comparatively small increase in price. But, for the reasons already given, they should take their hats off most cheerfully to the big fellows for restoring and bringing to the business a confidence and patronage which it is more than probable could not have been accomplished with the small houses alone in the field fighting the conditions of the times.

Unfortunately we cannot say that the change wrought is as complete as desired. There is still a disposition on the part of some reporters to get a slap at the pictures whenever possible, taking only one version of the stories that come to them, "Gyp the Blood" and others of that notorious class have been prominently mentioned as having worked some of their nefarious schemes through the agency of picture houses and now a part of the press is making all the use possible of a case in which a bomb was exploded at the exit of a picture house on First Avenue. It is charged that the bomb was thrown by a jealous youth who was in love with the young woman pianist in the place. The "movies" are brought prominently into the reports.

Of course the affair reflects no more upon the picture house where it occurred, no matter how hard the reporter may try to work it that way, than it would reflect upon a church if the young woman was an organist there and the bomb had been thrown with the same reported motive. But why not be fair and in the same report state with equal prominence, and with truth, that an attempt had been made to blackmail the pianist and the proprietor of the place had a man sentenced to prison for seven years on a charge of writing threatening letters to him? No, that would not suit the purpose. The reporter had to get in "movie theater" and "annoyer of girl," with obvious intent.

Now for an illustration showing that the poor "movies" are frequently used to cover a "multitude of sins" when they have absolutely no connection with affairs. I was in the office of a motion picture company one day this week when a detective entered and produced a postal card for identification. It was one of the ordinary cards bearing no printed matter or address usually on cards used by business houses. It was addressed to a girl residing in the upper part of this city. It stated that her application to pose in pictures had been favorably considered and requested that she report for work. The name signed was that of the company upon whom the detective called. The manager pointed out to the detective that his company used only postal cards with its name and address printed on them, that the postmark showed the card produced was mailed at a postal station remote from the station in which the company's mail is deposited, and that when notifying applicants either printed forms or letterheads are used. The detective then told his story: "The girl to whom this card was sent is young and very much stage struck. We know she did apply to your company for a position. The day after she received this card she left the house, telling her mother she would call on your company and take the position. That afternoon she telephoned her mother, stating that she had the job and would not be home, as they were to stage a picture that would take all night. The following day she returned home. Every morning she went out, presumably to pose in the pictures, and returned at night. Today she again telephoned her mother that she would not be home on account of another picture that would take all night. The second message made the mother suspicious and I was called into the case. Yes, I have had many cases of the same kind. It is too bad that the names of reputable concerns should be drawn into such affairs, but it is one of those things we cannot guard against. These kids used to blame social affairs, theaters and other things when found out, but now it's the pictures.

The stand the Moving Picture World has taken against the proposition of a tobacco company to promote the sale of its cigarettes by issuing with them coupons entitling the holder to admission to moving picture theaters should have the hearty approval of every exhibitor in the country. A strong anti-cigarette sentiment prevails, particularly with reference to their use by children and youths, and the instant moving picture exhibitors lend a hand to any scheme that will tempt the young to purchase cigarettes, which naturally will be followed by their use, a revolt against such exhibitors will arise that will discount in effect anything they have heretofore been obliged to contend with. The statement that the tobacco company would not dare to make a like offer to the regular theaters carries some weight with it and reminds me of a scheme a certain theater in this city adopted with dire results some years ago. The manager placed in barrooms, sets of tickets to which customers could help themselves. Upon turning in at the box office twenty-five cents with each ticket the holder secured a good reserved seat in the orchestra. The result may be easily imagined. The scheme brought among the better class of patrons a class of people who soon had the house to themselves and—zip! up went the house. The schemes are not alike but the effect will be the same.

O. F. DOUD GOES WEST.

Mr. Omer F. Doud, editor-in-chief of the scenario department of the American Film Manufacturing Company at Chicago, leaves next week for the Santa Barbara office, where he will be in touch with the producers at that point. "Flying A" fans can well look forward to some great features when once the breezy Western atmosphere gets into Doud's system—he is some scenario writer as it is.

The Moving Picture Educator

A TEACHER SPEAKS A GOOD WORD FOR MOVING PICTURES.

Children Benefit Even from the Most Hair-Raising Ones, She Says.

(From the New York Tribune.)

IMAGINE a school teacher, a high-minded, middle-aged, what the humorists would call "typical" schoolmarm, coming to the defence of moving pictures! It would be putting it mildly to say that the little circle of the woman teacher's friends were amazed. They would as soon think of approving of a Spanish bullfight as of the average melodramatic "movies."

"I don't care if they are cheap and sensational and full of criminal suggestions," she maintained. "They educate the children more than we do. I've been noticing lately that the children seem ever so much more intelligent than they used to a few years ago before there were moving pictures. They have a fund of general information. They realize that the big world is quite as live and interesting a place as the corner lot behind the billboards. In the old days when we asked a class about the Desert of Sahara it was a large pink place on the map and its chief products were camels, which meant to the boy's mind the dirty, mangy creatures with silly eyes he once saw at the 'zoo.' If the boy remembered the pictures of the desert in the geography book, it was with the secret scorn which your real boys feels for 'book learning'—about so much of it must be endured lest greater unhappiness accrue not from the lack of it, but from his parents' knowledge of his lack of it. A description of the Desert of Sahara was not of vital interest in his life like the corner lot or the ice wagon. It was something to be forgotten as soon as school was over. Rather would he die than let his fellows know he was interested in it.

"Nowadays, the Desert of Sahara comes into his life on the tide of his most vital interest. It is not a dead thing in school. It is a 'movie.' His young eyes bulge with terror for the fleeing robber or the kidnapped heiress as the sandstorm rages, while the camels stagger along in the face of the blinding, swirling gale. The next time 'Timmy' has a lesson about Sahara he will have a vivid mental picture of the place.

"Oh, yes, I know you all say he shouldn't be seeing stories of fleeing robbers or kidnapped heiresses even to help out his sense of geography. I say he forgets the kidnapper and remembers the sandstorm.

"Then there are the Indian pictures, full of murders, and horse thieving, but they don't hurt the boys, and they do stimulate his interest in history. I admit that pictures of schoolboys engaged in murder and horse thieving would be demoralizing, but not pictures of Indians. What the red man does is as distinctive as his skin and no more to be copied. Yes, a few boys will copy it, just as a few 'went to the bad' from reading dime novels, but the vast majority of the youngsters who used to sneak away behind the barn with the forbidden literature took it out in reading. They satisfied their desire to be wicked and they stimulated their imagination at the same time.

"There is another kind of motion picture, which is even more useful to the school teacher than the stories of wild adventure in foreign lands, but I admit it may not be so popular, and therefore, not so long remembered. This is the purely educational one, the one which depicts the processes of tea and coffee raising, showing the native workers going out to the fields, and the packers loading into ships at strange looking foreign wharves.

"Just the other day we came to the cotton lesson in commercial geography. That stupid little Sallie Schmidt, who can't remember anything in the book, actually raised her hand and informed me that cotton was white on the bushes, like snowballs, and she knew it grew in the South 'cause it was darkies that was a-pickin' it in the movin' picture show.'

"These children pick up all kinds of knowledge at the 'movies' that they would never get anywhere else. They don't read books. A few are devoted patrons of the fiction department in the public library, but the great majority prefer to be screaming and racing in the street to sitting quietly in a library under some stern woman's eye. It's too much like school. However, they will all sit patiently through an instructive number of a theater programme and so cannot help but imbibe a little information."

The listening group admitted there might be something in the speaker's views, but they looked unhappy. Finally, the pert young thing came out with it.

"That's all very well," she said, "but what good does it do to have the children know things if they are asleep all the time. That little Sally is the palest, crossest child in the room, and twice this week she has gone sound asleep in my class at 10 o'clock. These children are up until late almost every night in the week. In the good old days they got more sleep, even if they didn't know so much. If only—it's a big 'if,' I know—if only the mothers would make the children go to the moving pictures on Friday and Saturday evenings, and put them to bed the rest of the time, it would be very useful and instructive."

Having repeatedly called attention to the lack of knowledge on the part of the average teacher as to the value of the moving picture, it is a pleasure to print the above article exactly as it appeared in the New York Tribune of Oct. 7th.—Ed. M. P. E.

"ON THE MOVE."

Under the title "The Movies on the Move" an article appears in "Everybody's Magazine" which is written to show the advance of the moving pictures. The first strong statement brought forward is that before the moving picture was ten years old, Yankee ingenuity saw its value and "took it out of the recreation class and put it to hard labor." This "hard labor" is shown to be in its relation to educational purposes in public schools. Much in the article referred to leads us to believe that the writer must be a reader of the educational features of the Moving Picture World. The reference to the film as an "Alladin carpet" is timely and striking; geography as a textbook is "doomed," now that pupils can see in full those things and places they before could only see in a very limited part. History is made "alive again" by the production of events in all ages. Industrial films are referred to as showing "how things are made" for the advantage of vocational studies.

Greater credit is given to moving pictures because of the "more intangible things taught." Reports from teachers are quoted to show that literature and morals, hitherto difficult subjects to handle, have now been given a freedom and scope impossible before. The whole scope of moving picture facilities so often detailed here, is reviewed in this article and therefore cannot fail to help the Moving Picture Educator in the spreading of that work to which it is dedicated. In its wide "moving" as a great and universal factor, the writer in "Everybody's" asks: "Was there ever so versatile a servant of mankind as the moving picture?" A remarkable and timely question, if anything a little tardy but singularly appropriate and most thoroughly well earned. When next the writer of that article sees fit to chronicle his views of the moving picture, he will not refer to them as simply "moving" but rather as making progress by leaps and bounds.

AMERICAN ORGANIZES NEW SANTA BARBARA COMPANY.

American Film Manufacturing Company organizes a new stock company at Santa Barbara, Cal., in addition to the company operating at that point. Mr. William J. Bauman, producer at Chicago studio, has been transferred to the coast and in conjunction with Mr. Allen Dwan, the producer at Santa Barbara, will produce some excellent features during the coming months.

"At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs"

SO now we know how we lost Little Mary! In Forty-second Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, are eight theaters—perhaps there is no one block in the world that, for concentration of dramatic temples, can match it—all of the stage. Yet there is one more—one devoted to pictures. This darkened oasis in a desert of footlights is the Bryant, the proprietor of which takes especial pride in his house. He is his own doorman; he knows all his people; he greets them going in and bids them good-bye when they leave. Suspended on the wall by the entrance is a telephone connecting with the operating booth just above. The managerial eye is constantly on the screen. If, at any time, there is detected anything indicating the slightest inattention on the part of the operator the instrument is immediately put into use.

But, to get back to Little Mary. Among the patrons of the Bryant are many theatrical persons and personages. In the latter category is David Belasco. Oftentimes Mr. Belasco drops in, as frequently as three times a week. It requires no stretch of the imagination to picture his keen eye scanning the screen for bright spots—making his own selections of stars uninfluenced by studio politics or proprietary pull. Let the humble screen artist take heart. It is possible that he or she cannot compel from the director the recognition of real merit. There is no knowing, however, when some theatrical magnate will discover what the lesser lights have failed to note. Then all be different.

Now do you see What Happened to Mary?

Others who call at the Bryant are members of the Weber and Fields Company, all the stars from the Hippodrome, including among the latter as one of the regulars, George Adams, the successor of Marselline; Marselline and his vaudeville partner also frequently drop in; Willie Collier, Arthur Hammerstein, and, on occasions when he is in New York, Oscar himself.

Here's something new in moving pictures—and by the same token that must also be something new under the sun. Paris Eclair is making the first multiple reel comedy on record. No sooner said than retracted! Vitagraph has just put over a two-reel comedy in "Billy's Burglar." At any rate, Eclair's is three reels, and that probably is comedy record. It will be "The Girl from Maxim's." It is said to abound in irresistible humor. Following it will be Franz Lehar's "The Merry Widow" in three reels and a dramatization of Alphonse Daudet's "Sapho" in four reels. Also there will be issued soon the third of the "Zigomar" series, in three reels.

Edwin August is to star for the Universal. He reported for work last Monday. This confirms rumors that have been current in the trade that President Laemmle and the late Lubin leading man were in consultation. Congratulations are in order—not only to the two parties to the immediate contract, but also to the Universal's expanding public. Mr. August will bring strength to the "program"; he will do even more and better than that—he will bring diversity. The Universal prides itself on its cohesive and balanced schedule. Here is an opportunity to take advantage of Mr. August's talent and experience in costume work. It is said that as yet the brand under which Mr. August will work has not been decided. There can be no question that if it should be really determined to depart from the cut-and-dried style of film nomenclature and take, say, such a name as "Costume Players," the result would justify the step. The Universal has a clear field at present for such plays; if the doubt as to the title of the brand shall be thus resolved, advantage will be taken of the popular regard for dramas and comedies that savor of the old-time stage.

Word comes from the coast that "The Padre's Gift," the Universal production, supervised by Thomas Ricketts, abounds in beautiful natural settings—the best to be found among the gardens of Southern California.

Jean Pallette, who has had an all-around experience on the legitimate stage, both in musical comedy and in drama, is now working for the Universal on the coast, assisting Producer Ricketts and also appearing in the pictures. Mr. Ricketts is an accomplished horseman as well as actor.

Ethel Grandin, who formerly played leads with 101 Bison, and Ray Smallwood, cameraman, are among the latest additions to the Universal forces on the coast.

"Frank" Bushman, the popular Essanay leading man, played a short engagement in New York town early in the week. It happened in this wise: Mr. Bushman has not had a vacation in a long time. On Friday night he left Chicago. He dropped in at the Screen Club Monday evening and, in company with Calder Johnstone and "Eddie" August, remained for the "wee sma's." Mr. Bushman had intended to wait over for the exhibitors' ball on Thursday evening, but he met Mr. Spoor Tuesday forenoon. Mr. Spoor, as is well known, is the president of the Essanay Company. So it turned out when Mr. Bushman appeared at the Screen Club Tuesday noon he regretfully announced that he was going back to Chicago on the 4 o'clock train. Some of the Screen boys were of the opinion that Mr. Spoor feared the allurements of the eastern metropolis might be too strong for his right bower; therefore, he felt impelled to shanghai him and remove him from danger. Mr. Bushman made as much of a hit here as he always does on the screen. The verdict was that he is just what he looks to be—and that's "nuff sed." By the way, New York made some hit with F. X. B.—he put in an application for a life membership in the Screen Club.

H. K. Samborn, of Rochester, has been in New York looking up good feature films.

Bert Ennis, formerly with the publicity department of the Vitagraph Company, is now acting in a similar capacity with the New York Motion Picture Company, which has just moved into its fine offices in the new Longacre Building, Forty-second Street and Broadway. Mr. Ennis showed the writer some fine photographs of the four famous Keystone comedians—Sennett, Mace, Sterling and Miss Normand—which he is sending out to all accredited independent exhibitors dealing through the Mutual Film Corporation. The pictures are 11 by 14, and will make splendid lobby decorations.

Director Etienne Arnaud, of the Eclair Company, returned last Saturday from his visit in Paris. He brings news of interest to independent exhibitors. The Paris Eclair will forward each week installments of film dealing with the Balkan War. Also in preparation at the home studio are two or three feature films which are to be of unusual excellence.

Dropped in at the Herald Square Theater on the evening of November 7 to see John Bunny as "Michael McShane, Matchmaker." This is one of Vitagraph's Irish reels—pardon, but perhaps "pictures" would be a better word—and it was an unexpected pleasure to see, leaning over the railing in the rear of the orchestra talking with Manager Rothschild and critically following his own work on the screen, none other than the original of McShane. The jolly comedian heard the house laugh at some of his work. It is within the knowledge of his friends that Mr. Bunny looks upon no stage work as being more serious than comedy—and it is undoubtedly to his capacity for taking pains that, in great measure, his leadership in comedy is to be ascribed.

By the way, the Herald Square had rather a busy time on Election Day—6,088 persons buying tickets to look at straight pictures. It is but fair to add, however, that a competent orchestra does much to swell the patronage at this house.

A. A. Kellman, the feature film man, of 665 Washington Street, Boston, was in town early in the week. From Manager J. D. Tippett, of Union Features, he has secured the New England rights for the entire Sherlock Holmes series. Also to the same company Mr. Kellman is paying a handsome sum for the New England rights of the "Vatican and Pope Pius" picture. Mr. Kellman is a close follower of all the trade publications devoted to the cinematographic art—wherever published. Modesty debars a reproduction here of his opinion of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD as a leader in its field. Nevertheless, if this writer is any judge, it is for the creating and maintenance of such beliefs that THE WORLD is striving.

The Universal group formerly working at the Staten Island Studio is now slowly making its way up the Mississippi River from New Orleans. They are employed on a number of scenarios requiring southern settings.

James Clark and Richard Rolands, of Pittsburg, are in town for a few days.

Here may be a tip to a director on the lookout for a setting for a final scene. Down at Manhattan Beach great changes have taken place. The famous Manhattan Beach Hotel has been razed. The old shore line has been restored by the erection of great stone bulkheads. This is being filled in with ashes from steam coal and with sand. Thousands of square feet of land have been added to the map. Stand on a clear day at the southerly point of the extension just after sundown. Look to the southwest across the water, with the skyline of Brighton and good old Coney forming the right-hand side of the frame. It is an impressive sight; one of the picturesque spots of the metropolis.

Among the Picture Theatres

News and Views of Houses Here and There

THE NEW MARTIN THEATER, LOCK HAVEN, PA.

The formal opening of the new Martin Theater, Lock Haven, Pa., a cut of which is herewith published, took place on the evening of August 27th, and it was one of the most auspicious events in the history of the city of Lock Haven. Mr. Harry E. Martin, the proprietor, had one of the foremost architects of Tyrone, Pa., Mr. William F. Wise, design the house. Steel, concrete and brick were used almost exclusively with a view to making the building absolutely fireproof. While the theater was built primarily for the exhibition of photoplays, the opening performance was the operatic success, "The Spring Maid."

The auditorium has one thousand roomy and comfortable opera chairs furnished by the Wisconsin Seating Company, of New London, Wis. There are two wide stairways leading to the loggias, of which there are eighteen. The floor covering consists of linoleum and carpet is placed in all the aisles and stairways. The requisite number of exits have been provided for.

The structure is three stories in height with a front of ornamental terra cotta, the beauty of which is enhanced by Indiana limestone trimmings and steel cornices. The box-office is situated at the right of the lobby and directly opposite is the reception room where patrons may rest and secure refreshments. The lavatories are modern in every respect. Twenty-eight oscillating fans are scattered about the house, and the most modern ventilating system insures fresh, pure air.

The lighting system is perfect in every way. In front of the building there are two iron columns with ten lights of five hundred candlepower each, while forty small incandescent bulbs extend across the building proper. In the lobby there is another circle of lights. The indirect lighting system is used in the interior and the bulbs are covered with pretty shades which diffuse a mellow glow. Attached to the handsome steel ceiling are a number of bronze domes with incandescent lights enclosed, their radiance being reflected from the ceiling over the entire auditorium. Rows of lights are also suspended from antique bronze chains beneath the balcony.

The operating room is situated at the back of the balcony and is constructed of steel and asbestos. Two Power's No. 6a machines are used. The stage is large enough to present any production. The color scheme is in accordance with the beauty of the place. The admission prices for moving pictures, when the "speaking drama" is not booked, are ten cents to adults and five cents to children. Mr. A. C. Candor is the manager.

VIRGINIA THEATER—RICHMOND, VA.

We publish herewith a view of the Virginia Theater, 711 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va., which was opened on May 27th, 1912. Since that date the place has been doing a capacity business, running moving pictures exclusively with appropriate music. It has a seating capacity of 400 persons.

Virginia Theater.

The Virginia is centrally located, being in the heart of the amusement center of Richmond, and is under the management of Mr. H. C. Stradford, who has had several years' experience in the moving picture exhibition business further south, being connected with houses in Birmingham, Ala.; Augusta, Ga.; Tampa, Fla.; and other places. The projection room of the Virginia is equipped with two Simplex projection machines.

BARITONE SINGER BUYS PICTURE HOUSE.

Mr. G. B. McClelland, a baritone singer, has purchased the Princess moving picture theater at Hamilton, Ohio, and has changed its name to the "Amusu." With Mrs. McClelland as pianist and Mr. McClelland as manager and singer, the management says that the "Amusu" patrons will be well pleased with the musical accompaniment to the pictures.

PICTURE HOUSE CHANGES HANDS.

Mr. E. J. Sparks, well known in the moving picture business in Augusta, Georgia, and Messrs. Brunswick Brothers have purchased the Palace picture theater, of Asheville, North Carolina. The house is now being thoroughly renovated. Messrs. Brunswick Brothers are also well known in the picture field as high-class singers.

ANGELUS THEATER—SPANISH FORK, UTAH.

The Angelus motion picture theater, Spanish Fork, Utah, a photograph of which we publish herewith, was opened on Monday evening, September 9th, 1912, and has since played to crowded houses. It was completed at a cost of $14,000, and is one of the most pretentious buildings in the city, which has a population of only 4,500. It is modern in every respect, being steam heated and electric lighted. The foyer is eight and a half feet wide and is the full length of the building. The furnishings and decorations are artistic. The main auditorium has an inclined floor with 400 opera chairs. A number of boxes are at the disposal of theater parties. The balcony is fitted with wicker rocking chairs.

The operating room is ten feet by twelve feet, metal lined complete with two Power's No. 6 projection machines with motor attachments and motor rewind. To the left of the operating room is a repair shop and a workroom. Four ventilators are placed in the ceiling with a sixteen-inch fan in each. The stage is twenty feet wide by six feet deep and can be used for light vaudeville, although the Mr. A. L. Stallings, who is the manager and proprietor, prefers to run pictures.

The Pastime Theater, of South Bethlehem, Pa., is soon to undergo extensive alterations, so says the manager, Mr. J. G. Beilen.

Milton Wadsworth, of Lewiston, Idaho, sold the Lyric Theater to H. G. Hicks.

Royal Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLAR PICTURE HOUSE AT PORTLAND.

The Majestic Theater, Park and Washington streets, Portland, Oregon, is a hundred thousand dollar picture and vaudeville theater. The house is managed and owned by Mr. Edwin F. James. The seating facilities consist of twelve hundred comfortable opera chairs, sixty of which are box seats. The boxes are arranged across the front of the balcony, affording an unexcelled view of the pictures and other entertainment offered.

The ventilating system is capable of removing over 25,000 cubic feet of air from the house every minute. The entrance is of Alaska tokeen, marble and tile. The ceiling of the entrance is arched and studded with three hundred tungsten lights. A large Kimball pipe organ, piano and drums, together with a large amount of sound effect equipment, furnish the music. Independent service is being used with vaudeville.

SPRAGG AMUSEMENT COMPANY, BELLAIRE, OHIO.

Iowa City, Iowa, is to have a new theater building. It will be erected by Mr. Albert Burkeley.

Thacher Brothers have begun to remodel the Litowich-Wolsieffer Building on North Sante Fe Street into a moving picture theater.

Posters, Pertinent and Impertinent

"This Way Out," Says J. B. Clymer Regarding the Poster Problem.

IN the grand, altruistic work of uplifting the motion picture "drammer," posters now occupy the southeast corner of the stage. A poster is a diabolical design on the part of motion picture producers to inveigle the painfully proud possessor of a nickel or half a dime, or even greater sums, into parting with this colossal amount in exchange for festivals for his eye in the form of pictures which move—from East to West or North to South—according to the way the mechanical wind blows.

The artists employed by lithograph companies are much overworked Michael Angelos and their hack work in turning out sketch after sketch is exhausting to their imaginations. The result is that faces depicted on the posters have come to bear a uniformity which would almost convince one that the world is one long "twinality." The faces on most lithographs resemble those on the clothing advertisements of "nobby tailor-made outfits take me home for $15," those fine strictly all-wool a la mode creations that the well dressed man feels adequate to the sartorial demands of raking the furnace or peeling potatoes. The Gaumont Company will now adopt the system of furnishing the artist with still pictures of the subject, the same to be faithfully copied. These reproductions give life, spirit and atmosphere to the poster. What every woman knows is that the creatures of this world are not all endowed with a systematic assortment of features of Adonis or Venus pulchritude and therefore to put on posters faces of people met in the Subway or in a delicatessen store, we must take them from life.

In the stern chase after realism such as characterizes modern histrionics, stage managers are keen for getting local color into scenes. As is demonstrated in Belasco's production of "The Governor's Lady," one of the strongest scenes wins by its admirable fidelity in reproduction of the interior of a Child's restaurant. In the making of posters there is local color in human faces. Motion pictures generally treat of the average person and are shown to the average person. Why, therefore, should there be on posters, the stereotyped comeliness not found in our workaday lives? People want to look at women, not dolls, and at men, not tailors' dummies.

There has been a hullabaloo over extravagances in execution of posters intended to symbolize, to express an idea. The writer in considering the poster for the Gaumont release "A Hazard for a Heart," immediately visualized a man running a gauntlet of swords and flames in order to attain the feminine desideratum. Better judgment quickly condemned this as misleading to the prospective and actual patron. If he looked at the poster and saw a man intrepidly wading through a wall of flame out of whose licking tongues swords stabbed at him, he would believe that this he would see, and if he did not actually behold an honest to goodness fire with an asbestos garmented man prancing through it with the nonchalance of a fire insurance agent, he would be apt to run weeping and wailing and gnashing his teeth and demand his nickel back. However, the symbolization method can often be used to advantage, the principle being either to make the thought so obviously symbolical that there can be no possibility of ambiguity or doubt. Symbolization was applied in the Gaumont poster "A Broken Idol," the story of a tenor adored by a matinee idolatress who later finds that there are six healthy reasons why she cannot marry him—a wife and five children. The poster sketch was that of an idol garbed as Faust. He has fallen from his pedestal and broken into fragments. Out of his mouth emanates high rolling seven C's. A damp looking female, with tears running up and down her face, completed the suggestion.

Illustrating symbolism which by its ludicrous expression eliminates possibility of its being literal is the poster for "The Destructive Duelists." Here are shown two truculent gentlemen who are met on the field of honor or the field of oats (wild oats preferred). On the facade of one is a dishpan with a bull's eye painted on it. He is armed literally from his feet to his teeth, as is also his combatant. Both are training cannon upon the other.

In "A Peach for a Prisoner," a title which works both ways inasmuch as the peach is in both human and fruit form, a man is shown looking languishly from behind prison bars, his hand extending yearningly toward a peach tree mingled with whose succulent fruit is a peach with a very, very peachy human face.

Many posters are not worth their ink, inasmuch as they express nothing. The conventional picture of a custom-made, highly finished young man and a young girl gazing longingly at each other, throws very little light on the subject of the picture, inasmuch as this sketch would apply to a hundred pictures. The secret is, be specific. Get at the vital essence of your story. It is merely a matter of showing your film in tablet form, almost predigested. Give the poor wonderless, idea-exhausted artist the benefit of your own scintillations and for you he will kill the fatted calf in the form of producing sketches with an art pre-Raphaelite (in power), perhaps worthy of the Sistine Chapel.

SCREEN CLUB OPENS ITS DOORS.

Many Members and Their Guests Present at the Picture Men's Housewarming.

The Screen Club threw open its new quarters on Saturday evening, November 9. There were many members present—and all spoke in high praise of the work done by President Baggot and his associates in decorating and furnishing the rooms. Vice-President Bunny started things moving when he announced that the first ten books of checks, good for $1 each, would be auctioned off for the benefit of the relief fund. King Baggot secured the first for $35. "Billy" Quirk was giving him a hard run, but finally desisted in order that the founder of the club might have the honor. The ten books sold for a total of $249.

The new quarters are at 163 West Forty-Fifth Street. There are a library, smoking room, music room, dining room, café and a large hall. The library and smoking room as well as the hall are carpeted in green. In the two former, the chairs and lounges are in Spanish leather; the tables, in mahogany. The walls are in red. The chairs in the hall are of wicker, upholstered to match the carpet. A profusion of plants ornament the hall and stairs. In the music room the chairs are in mahogany and the walls in light colors. The first painting for the new quarters has been received—a handsomely framed, artistic work, the gift of the mother of Herbert Brenon, one of the Board of Governors.

Among those who signed the register on the opening evening were J. H. Gerhardt, Carl Laemmle, Mark Dintenfass, William D. Shea, King Baggot, Edgar Lewis, Edwin August, A. F. Mayo, William F. Russell, Oscar C. Apfel, Budd Ross, William E. Shay, Charles Craig, William Robert Daly, Julius Stern, Hughie Mack, Calder Johnstone, Irving V. Willat, Harry J. Morey, Howard Crampton, George O. Newhall, Louis Gelang, Bert Adler, John Charles, Howard Howard, Edward Wynard, John Adolph, Arthur D. Jacobs, Arthur Housman, Harry Beaumont, C. Jay Williams, Josh Hopkins, Herbert Brenon, T. G. Among the guests were H. S. Scallon, Arthur Pickens, James Cruze, D. Murrie, James Smith, John B. Clymer, F. M. O'Connor, Charles E. Graham, John Davy, H. E. Millarde, Henry Marks, C. W. Doty and J. Stanchfield.

PUNCH MAKES ITS DEBUT.

"Punch" is a new name among films; but every one knows what to expect from pictures with the name Punch on them. After seeing the first release we can safely say that the makers are living up to the name, and promise spectators many a good laugh. One of the most noticeable things about these new offerings is that they strike a different note. For the present at least, they are to specialize on light comedies, but aim to break away from the conventional method of presenting farcical stories with the same players as in serious offerings. Punch has got together a special cast to make special pictures and the long and short of it is Nettie Grant and Herbert Rice. Both of these talented players are well known in vaudeville circles. The latter is an especially strong attraction. Being a grown man, he is of baby size and this fact will make laugh after laugh in "O You Baby," one of the funniest farces imaginable. On the same reel, we find "Poor Finney," a farce featuring Herbert Rice, Nettie Grant and Arthur Finn. It isn't quite up to "O You Baby," but it is very good.

"The Speckled Band" (Union Features)

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THE first of the series of six Sherlock Holmes pictures is now being shown at the offices of Union Features. "The Speckled Band," as will be the case with its filmed successors, is in two reels. The most interesting fact in connection with these adventures of the greatest detective in modern fiction is that Dr. A. Conan Doyle, the popular creator, himself supervised the production. This will give satisfaction to the thousands of readers of these absorbing tales who at this time may not be followers of motion pictures. That these reproductions on the screen of some of the more important incidents in the career of the mythical detective-scientist will bring to the picture houses a new clientele goes without saying. If the others in the series are of the same standard as that maintained throughout "The Speckled Band" the new-comers in filmdom are bound to be favorably impressed.

The pictures are produced by the Franco-British Film Company. With one exception all the actors are English. The exception is the impersonator of Holmes. This character is portrayed by M. Treville, who has had much screen experience in France. The portrayal of Roylott, the fiendish father who in order to retain possession of the patrimony of his daughters accomplished the slaughter of one of them and attempted the death of the second, was of the best. The photography is excellent. So also are the settings—particularly the lawn scene of the betrothal of Julia, enlivened by the quartet of dancers. The actor's conception of Holmes will be of the greatest interest, perhaps, to those who have followed the detective through his many adventures. If the filmed interpretation shall show more of animation and less of taciturnity than was expected, allowance must be made for the absence of speech and the necessity for sufficient action adequately to indicate the intentions as well as the observations of the actor.

There are of necessity some departures from the written story. These will be noted chiefly as affecting those parts of the plot which were related by the surviving daughter to the detective and Dr. Watson, who, by the way, does not appear in the picture. Here they are portrayed on the screen in their natural chronological order.

The story opens with a young man proposing to Mr. Roylott for the hand of his daughter Julia. At first the father declines to sanction the match, but later recants. Mr. Roylott again examines the copy of his wife's will, which provides that the husband as trustee shall divide her fortune between her daughters, each of whom shall take possession at her marriage. In agreeing to the marriage of Julia he determines at the same time to take steps to frustrate it in such manner as to leave the inheritance securely in his grasp. Of a strange visitor Mr. Roylott makes a mysterious purchase—a securely fastened box. On the morning of the betrothal day Julia in terror tells her sister of a peculiar hissing she has heard during the night. When, a few nights later, the household is aroused by a shriek from Julia's room, all rush in to find her dead on the floor.

Helen appeals to Sherlock Holmes. The detective goes to the Roylott home and makes secret investigations. He enters the room of the dead girl, discovers the suspended cord above the bed so securely fastened to the floor, notes the concealed aperture in the wall; on the opposite side of the partition examines the safe and also hears hissing inside. When the father informs Helen that on account of the broken windows in her room (which he has carefully smashed) she will be obliged to sleep in the room formerly occupied by her sister, Holmes acts. He had previously disguised himself, and as Juanes Rilto asked Roylott for the hand of Helen. Now he enters the room himself and awaits with confidence the appearance of the snake. When the serpent, released by Roylott, slowly comes down the wall Holmes does not attempt to kill it; he chases it back. A moment later the waiting detective and the girl hear a cry. They rush into the next room and there find Roylott dead on the floor and the snake crawling over him. The plan so carefully prepared by Roylott—the opening of the safe door and of the aperture in the partition which lead to the room of his daughter, and the smearing of the path with milk so that the hungry snake would go straight to the bed of his daughter—had failed.

"FOREST ROSE" BY THANHOUSER

Emerson Bennett wrote "The Forest Rose" many years ago, but it is still popular through the Western country and, indeed, throughout America generally—popular to the point that Thanhouser has made a motion picture of it. The film is in two reels, issued Friday, Nov. 29th. The Thanhouser "perfect publicity" goes along with the picture, in the shape of two one-sheets, a three-sheet, heralds, slides and cuts. "The Forest Rose" is a girl of the early West. She is stolen by Indians and it is of the adventures of her sweetheart that the story mainly treats. He is Albert Maywood, a stalwart pioneer, and accompanied by the famous scout, Wetzel, he traces the Indian band and eventually rescues "The Forest Rose." It is a most gripping story and can hold down a feature position on any bill.

Coming Thanhouser features include "The Star of Bethlehem," which the producers call their masterpiece of the year, and "Aurora Floyd," adapted from the story by Mrs. Braddon. These will be released in December.

FIREPROOF PICTURE HOUSE AT APPLETON, WIS.

Work on the $20,000 Elite moving picture theater at Appleton, Wis., began around the middle of October and is being hurried along, the managers looking forward to opening the house in February, 1913. The structure will be one story in height, 120 feet long and 30 feet wide. The front will be of stucco work with an arched canopy extending over the sidewalk. The lobby floor will be of terazzo tile, while the lobby walls and box-office front will be constructed of marble.

The auditorium will contain 500 seats and will be finished with a paneled ceiling and side walls. Two wide aisles will lead from the entrance to the stage. The operating booth will be made of reinforced concrete lined with asbestos, and it will be topped with a skylight. Much attention will be paid to the ventilation.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE PENITENT" (Essanay).

This is one of the month's finest dramatic subjects. The plot is entwined about Bob Arling and Hugh Thompson, two chums, who are rivals for the love of pretty Alice Danville. Hugh wins her and Bob, though heartbroken, wishes them life happiness. A few days later Professor Danville, a noted scientist, is experimenting in his laboratory when Alice enters, and in spite of his precaution causes an explosion of chemicals that renders her blind. Hugh now shows the despicable side of his nature in tiring of his blind sweetheart and transfers his affections to Dorothy Haddon, Alice's cousin who is paying a visit. Bob notices

Scene from "The Penitent" (Essanay).

Hugh's fickleness and upbraids him angrily, but Hugh refuses to listen. Still loving Alice with all his heart, Bob gives her every kindly attention. Doctor Hardcastle, a noted specialist, now examines Alice's eyes and agrees to perform an operation he believes will restore her sight. This operation is successful and Alice is overjoyed. Hurrying out into the bright sunshine to find Hugh and surprise him, she discovers him and Dorothy together and realizes his perfidy. Pretending to still affect her blindness Alice approaches them, then suddenly reveals the truth just as Bob comes on the scene. A few hours later, in the quiet of the conservatory, Bob again asks Alice to be his wife, and this time does not ask in vain.

Beverly Bayne renders a beautiful portrayal of the blind sweetheart, Mildred Weston is splendidly cast as Dorothy Haddon, Francis X. Bushman and Wm. Bailey are sharply contrasted in the roles of the two chums and their work is vigorous and strikingly delineated. Howard Missimer is the scientist and Helen Dunbar his wife, while Wm. Walters portrays the noted eye specialist. The production is a beautiful one and is booked for release November 22nd.

"DARLING OF THE MOUNTED" (Eclair).

If you love lovely children; if you wish to see one, both lovely of face and dear of heart, then you must surely see that dear little Eclair Kid (Miss Clara Horton) who is the darling of the brave Northwestern Police. It is a story without a woman; a point for scenario writers to observe. So it is very much out of the ordinary, you must agree. It was a bold stroke, but the end justified it. It stands a good story, a tale that actually lives. A single woman introduced into it would have taken just so much away from its typical atmosphere.

It gives us our first real opportunity to size up Guy Hedlund in his new pastures, as it were. But the "sizing is good," as our friend "Chimmie" would opine. He has a good face; character and thought peer through it. He "puts over" something more than appearance, action and gesture; he lives the part, and the spectator watches and judges him as such.

Scene from "Darling of the Mounted" (Eclair).

Nor need Mr. Truesdale, who enacts the father, feel other than at least inwardly proud of his characterization. His work is good photoplay accomplishment. It, too, is quiet, but with compelling convincingness. And, again, we mention Little Clara. She has an astounding lot of intelligence and a dandy dramatic grasp. She is more than a pretty child—she is an accomplished little actress.

Truesdale plays the part of the widowed father; Clara is his child. In a quarrel over a card game, he kills a man and is later captured by the Mounted Police in his own cabin, where we first see little Clara.

Hedlund assumes charge of the now practically orphaned child, and a great attachment springs up between them.

Truesdale escapes from his captors and pursues his way down the river. Clara is playing about in a canoe and she drifts down the river, headed for the falls.

Her father, in hiding, sees her, and saves her from going over the falls. He takes her ashore and night comes on. The exposure and wet clothing bring on a fever; the child complains and asks to be taken back to her new papa—and Truesdale, though knowing it means his capture, and death, takes her back to the fort and to her new papa—Hedlund.

Hedlund attempts to save him from discovery, but is unsuccessful. He is caught and the fort commander orders

Truesdale held for murder. But here Hedlund intervenes; he tells them that none of them could ever face their little darling again if they put her father to death. And so Truesdale is taken to the river, given supplies to last him for several days and ordered to leave the country forever. We see him drift away—the story is told—and our hearts are saddened, but not unpleasantly so. We have seen a part of life. This subject will be released November 28.

A TALE OF STOLEN MONEY.

"The Thunderbolt," a Thanhouser release of Tuesday, Nov. 26th, tells how the young man shown standing in the accompanying cut asked the broker seen seated at the desk to invest for him a legacy of $10,000, and how the broker converted the money to his own uses. The broker was apprehended for the crime, but before his capture gave the money over to a life-long friend who put the treasure into hiding. On the broker's release from jail many years later, the friend had departed this life and the ex-broker had no means of knowing the hiding place of the money. Finally, though, a thunderbolt strikes the room wherein sit he and his daughter, the old stone chimney is wrecked and inside the hidden treasure is revealed. But the daughter, and fate see that proper restoration is made, even over the objection of the aged man who spent long years in a cell for the sake of the money.

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW." (Vitascope Co).

Much good acting, well-chosen settings, splendid photography, able directing and some moments of tragic intensity cannot save this film from the reproach of belonging in the class of the much-condemned "crime pictures." The immorality and the crimes depicted in the reels are not the incidents but the main themes of the story. It is a deplorable instance of misdirected energy and wasted skill. It is only fair to say to this manufacturer and to other foreign producers, who are ambitious to please the American market, that so much bloody realism is not tolerated here either by the censors or by the public. I will point out two instances of this intolerable realism. In one scene the wronged husband, having murdered the paramour of his wife, goes to a police station to surrender himself to the authorities. The police official, apparently deceived by the respectable appearance of the murderer and his strange manner, regards him as a crank and bids him go away. The murderer then opens his overcoat and points to his blood-covered shirt. In the final scene the murderer breaks a pitcher into pieces and pierces an artery with one of the broken pieces. When the prison keeper enters his cell a little later the lifeless body of the man is found stretched out on his cot, one of his hands prominently displayed before the audience and full of blood. The scene in which the faithless wife plays the wanton with her paramour violates, in its Zolaesque realism, the plainest rules of good taste and decency.

I understand that the films are based on a novel which had a great vogue in Germany. The producers, attracted by the popularity of the work, acquired the right to film, thinking that a cinematographic reproduction would be at least as successful as the novel. This was a grave mistake. A clever writer may juggle with horrors and by a skillful game of half concealing and half revealing arouse and hold the interest of the reader. There is no circumlocution in pictures. They are so much more direct and vivid than the printed page and the best the cinematograph can do with a crime novel is to turn the latent horrors into lively nightmares. I earnestly hope that the undoubted talents of this producer will, in the future, be used for better and cleaner subjects.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S HEART." (Essanay).

The story is a keen, gripping tale of old Western days, with Mr. G. M. Anderson in his character-creation. Old Silas Jordan, a settler, finds that his horse is not able to pull the heavy load demanded, and discovers the well fed broncho of Jim Davis, a ranchman, staked out near the trail. Jordan deliberately takes the broncho, hitches it to his wagon, and drives on. A few hours later he stops to cook dinner, and meets Broncho Billy who has a great romp with Jordan's children and eats with them. The meal finished, Broncho bids Jordan goodbye and rides on. Late in the afternoon, Broncho meets Jim Davis and a bunch of his cowboys, who are on the trail of the missing horse. Davis tells Broncho of the matter, declares that they will string up the man who has stolen the horse, then gallop on. For a moment Broncho studies, then suddenly remembers that Jordan was driving a horse answering Davis' description, and leading another behind the wagon. Realizing the danger of the old settler if he is caught, Broncho rides desperately down the trail, overtakes Jordan and offers to trade horses with him. Jordan agrees, exchange is made, and Jordan goes on. Turning the white horse loose on the trail, Broncho finds a good place nearby to bunk for the night, and has just pillowed his head on his saddle when he sees Davis and the boys gallop up, identify the horse and, thinking it had merely strayed away, gallop back up the trail. With a deep sigh of satisfaction, Broncho lights a cigarette and puffs away contentedly with a grim smile playing over his brown face.

Mr. Anderson has never been seen to better advantage in his popular role than in this striking production. Frederick Church portrays Davis, the ranchman, and Arthur Mackley is Jordan.

The film is booked for release November 23rd.

K. W. LINN RETURNS FROM ABROAD.

K. W. Linn, who for five years was with Pathe Freres as branch manager, and who at the beginning of June sailed for Europe, returned to the States on Wednesday of this week on the Grosser Kurfurst. Mr. Linn looks in the best of health, and says he feels the same way. While abroad he gave careful study to the moving picture business in every part of the Continent except Russia and, Mr. Linn is very careful to state, the Balkan peninsula. While not prepared to disclose his plans at this writing, Mr. Linn said that he would certainly be identified with the moving picture business in the United States, and that in the next issue of THE WORLD he will have something of interest to say to picture men.

"THE MASSACRE OF THE FOURTH CAVALRY."
(Double Reel 101-Bison).

THE picture which Producer Frank E. Montgomery here gives us is notable even if all else but one scene be disregarded. This is an ambush in a plain—sandy, to be sure, but nevertheless a plain. We have had all kinds of ambush heretofore, but they do not count in comparison with the one the Universal here puts over. A troop of soldiers ride over a knoll and descend a few feet on to a level sandy stretch. Aside from the soldiers the only sign of life anywhere is a bit of an Indian's head protruding from a hole in the sand. As the troopers reach a certain point the sand apparently boils. Indians come from everywhere. The redmen are about the troops and among them. That the soldiers are overwhelmed is only what is to be expected. It is all one of the most effective Indian pictures that has been thrown on a screen. It is thrillingly dramatic. The realism is heightened by reason of the fact that the reviewer saw the picture without titles, and consequently had no warning of what was coming. He had seen little Mona Darkfeather digging industriously into the sand with her hands; he had seen the redmen remove their headdress and also burrow into the desert. From the viewpoint of the camera, however, there was no such indication of coming events as may be suggested by the accompanying illustration. If in the placing of the titles the spectators be left in the dark as to the significance of the overturning of the sand, undoubtedly the effect will be greatly heightened.

"The Massacre of the Fourth Cavalry" is not the blood-curdling picture its title would indicate. There is much riding and shooting, as in the case of the latter seems to be necessary in these pictures, but there are many fine landscapes—big fields and expansive views—such as Mr. Montgomery so well knows how to give us. The photography is excellent.

One of the features of the film is the work of little Mona Darkfeather. There are few scenes which she is not of. Another incident of the picture is the burning of a cabin. There are many people in the cast, a good-sized troop of cavalry and many Indians.

"A LIVING TOMB" (Itala).
By G. F. Blaisdell.

HERE is a thrilling climax—one of the sort worth waiting for. In the first reel the story runs smoothly on its unruffled way—not unlike many others we see every week. Nor is the plot in the first half anything out of the usual. It is in the second part where the real work comes—fast and stirring. The interest is tense. The dramatic effect is heightened by the ingenious arrangements of the light effects on the staircase leading to the bottom of the oubliette, the medieval dungeon, into which Lucienne had cast Victor. Itala has a most competent leading woman. It is to her splendid work that much of the credit for the success of the picture is due. To be sure, there are good settings—interior and outdoor as well.

Lucienne and Victor are lovers. Lucienne has wealth; Victor has not. Lucienne has more than wealth. She has personal charm and beauty, too. Victor asks the father of Lucienne for her hand. He is refused, flatly, and is very promptly bowed out of the paternal presence. Victor writes to Lucienne that he has been rejected because of his poverty. He tells her he is going to America. "Before five years have elapsed," he writes, "I will have returned a rich man or be dead." He sends the message on its way.

Just before the expiration of the stipulated time we see Lucienne as the wife of Lord Rochenoire. A mansion has been built for the couple near the ruins of the ancestral castle. It is a spacious and magnificent affair. At a charity fete Lucienne meets Victor, just returned from America. His attire indicates that he has made good. The discovery is mutual and mutually distressing. Victor realizes that Lucienne is not a free agent. He hurriedly writes a note to his former sweetheart that he has in his possession "some matters of the utmost importance to you." Surreptitiously he hands her the message.

Rochenoire goes away for a day. Lucienne writes to Victor: "To-night at midnight on the veranda." Her first lover keeps the appointment and returns some of their old love tokens. Lucienne invites him into the drawing-room. There she learns for the first time of the note Victor had written her when her father refused him. Victor is in a weak condition physically. He has been working hard. The shock of hearing of Lucienne's marriage as a result of her failure to receive his message proves too much. He falls to the floor.

Lucienne, failing to arouse Victor, believes him dead. In her distress and terror through fear of the compromising complications with which she is beset, she drags Victor out through the door, across the veranda, down the steps and over to the oubliette of the ancient castle adjoining. She throws the apparently lifeless body into the cistern-like structure and hurries back to the house. The following day, when Rochenoire returns, he brings with him two friends. At dinner he announces his intention of showing the archaic oubliette to his guests on the following day. Lucienne's terror is revived. She realizes the necessity of removing, during the night, the body of Victor.

Let us return to the lover, thrown down the well-like structure at midnight, nearly twenty-four hours previously. When he struck the water at the base of the oubliette consciousness returned. He crawled to the side of the round tower and painfully climbed out of the water. He could go no further. In despair he resigned himself to the fate for which the old dungeon was created—death in a living tomb. In the meantime Lucienne steals out of the house at night. She crosses the lawn and enters the old castle. Slowly she makes her way down the old stone staircase. As she throws back the door she sees, revealed in the dim light, the figure of Victor standing on his narrow footing against the wall. It is a "creepy" situation. The woman, previously under a strain that was nearly overcoming her, is barely able to clamber back up the stairs. Victor, after twenty-four hours in the dungeon, could be pardoned for thinking he had seen an apparition. Nevertheless, he pursues the figure in white to the steps of the mansion. There Lucienne falls. Victor hears the approaching footsteps of the members of the household and retires.

Lucienne is carried into the house. For several days she hovers between life and death. Her presence on the veranda is ascribed to somnambulism. In her convalescence comes a note from Victor that he has gone away—and that he will not return.

MANY KINOGRAPH CONTRACTS CLOSED.

Frederick Henius, president of the Kinograph Company of America, left New York on Sunday afternoon for Chicago. Monday evening he left the Western metropolis for Pittsburgh. Wednesday morning he was back in his office in New York. While away Mr. Henius closed out contracts for the entire Kinograph output, two features a month until February 1 and three each month thereafter, for Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Wisconsin and every State west of the Mississippi. All these contracts cover the next twelve months. While in Chicago the first two Kinograph releases were passed by the Chicago Board of Censors, having previously been sanctioned by the National Board in New York. Mr. Henius was preceded to Chicago by F. J. McGinnis, of his staff, who in the projection room of the Chicago office of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD showed the Kinograph films to western buyers.

RAMSEY WANTS TO SELL THEATRE.

L. H. Ramsey of Lexington, Ky., is offering his Hippodrome Theatre and Annex, located in Lexington, for sale, as per his advertisement in the Classified advertisements in this issue. Poor health is given as the cause for selling. The Ramsey house is the only vaudeville theatre in the town and seats about 500 persons; it has the Gus Sun franchise. The Annex is the picture show and seats about 300 persons showing Universal pictures. The entire system of bill-posting plants and franchises held by Mr. Ramsey are also for sale. Here is a chance for a live man.

"THE GOOD FOR NOTHING" (Lubin).

For good dry humor this picture is a gem and will doubtless have an unusual vogue. Dick Evans, who really aspires to be somebody, but finds his efforts to be uphill work, is laughed at and rated as a "good for nothing," but the flood tide comes to him unexpectedly, and he has the last laugh. Failing utterly in the big city he, like the prodigal son, returns to his father and begs to be again taken on at farm work. Dad does not kill the fatted calf, but on the contrary roasts the boy soundly for his ambition. Dick takes his medicine and for a few days settles down to overalls and the hoe. Incidentally he sees that "The Citizen," the town newspaper, is for sale, and figures that by becoming an editor he can get back at the fun-makers. He, however, has no money to buy the plant, but the Rev. John Brower looks upon Dick as a good bet and loans him the money.

Scene from "The Good for Nothing" (Lubin).

Much to the surprise of Dad and the rest of the town, the "Citizen" office is brushed up and the announcement is made that Mr. Richard Evans is the new owner and editor. This causes more screams, but Dick soon shows that he intend to do things. John Jordan, the sleepy old postmaster, has a daughter Rosabel and goes up in the air when he finds out that young Evans, "the Good For Nothing," is courting her.

The first big gun that the new editor fires is a rabid article informing the public that they really do need a new postoffice and new postmaster. Papa Jordan is furious and insists that Rosabel shall not receive Dick's attention, but the girl does not strictly favor the fourth commandment and the sweethearts indulge in clandestine meetings. Dad Evans is nominated on the Democratic ticket for mayor of Pocono, and Dick fires a broadside by announcing that he is going to run in opposition to his own father. The town goes crazy and the two fathers want to kill their offsprings.

The "Citizen," however, continues the bombardment and the circulation goes up like a rocket. As time nears for the issue the old men crawfish and are brought to terms. The editor withdraws from the contest in favor of his father and the "Citizen" announces that the Government has by persuasion agreed to build a new postoffice, and that John Jordan will continue to be postmaster and that before long a fashionable wedding ceremony will be performed by the Rev. John Brower. The picture has been staged by Lloyd Carleton, who is an excellent director.

SLIGHT ERROR.

The Niagara Slide Company, of Lockport, N. Y., asks us to make correction of their advertisement of last week. In writing the copy they omitted to state that 25 cents should be enclosed for each slide desired. They regret the omission and trust that readers will not feel that they are not living up to agreements.

A police tribunal in southern France has refused to pass upon the moral character of certain reels, for the exhibition of which the owner of an electric theater has been arrested by order of the Mayor. The Court appointed a professor of philosophy of the university of Toulouse to look at the reels and decide "whether they are nothing more than an exploitation of crime." Among the reels named are "The Miner's Vengeance," "The White Domino" and "Tom Butler."

"THE DAWNING" (Vitagraph—Two Reels).

A pretty and wholesome idea is worked out in this two reel subject, which is to be released on December 6th. A young woman, captivated by the handsome presence and engaging manners of a French artist is ready to take him for her husband, when a call of art and business takes him to Paris. Offended by his willingness to leave her the young woman marries another suitor, an American, whom she does not love but who is very much in love with her. Later her newly made husband is also called to the French capital. The artist and her former admirer meet in the latter's studio. While posing in the studio in a Carmen costume the artist attempts to take liberties with her. She resents them and begins to recognize the true character of the man. She now turns to her husband, whose open and manly ways she finds contrast very favorably with those of the unprincipled artist. The husband, at first prone to resent her long indifference to him, yields to the entreaties of his wife and as the new day is born the dawn of their own lives begin. There are many fine situations in this play and some scenes show great powers of characterization.

LARGE BROOKLYN AUDIENCE SEES "BUNYAN'S."

The first public exhibition given by the Hochstetter process of the pictures of the "Life of John Bunyan and 'Pilgrim's Progress'," took place at the concert hall of the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, on the afternoon of Sunday, November 10, under the auspices of the Institute of Arts and Sciences of Brooklyn. The auditorium was packed to the doors. So great was the crush that it was found necessary to lock the outside doors. The pictures received most flattering attention. The large audience present left satisfied that they had beheld a masterpiece in cinematography. The next exhibition will take place before the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association on the evening of November 14th next, when it is expected that the Hochstetters will repeat their Brooklyn triumph.

A REMARKABLE FEAT.

The International Feature Film Co., of 145 W. 45th St., New York, pulled off one of the most sensational performances ever recorded in the annals of motion picture making, on Tuesday, November 12. The International Company were working on a three-reel feature production to be entitled "At the Risk of His Life." The story called for the exploding of a balloon with dynamite, a feat that required the services of an aviator with more than usual courage. Mr. Rodman Law, a well-known aeronaut, was engaged at an enormous sum to make the ascent.

Law's Balloon in Flight.

The balloon rose from the Palisades, opposite 127th Street, New York. Five of the International Company's cameras were focused on the scene. At a height of 500 feet, and directly over the Hudson river, the balloonist lit the fuse that exploded twenty pounds of dynamite. The balloon was blown to shreds and the man was hurled into the air like a catapault. The pictures of the explosion were perfect, and Mr. Law was uninjured.

"THE THREE BACHELORS' TURKEY." (Pathe).

A corking good film by Pathe Freres is the "The Three Bachelors' Turkey," a comedy that never lags and that has the "punch" in every scene. It will be released on November 28th.

Tom, Dick and Harry, three gay young bachelors of the hall-room variety, awake on Thanksgiving morning to the realization that they are without the price of a turkey. They take a stock of their possessions in the hope of finding something to pawn. One seedy suit of cloths is all they can find and this they sadly admit is not of sufficient value to be acceptable to "Uncle Money-lender." Tom sets forth and strikes a bargain with a pawnbroker whereby he exchanges the suit on his back for an old overcoat and $4 in cash. With the cash he buys a turkey.

Scene from "The Three Bachelors' Turkey" (Pathe).

Dick goes out and does practically the same thing, returning home with a turkey and a linen duster. Tom and Dick both expect to wear Harry's old suit. Imagine their dismay when they learn that Harry has called in an "Ole Clothes Man" and sold his good suit for the price of a turkey. He is pressing the old suit, preparatory to wearing it. The argument between Tom and Dick as to who will wear the suit interests Harry and he leaves the tailoring job to inform them that he will settle the dispute by wearing the suit himself. When he returns to the ironing board he finds that he has left the red-hot iron too long in one spot and the trousers have smouldered away. They meet with several other mishaps by which they nearly lose their turkeys, but in the end they settle down to the feast which seems to taste even better because of the difficulties they experienced in getting it.

A really good comedy is a rare treat, for which reason you should not fail to book "The Three Bachelors' Turkey" on November 28th. The acting is first-class in every respect and the photography is up to the usual Pathe standard, which means the best obtainable.

UNIVERSAL CO. IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

While one of the acting companies of the Universal Film Co. was making its way in an automobile over the Cahuenga Pass, in California, the machine was accidentally overturned. H. C. Matthews, the director, sustained a fractured collar bone, and Mr. Moran had two ribs broken. In the car also were Fred Griffith, Boots Wall, David Wall, Joe Burke, H. D. Balkenmore, Katherine Griffith, Al Rober, L. B. Albert, Charles Manley and Harry Edward, all of whom received minor injuries.

AN ERRATUM.

For the past few weeks a mistake in the Independent Release Dates page of a "101" Bison (New York Motion Picture Company) subject entitled "Custer's Last Raid" has been running. This should have read "Custer's Last Fight." Exhibitors will please note this.

NEW SELIG PLANT COMPLETED.

The new $60,000 developing and printing plant of the Selig Polyscope Co., which has been built at the northwest corner of the Selig Chicago properties, is rapidly nearing completion and it is expected to be occupied within a few weeks.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

A RECENT incorporation is Kellman's Majestic Amusement Company of Fitchburg, Mass. This is a $3,000 concern, with Alfred A. Kellman and Samuel V. Grand named as officers. Mr. Kellman has moving picture theaters in several Massachusetts cities and also has a Boston office for the booking of feature photoplays.

Mr. George I. Appleby, for nearly three years the manager of the Star theater, Boston, has decided to accept an offer made him by the Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Appleby built up a most enviable record for himself while at the Star, and is known throughout New England as a clever, hard working and astute picture man. After a few days spent in New York, Mr. Appleby starts on a tour of Maine, in the interests of the Mutual service, on November 11. Nova Scotia may also be "worked" by Mr. Appleby. Mr. Eslow, manager of the Boston office of the Mutual Corporation, is to be congratulated on securing a man so well and favorably known to the trade in New England as Mr. Appleby. A solid gold ring, on which the Mason insignia was inscribed, was presented to Mr. Appleby by the Star theater employees, together with a most pleasing letter of good wishes.

Frank L. Browne succeeds Mr. Appleby as manager of the Star Theater, Boston, having left Gordon's Chelsea, Mass., theater to take hold of the Star. Mr. Browne has been in this business since its inception, and has an unusually able record behind him. Mr. Browne has made good as manager of several houses and expects to do the same with his new job.

The Theater View of New Bedford, Mass., had its license revoked for refusing to heed the instructions of the chief of police as regards allowing people to stand in the theater while waiting for seats. The city of New Bedford is dead against allowing any standing in the photoplay houses, and is rather hard in this respect.

A district council of all the Theatrical Stage Employees' unions of New England, which includes the Moving Picture Operators' unions, as well as the stage hands' organizations, is to be formed. At a meeting on October 27 of the Boston Theatrical Stage Employees' Union this proposition was discussed, and a committee was elected to communicate with other unions. It was also announced that the Boston union has established new offices and day headquarters at the corner of Tremont and Eliot streets, Boston. The old offices at 1160 Washington Street had been found to be inconveniently located. This union also hopes to do something toward aiding the Quincy Street Free Home for Consumptives, and will decide on this matter at the next meeting.

The Premier Theater, Boston, exhibited the Sarah Bernhardt reels of "La Tosca" on Friday and Saturday, November 1 and 2. Admission was 10 cents, and business was good. The attraction was well advertised in the papers.

The Boston offices of the General Film, Universal and Mutual exchanges are right "up against it," and good and plenty at that. Chief of Police Whitney has visited these exchanges and notified them that all exchanges must be housed in a two-story building, and out of the congested business section of the city. To make matters worse, December 5 is the date on which the exchanges must be in their new quarters. Real estate agents are busily at work to find suitable locations for them. It may be that the date may be moved forward a little, to give the exchange managers a chance to make the change. Danger of fire is the cause of this new ruling. This condition will work a hardship on every one, including the exhibitors, of course. Boston theaters opening at 9:30 a. m. will have plenty of worry trying to get their shows ready for the opening on new program days. It will be generally very inconvenient for everybody.

The Oriole Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., was furnished with some free notoriety when Cassius Mowrey, who was learning how to operate a moving picture machine, was arrested, charged with operating the machine without a license, which is a violation of the state law. Judge Wilder placed the case on file for further consideration. It seems that the licensed operator was out of the booth, and that Mowrey was turning the crank.

A Massachusetts law which becomes effective in January next makes it a misdemeanor for any theater to store more than eight reels of film in the house. Very few houses ever have more than that number about, however.

The Boston office of the Mutual Corporation has a good way of co-operating with its customers, taking the form of a reserve show in the possession of their customers. A couple of commercial reels are always in the possession of the theaters, to be used in a case of emergency, should the express fail to deliver the regular programs. If they should be used, the reels are returned, and a new reserve program of pictures are sent to replace them. This is a good plan, especially for up-state exhibitors, who are often "in a hole," due to non-delivery of the pictures.

H. F. Campbell, well known to all New England picture interests, lost his father this week. Mr. Campbell died suddenly, and the trade sincerely sympathizes with Harry.

Herman Rifkin, manager of the Eastern Feature Film Company, 230 Tremont Street, Boston, states that he was summoned into court on October 22, by injunction proceedings, to show cause why he had booked the Sarah Bernhardt feature photoplay "La Tosca" into the Broadway theater, Lawrence, Mass. The suit was brought by A. A. Kellman, based on a contract made some time previous, and later made void by all parties concerned. Mr. Rifkin tells us that he was awarded the decision, and then proceeded to book "La Tosca" into the Broadway, as originally planned.

Louis Greenburg, who only a few weeks ago opened the Gem Theater, East Boston, died suddenly last week. Mr. Greenburg was a great favorite with all who knew him, and his death is mourned. Izzy Greenburg will now assume the management of the Gem.

The motion picture was given its due prominence at Haverhill, Mass., this week, where a Massachusetts State Conference of Charities was held. "Standardizing the Moving Picture Theatre" was the paper of most importance, from the pen of, Mrs. E. H. Clement. Mrs. Clement sees a great future for the motion picture theater and film, and outlined the progress that each had made to date, together with what the future might be depended upon to bring. Historical, educational and scenic subjects, added to the best there is in acting, photography and general technical excellence, is what Mrs. Clement believes to be required.

The Goldstein Brothers' Amusement Company, operating a chain of theaters, is trying to secure a license to open its Bijou Theater, Ware, Mass., on Sundays. There seems to be a great deal of discussion over granting the license, as some of the Ware people are against, and some in favor of a Sunday opening. The matter will be carefully considered by the authorities.

Mayor Hardy of Fitchburg, Mass., will not allow any Sunday shows to be given by the local authorities.

It is expected that H. I. Dillenback, who was manager of the Nelson Theater, Springfield, Mass., will be seen in charge of some other Poli house, now that William Fox has secured the Nelson.

A moving picture camera was on the job to film President Taft when he visited Portland, Me., on October 24. The Big Nickel, managed by William E. Reeves, and the New Portland, I. M. Mosher, manager, showed the pictures, to capacity business.

Charles W. Sheafe reports that his Comique Theater, Stafford Springs, Conn., is doing very well. Mr. Sheafe is well known in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, where he has operated several photoplay houses.

A. A. Kellman offered the Carnegie Alaskan-Siberian reels at the Victoria Theater, Lawrence, Mass., on October 27. Big houses ruled during that day. Mr. Kellman handles state right features and is in a position to give big shows in his several theaters.

John T. Watts reports that the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass., is doing well, and that he is well pleased with his new position as manager.

R. E. Henderson reports that he has completed the purchase of the Pavilion Theater, Barre, Vt. Mr. Henderson will manage the house himself, and will offer vaudeville and pictures.

A recent incorporation was the Bijou Theater Company of Holyoke, Mass. This concern has incorporated for $25,000, with Albert Smith, Frank Rainault and Albert H. Hebert as the officers. A general theatrical business is to be carried on.

A new theater, to be devoted to pictures, is soon scheduled for North Main Street, Norwich, Conn., as Fogarty Brothers have had their plans O.K.'d by the local authorities.

Manager G. A. Haley of the National Theater, Boston, the largest house in the world devoted to vaudeville and pictures, has switched his house over to the Mutual program, having given up licensed service. Mr. Haley reports that he is thoroughly satisfied with the new pictures, which suit his patrons immensely. Manager Haley has made a success of the National since he took hold of it this fall.

Messrs. Henderson and George have completed arrangements for securing a theater to show vaudeville and pictures at Waterbury. R. E. Henderson is well known in the northern portion of New England, having a string of theaters in Barre, Montpelier and Northfield, Vt., and in other cities, all of which are doing very well.

Manager Toomey of Keith's Theater, Campello, Mass., reports good fall business and tells us that he has changed the policy of the theater to one show daily. Mr. Toomey finds he can pack his house easily on a one-a-day program, but that the town is not large enough to support a larger number of shows.

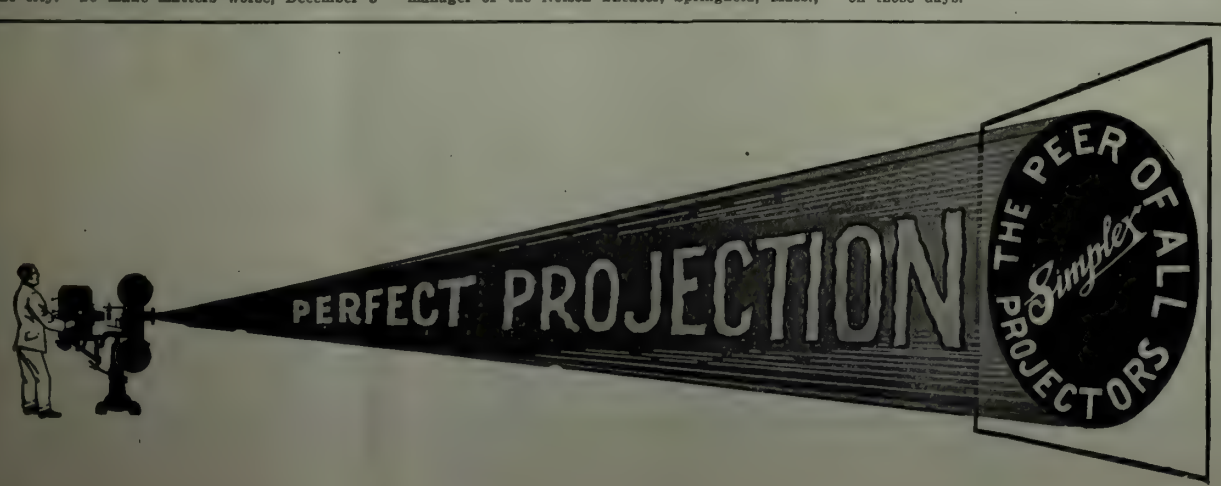
On Monday, November 4, William Fox started the ball rolling at the Nelson Theater, Springfield, Mass. The first week turned out to be a winner, with "S. R. O." the general rule. Manager Joseph Carr intends to hand out big value at the Nelson, and soon "Fox" will mean something to Springfield theatergoers.

S. Z. Poli has decided not to run both of his Worcester, Mass., theaters as vaudeville and picture houses, as they have showed themselves to be too strong competition for one another. The smaller Poli house will run stock company attractions, beginning November 18, while the bigger house will continue on the regular vaudeville and picture policy.

Concord, N. H., has a beautiful new theater, playing to vaudeville and pictures. The house seats about 1,000 and is thoroughly modern and fireproof. The house is known as the Conn Theater, after its owner, Jacob Conn. Early reports claim that the new house is prospering.

On and after November 18 the Poli Theater at Waterbury, Conn., will be seen as a stock company theater. The house is now playing to vaudeville and pictures.

Manager H. C. Parsons of Parsons' Theater, Hartford, Conn., gave up first-class road attractions long enough to exhibit the reels of the Paul J. Rainey African Hunt, on November 7-9. Business was brisk on those days.



Daniel Driscoll, formerly in charge of Shea's Worcester, Mass., theater, has left that city, to take hold of the Gilmore Theater, Springfield.

Rainey's African Hunt pictures were the feature attraction at the Providence Opera House from October 28 to November 2. The reels made good, as they seem to wherever exhibited.

Every so often Boston moving picture theater owners bring up the question of opening their houses on Sunday afternoons. Local theaters are allowed to open on Sundays at 7 p. m. The Boston Opera House has secured a license to give concerts on Sunday afternoons, and this fact created some lively discussion by exhibitors, who wondered why they could not be favored as well as the opera house. Boston is a Puritan town, but it is possible that something may be done regarding a Sunday afternoon opening, provided the exhibitors unite for the benefit of all. If the Boston exhibitors really want to open their theaters on Sunday afternoons it is right up to them to read this paragraph. President M. A. Neff of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has issued an official call for a state meeting of the Massachusetts exhibitors, to be held in Boston November 18. These columns have many times urged the utmost importance of a state organization, and it now looks as if the thing is about to materialize. It is hardly necessary to set down the many positive benefits to be derived from such an organization, as every exhibitor in this section appreciates the results to be obtained. Every exhibitor in New England is urged to be in Boston on November 18. A state president, a national vice-president, two state vice-presidents, a secretary and a treasurer will be elected.

Messrs. Smith and Clark have opened a new moving picture theater at Presque Isle, Me. Edward Clark reports good business.

A few weeks ago these columns told of the trouble liable to arise in Lynn, Mass., due to the rather drastic demands of the local musicians' union. This organization has now delivered its ultimatum, which states that theaters must install a regular orchestra. If this is not deemed quite advisable by the theaters, another plan is "doped" out for them by the union, and here it is: Hire a pianist at $100 per week! This is not intended as a joke by the writer, but is the unhappy truth. The idea, of course, is to force the theaters to hire orchestras, which will give work to many numbers of that union who are at present at leisure.

On November 19 the Savoy Theater of Fall River, Mass., will be given over to stock company attractions, until further notice.

The Loomer Opera House, Willimantic, Conn., exhibited the Sarah Bernhardt reels of "La Tosca" last week. Business was excellent at the Loomer Theater, which usually is a "legitimate" theater.

"La Tosca" made a hit at the Orpheum Theater, New Bedford, Mass., last week. Sarah Bernhardt packed the house to its capacity.

A new use for moving pictures has been discovered by C. S. Thompson, advertising manager of the Diamond Rubber Company. In order to demonstrate the efficiency of Diamond safety tread tires two big sprinkling wagons wet down the pavement for a block, and around the corner into the next block. As soon as the street has been made slippery an automobile with smooth-tread tires made the turn at a speed of thirty miles per hour. The car skidded almost twice around, while pictures were taken of the car. An automobile equipped with the Diamond safety tread tires made the same turn without skidding at all. These pictures will soon be shown in Boston, to help the sale of the safety tread tire.

The Mutual Film Corporation of Massachusetts has been granted a charter to do business. James A. Eslow, Maclean Borthwick and Anthony S. Stein are named as the incorporators.

The Panama Canal & Amusement Company has incorporated under Massachusetts laws for $35,000. It is a Springfield concern. Henry J. Perkins, Frank B. Perkins and E. W. Beattie, Jr., are named as the officers.

Messrs. Flynn and Perlin are about to build a new theater at 166 Newhall Street, New Haven, Conn., and plans have been approved. A first-class house is contemplated, to play to picture programs.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

TONY STEVER of St. Louis, owner of Hopkins Theater in Louisville, has by mutual agreement with the Louisville representative of B. F. Keith cancelled the lease on the theater at Second and Market streets and will operate it with vaudeville, it is understood. The Keith lease was to have run until next April. Louis J. Dittmar and other Louisville men had made arrangements to open Hopkins in the near future as a moving picture house, but the recent announcement means that the original deal is off. Hopkins Theater has been closed since last spring, when the Princess Amusement Company gave up its lease on the theater, which did not prove a remarkable success as the home of vaudeville. Whether or not Mr. Stever will be able to make it a go remains to be seen. The St. Louis magnate, however, has accumulated a fortune in the business, owning, among other property, Fontaine Ferry in Louisville.

The Ideal Amusement Company of Louisville has filed amended articles of incorporation, increasing its capitalization from $30,000 to $40,000.

Louisville exhibitors are facing an operators' strike. Whether or not the walkout will become a reality will be decided in the near future. The strike, if it materializes, will be in sympathy with the musicians, who went out of Louisville moving picture theaters some time ago. The strike of the operators, like that of the musicians, will not be general, however, as several Louisville houses have retained the musicians pending a settlement of their troubles. One company is now advertising for experienced operators, and it is not believed that the exhibitors will be seriously crippled should there be a walkout in a few houses. The proposition will probably be definitely settled in the near future, when the Theatrical Mechanics' Association holds its annual meeting and election of officers.

Manager Louis J. Dittmar of the Majestic Theater is now testing a Wurlitzer piano in his house. The instrument is being used a couple of hours in the morning.

A feature of "Windthort," the building erected by the congregation of St. Philip Neri's Catholic Church at Floyd and Woodbine streets, Louisville, is a big amusement hall for moving picture shows, dances, etc. The Rev. Father Oscar P. Ackermann is pastor of the church, and to him is due the responsibility for the amusement room. A moving picture machine will be purchased shortly and installed in the room, which contains about 3,000 square feet of floor space.

The Lyric Theater, erected at a cost of $30,000, has opened its door at Pineville, Ky., a coal mining town. The house is featured by modern construction, a steam-heating plant having been installed, as well as a modern ventilating system. While moving pictures will be shown daily, the performances will be varied by vaudeville the latter half of each week. R. L. Needham is manager of the new house, which is one of the most expensive established in the coal fields of Eastern Kentucky.

The F. & D. Products Company, which will engage in the motion picture business, making films and machinery, has filed articles of incorporation in Louisville, the capitalization being $10,000. The debt limit is set at $5,000. Carl J. Crough, Walter J. Hoeffiin and A. H. Schindler are the incorporators.

The Empress Theater, owned and managed by George A. Bleith, has opened at Ownesboro, Ky. The house has a seating capacity of about 400. Both exterior and interior are unusually handsome, electric lights on the outside making the new theater exceptionally attractive, as far as illumination is concerned. The indirect system of lighting is utilized on the interior, while decorations are ornate and handsome. Initial business with the Empress was up to expectations, the house being comfortably filled at all times.

The Princess Theater, Madisonville, Ky., has reopened after a two-day shut-down for re-decorating. Both inside and outside of the house were rehabilitated, about $500 being expended by T. J. Clark and his associates.

Fred Dolle of the Broadway Amusement Company, Louisville, is confined to his home on East Broadway by a severe attack of the grippe. His condition is not serious, and the moving picture man is expected to resume his duties shortly.

The Washington, a public school of Paducah, Ky., has ordered an Edison machine for use in the regular course in the Western Kentucky educational institution. The machine is the first installed in a school in Western Kentucky, and it is expected that others will be placed in similar institutions in that section of the state in the near future.

The Amuzu Theater at Corbin, Ky., is drawing well, demonstrating that that little town is willing to support such an enterprise. T. L. Brown, manager of the Amuzu, will shortly increase the seating capacity of the house.

The operators' strike, which has been threatening Louisville exhibitors for a time, seems to have been averted by the united action of the Louisville Photo-Play Association. The strike was directed at the Broadway Amusement Company especially. However, the Photo-Play Association issued a statement to the effect that if the operators in the Broadway houses walked out, the entire union might join them. Accordingly, the operators will stick to their posts. The Broadway was selected as the target for the union shots because of its action in installing automatic musical instruments in lieu of utilizing the union musicians. The musicians' strike seems to be nearing an end. The Louisville musicians, it is reported, are about ready to accede to the agreement articles asked by exhibitors. The only obstacle now lying in the way of a peaceful settlement of the disagreement seems to be the central body, which has not yet agreed to allow the musicians to return to work.

Michael Switow has left for Indianapolis, where he will definitely settle his plans for the future in regard to establishing a picture house in that city. The Louisville moving picture magnate is negotiating for a site in the Indiana metropolis, and if successful, will erect a theater in that city.

The Advance Film Manufacturing Company, of Louisville, has taken pictures of a recent auto excursion to Lexington, Ky., given under the auspices of the Louisville Auto Club. About 200 motorists made the trip, the 81 miles being made in four hours. Various points of interest along the route were photographed by the Advance Company.

The Louisville branch of the Central Film Service Company has added to its roster the Hippodrome theater, Louisville; the Gem, Monticello; the Scenic, Scottsburg, Ind., and J. C. Taylor, of Frankfort, Ky. The Gem is a new house, being constructed and owned by C. W. Simmons. It has a seating capacity of 300. A. F. Mayer is head of the Louisville establishment of the Central.

Hopkins' theater, Louisville, will be opened in the very near future, according to an announcement made following a conference between Harry Bilger, who will manage the house, Tony Stevers, the owner of the property, and other theatrical men interested. Vaudeville and moving pictures will be shown.

The Orpheum Amusement Company, which has operated Hopkins' theater in the past, has been dissolved, and the affairs of the corporation will be wound up in the near future. Irvin C. Simon is president of the Orpheum Amusement Company. The corporation has no connection with the Princess Amusement Company, which operates the Orpheum theater, and no change will be made in that Jefferson-street house.

The Idle Hour Theater, of Earlington, Ky., has installed a mirror screen, the innovation being responsible for added patronage of the cosy little house.

"The Cozytorium" is the name of a new moving picture theater shortly to be opened at Mt. Sterling, Ky. A building on Main street has been remodeled for the new house, which will have a seating capacity of about 250. Proprietors of the new theater are Otto Dietz; G. W. Anderson, Jr., and Thomas Jackson, all of Mt. Sterling. Harris T. Schwab has been secured as manager of the house. Daily changes will be given.

Miss Adele La Rue, formerly a vaudeville star, has joined the staff of the Majestic theater, Louisville, as soloist. Miss La Rue will probably finish the year with the Majestic.

Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, has returned to his duties as manager of the Ideal theater, after a short illness. Mr. Dolle is now in good health.

H. S. Morris, who has conducted a small moving picture theater at Jeffersonville, Ind., is to retire from the business and is advertising for sale his entire outfit.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

THE Women's Civic Federation of East St. Louis, Ill., has voted to favor a censorship for moving picture theaters. The aid of legislatures will be enlisted in an effort to secure new laws upon this subject.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Marshalltown, Iowa, is planning to purchase a complete moving picture outfit and place it in the building for the use of the association.

Harry R. Reel has been made manager of the Moline Theater, at Moline, Ill., to succeed the late R. H. Taylor.

Sam Rose has sold the Kaiserhof photoplay house on South Main Street, Rockford, Ill., to Axel Frederiksen, of that city.

F. C. Smith, owner and manager of the Gaiety Theater at Springfield, Ill., has leased the Empress Theater at Decatur, Ill. A. Sigfried, of the Bijou, will be resident manager. The Bijou has been closed as a vaudeville house and opened as a moving picture show.

C. E. Ward, of Wilmington, Ill., has purchased a half interest in the Palace Theater at Onarga, Ill.

The Famous Feature Film Company of St. Louis has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $10,000, to do a general moving picture and film business. The incorporators are Gustav Wagner, Nathan Steinberg and Lester Harburger.

The Continental Amusement Company of Indianapolis, Ind., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $10,000. The directors are Albert F. Eitelgorg, Reinhold A. Miller, Jr., and Wilber W. Harrison.

The Taylorville Amusement Company of Taylorville, Ind., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $2,000, to conduct theaters and amusements. Incorporators are John E. Hogan, Ernest Yoover and M. J. Hogan.

The Union Film Exchange Company of Chicago, Ill., changed its name to the Chicago Moving Picture Supply Company.

David Udell of Paxton, Ill., has purchased the Niel Theater at Champaign, Ill.

John Kremar of Galena, Ill., has purchased the Star Theater at Geneva, Ill.

F. H. MADISON.

HOUSTON.

THE Grand Theater has been sold by Mr. O'Brien to William Herwitz, Jr., who immediately reopened the place with moving pictures.

The Vaudette Theater, of which Messrs. Wicks & Company are the proprietors, is undergoing extensive alterations, and a Power's No. 6a machine and a number of new opera chairs will be installed.

Anthony J. Xydias, proprietor of the Star Theater, had Miss Martha Russell, Essanay's leading lady, appear at his theater on October 25th and 26th to good crowds. Mr. Xydias has also signed a lease for a theater building on Main Street, this city, for a term of ten years. The measurements of the structure are 25 feet by 100 feet. The place is located in the heart of the city of Houston.

THE DAWNING

Vitagraph 2 Reels

Helen Mason, beautiful, high-strung and self-willed, prefers the love of Victor Gardier, a young artist, to th attentions of Henry Pendleton. The latter declares his love for Helen and asks her hand in marriage, but she refuse The young artist visits Helen, but instead of proposing he acquaints her with the fact that his uncle offers him a opportunity to complete his art studies in Paris. She begs him not to leave her, but he turns a deaf ear to her plea ings, and after his departure she gives way to her anger and disappointment and in retaliation she promises to marr Pendleton. They are married, but not mated.

They visit Paris and Helen conceals the joy to her of a visit to the artist's studio, and her vanity is flattered by request to have her portrait painted. She appears for the first sitting, when Victor, alone with her, vehemently express his burning love, though knowing she is the wife of another. She repulses him and flees to her husband, whose prote tion she begs and which she so little deserves. The artist and husband meet on the field of honor and Victor is seri ously wounded. Sitting at her window as the dawn is breaking, she prays for her husband's safe return, and as h enters unharmed she throws herself into his arms fervently declaring her love.

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY

LUBIN 2 Reel

A beautiful story of a poor young musician who has composed an exquisite symphony.

Adjoining his squalid quarters is a room occupied by a young lady of good family, but impoverished. She can he the wonderful strains of the symphony played by the young musician and becomes first interested in the music and then in lo with the composer. Together they plan to apprise the world of the genius. One evening, as a renowned musician is leaving concert hall, after one of his great successes, the young composer throws the score of the symphony into the carriage of t great musician. Curiosity compels the musician to read the music and, at home, on his own instrument, he discovers the gre work of the poor young composer. He adopts the symphony as his own and adds new laurels to his already great career. O evening at a concert at which the symphony is played the real composer rises in the audience and denounces the player, clai ing the symphony as his. He is taken to prison and later put into an asylum. The young woman lover hears of his plight a intercedes with a rich aunt to secure his release. The aunt believes in the young composer and his work and conspires show the musician who has stolen the symphony in his true colors. She invites him to a musicale in her home and reque him to play the symphony. As he is playing, the young composer, now released from the asylum, tears the score into pieces a asks the musician to now play the symphony. Of course the musician cannot and acknowledges the young pauper compose wonderful genius. This is a thrilling play, beautifully set.

General

Features

BILLY'S BURGLAR

November 22, 1912. Two Reels.

A daring capture of a notorious burglar by a brave boy. This is a thrilling adventure in a fast speeding automobile and a funny predicament of a negligent policeman.

The Stars of the Vitagraph Company are cast very happily in this splendid production.

KERRY GOW

November 18, 1912. Kalem. Three Reels.

This is a play that the Kalem Company has gone to Ireland for and brought back with the true atmosphere and every real characteristic of the Irish soil and Irish heart. The plot of the play is a regulation one, wherein the villain's efforts are frustrated at every turn, and the story ends with him on his way to jail and the lovers preparing for the wedding. The Irish landscape is produced and the remarkable attention to details makes the picture a really great one.

THE GROTTO of TORTURE

November 15, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

The persistence of an English lover wins him a bride from the recesses of a Hindoo temple, a woman who, knowing the punishment which will follow her action, still listens to her lover. Her whereabouts are unknown for a long time to the High Priest, but one day he finds her home and sees in its cradle her infant son. The Hindoo departs with a piece of the baby's wrap. This he uses to give the scent to a vicious leopard which is set free and hungrily picks out the trail back to the cradle and steals the child.

The mother gives chase, and her husband with an armed guard, boards an elephant and follows her trail. The mother tracks the leopard to the secret entrance to the Grotto of Torture, where she is seized and hurled into the torture room. Her husband reaches the cave a few moments later and rescues the mother and infant child.

KINGS OF THE FOREST

November 11, 1912. Two Reels.

A Wild Animal Sensation, by Selig, presenting a thrilling story of life in the Transvaal Jungles. This is one of the greatest animal pictures ever produced, and there are enough exciting moments, hairbreadth escapes and daring ventures to interest the most blase. This is a picture that is sure to attract and hold the interest of your patrons and to remain fresh for a long time in their memory.

THE MILLS OF THE GODS

November 4, 1912. Three Reels.

Signore Lorenzo, a very rich plebeian, seeks to dethrone Prince Gian of Milan. Lorenzo becomes enamored with Maria, a beautiful peasant girl, who repulses his attentions and is protected by Miguel, whom she soon marries. Through Lorenzo's influence they are driven from home into direct poverty, and Maria's death soon follows. Miguel later acquires wealth. Lorenzo's attempts to steal Miguel's beautiful daughter and usurp the throne are foiled, and he is betrayed by Tano, Miguel's servant, into a vacant house; the place is fired, and his life ground out by the Mills of the Gods. A Vitagraph production.

FRENZIED FINANCE

October 28, 1912. Three Reels.

A Pathe story. Claude Rodgers, a gambler, falls heir to a banking business. Rodgers immediately launches a "Get-rich-quick" scheme and starts a campaign to get depositors by promises of fabulous interest. The bank soon becomes the largest, although not the safest, in the East. But good things cannot last forever, and with his wife's sickness Rodgers' luck turns. A run on the bank is the next misfortune, and because of Rodgers' extravagance it cannot stand the strain. A mob of ruined depositors storms the home of the banker and finds that a bullet from his revolver has brought his reckless career to a close.

OLYMPIC GAMES

October 24, 1912. Three Reels.

Pathe shows World's greatest athletes in action at Stockholm meet.

THE LION TAMER'S REVENGE

October 21, 1912. Two Reels.

A Cines-Kleine Sensational Story. A story in which lions play an important part. A jealous lover, with the assistance of a clown, lures his rival and the girl into the den of lions. The woman manages to escape, later to accuse the murderer, but the lover is mangled to death by the infuriated lions.

THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO

October 14, 1912. Three Reels.

Selig Release. A wonderful and tragic story of Edmond Dantes, a young Frenchman, who is intrusted with a message to the exiled Napoleon on the Isle of Elba, forms one of the greatest themes ever written upon. There are over 800 people in the cast and shows the wonderful scenes, gorgeous costumes and elaborate stage setting. This is one of the most fascinating pictures ever produced by Selig.

AS YOU LIKE IT

October 7, 1912. Three Reels.

Vitagraph Company with Rose Coghlan in role of Rosalind, presents pretty Shakespeare play.

THE MAN HUNT

September 30, 1912. Two Reels.

A Pathe production, showing Kilborne, a poacher who is loved by Rose, the daughter of an old charwoman, whose cabin is in the dense forest. Kilborne is sought by the police and Rose, suspecting that he is at the house of a farmer whose daughter he is in love with, hurries to warn him of the impending danger. The police surround the house and as Kilborne steps through the door he is ordered to surrender; he refuses and the officer fires to kill him. Rose steps in front and receives the deadly bullet.

DAUGHTER OF THE SPY

September 16, 1912. Two Reels.

This is a Cines-Kleine release of a story of a spy who gives assistance in his home to a nobleman fleeing from the soldiers The nobleman believes that his host and hostess have betrayed him and as he is taken to prison he denounces them for their duplicity. Heart-broken, the daughter determines to redeem herself by assisting the young nobleman to escape from prison. Trying to help the nobleman to escape the girl is killed by the sentry on the prison walls.

THE BLIGHTED SON

September 9, 1912. Four Reels.

A Pathe story of the dissipated life of the heir of a wealthy family. From one wild deed to another, the son wrecks the family fortunes and becomes a fugitive. After several years of hardships he endures, he develops the better side of his character and he returns to his home—a man.

FIRE AT SEA

August 26, 1912. Two Reels.

Another Pathe story of an old Sea Captain who is a slave to liquor. He is employed to sail a schooner with a cargo of gun powder for a revolutionary project. On the voyage the old Captain enters the powder chamber with a lighted pipe and the ship is blown up. A thrilling story of a wrecked ship afire at sea.

RIP VAN WINKLE

August 19, 1912. Two Reels.

A Vitagraph production of the famous legend of Rip Van Winkle, which is portrayed by that eminent actor Mr. Robert McWade, Sr., who was so long associated with the famous Joe Jefferson.

RAMESES. KING of EGYPT

August 12, 1912. Two Reels.

A production by Cines-Kleine of unparalleled magnificence, depicting a thrilling romance, laid in the days of ancient Egypt.

DON JUAN and CHARLES V

July 29, 1912. Two Reels.

The story of the love of a King for a beautiful Spanish maid, who is betrothed to Don Juan, a young student. Don Juan insults the young King, is arrested and his lover is brought to the torture chamber to see him suffer in the hope that in order to save him she will consent to marry the King. The father of the young King returns from a monastery to which he has retired and astounds the young men by telling them they are brothers. This is a Pathe reproduction.

—— OF ——

"THE SPECKLED BAND"

IN TWO PARTS

The film dramatization is as great if not greater than the story. Its mystery tension is near to nerve-racking until the Master Detective brings relief. Its own intrinsic merit would make it a great feature, But—

Every possible advertising advantage which abounds in the author's name and world-wide fame has been pounded in till not a single person will be able to escape your appeal

Without fear or boast we claim the finest—the most persuasive eight sheets, three sheets and ones ever posted or hung in front of an M. P. theatre

Also slides—heralds—booklets de luxe—photos—lobby display frames—banners and all.

If keen business judgment is worth a hang, this series must prove a profit certainty.....There is not a doubt.....It will.

MR. EXHIBITOR

Did It Ever Occur to You?

(Theatre equipped with ordinary Electric Piano or Orchestra)—Scene 1

Your audience is sitting in rapt attention, eyes gazing expectantly at the picture, waiting for the scene where the lover presents his sweetheart with a bunch of roses or violets—he hands her the flowers and she gazes at him with all her soul in her eyes and then!

THE AUTOMATIC INSTRUMENT STARTS PLAYING "COME ON AND HEAR, COME ON AND HEAR, ALEXANDER'S RAG TIME BAND." FINE?

Scene 2

The lover is shot by his hated rival, and his sweetheart is standing over him with a look of horror on her face, and THE AUTOMATIC INSTRUMENT STARTS PLAYING "EVERYBODY'S DOING IT."

Can you imagine how beautiful that DOES NOT sound?

(Theatre equipped with Fotoplayer)—Scene 1

As the lover is shown in the scene handing his sweetheart a bunch of violets, the Fotoplayer plays "Every Morn I Bring Thee Violets" on the sweet tones of the Organ.

We want to tell you, Mr. EXHIBITOR, that class of music will bring out the finest thoughts in your patrons.

Scene 2

The lover is shot by his hated rival, and with a look of pain his sweetheart stands over him with horror on her face. The Fotoplayer plays "Hearts and Flowers" as they tenderly pick him up and carry him into her home.

That's real music for the picture, Mr. EXHIBITOR. That's music that makes the audience say as they leave, "Was not that a grand scene? was it not beautiful? and how grand the music was!"

MR. EXHIBITOR, that is what makes your people say to all their friends, "Let us go into the FOTOPLAYER Theatre, because there you not only see good pictures, but also have beautiful music to accompany them."

Drop us a line stating seating capacity of your House and we will advise you what particular style Instrument would be best suited for your needs.

FOTOPLAYERS COST MONEY—they are not a cheap Instrument, but—THE FOTOPLAYER WILL MAKE MONEY FOR YOU.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

A BATTLE OF WITS (Nov. 25).—Two surveyors, Tom Edwards and Frank Anderson, meet Sue Elwood while at work in the hills. Tug Weaver, a neighbor of Sue's who is anxious to win her hand, is jealous because of her friendship for Tom. Weaver inflames Sue's father against the surveyor and the old man will not permit Tom to visit the premises.

Some time later Weaver is given mail for the Elwood cabin and noticing a letter addressed to Sue he opens it and reads: "Dear Sue, I was surveying for a railroad which will run through your land. Do not sell until you see me. Meet me at the old place Friday afternoon at three o'clock." Weaver retains the letter and meets the promoter when he arrives, representing himself as Elwood's son-in-law and giving an option on the land for ten thousand dollars. When Tom arrives in the village and meets the promoter, he learns of the transaction and hastens to the cabin.

Weaver overpowers Tom and with Elwood's assistance places him in an outbuilding. Sue, who has been locked in her room because she will not consent to marrying Weaver, manages to escape and sees the two men imprisoning her lover. She liberates the young surveyor and the two start for the village. There they meet the promoter and explain the situation. The treachery of Weaver is exposed and Tom and Sue become betrothed.

THE WATER RIGHT WAR (Nov. 27).—Greuff and Steve, two ranchers, quarrel over the water rights of their ranches. Steve saves Greuff's daughter, Mabel, in a runaway and the young people become fast friends. Later he attempts to monopolize the water rights and has his men erect a wire fence. Greuff, being warned of Steve's operations, proceeds to the scene with a number of farm hands and arrests the young man for trespassing.

Greuff in his capacity of town marshal, locks Steve in the jail and hides the key under his pillow, fearing that Mabel will attempt to liberate her sweetheart. His precautions prove unavailing as Mabel secures the keys that night and frees the prisoner. In the morning Greuff finds that Steve has made his escape and he discovers a note, reading, "Steve says you can have your old stream; he has taken me instead. Your loving daughter, Mabel." Steve and Mabel ride to the village justice of the peace and are happily married. When they return home, Greuff decides to forgive them, now that there is a combination of interests.

THE CHAPERON GETS A DUCKING (Nov. 29).—Tom and his friends prepare to go camping. The girls say that if they can get a chaperon they will come out and visit the boys. This gives Tom an idea and Fat Bill is picked out as an ideal chaperon. He is equipped with women's togs and Tom gives him a note to deliver to one of the girls reading, "Dear Minnie: This will introduce my Aunt Lizzie, who will be glad to chaperon you to our camp."

The next day Bill sets forth with his fair charges but he monopolizes the attention of the girls to such an extent that the boys become angry and decide to give him a ducking. During the scramble in the water Bill's wig comes off and the scheme is exposed. The girls seeing they have been duped, rush at Tom and force him into the water with the unhappy chaperon.

RUTH ROLAND, THE KALEM GIRL (Nov. 29).—Miss Roland, Kalem's star comedienne, is seen hunting ducks and bringing down a goodly number of canvasbacks. She is equally expert with rod and line and lands some choice specimens. In aeroplane and automobile she is also "at home" and she gives a lively demonstration with the boxing gloves. Miss Roland makes a dive of forty feet and displays a variety of fancy swimming strokes.

THE MAYOR FROM IRELAND (Nov. 30).—At the Kerry dance along the roadside, Bridget flaunts Shamus Foley and accepts the proposal of Terry Donovan. Shamus becomes embittered and leaves for America where he meets with success.

Terry and Bridget are married and when they read of Shamus' good fortune in America they decide to visit the new world. By selling their belongings they secure steerage passage and arriving in New York, they locate in an East Side tenement.

Terry finds that it is no easy matter to secure employment and he therefore determines to seek aid of his old rival, Shamus, who is now a political boss and an influential character. But Shamus scoffs at the unfortunate Terry and holds him up to ridicule.

Downhearted, Terry sits on a park bench and the way opens for him to render a service to a passing capitalist. As a result his new friend secures employment for Terry and in later months the young man becomes a prosperous contractor.

By untiring labor and judicious investments Terry becomes well-to-do and is nominated on the reform ticket for mayor. At this time Shamus is the present incumbent and comes out for reelection. The campaigns of the two factions present an interesting study of modern politics, Terry presenting his progressive measures so impressively that he is elected.

The time comes for Shamus to retire from office in favor of Terry. A crowd of Terry's friends are on hand to see him assume his seat. Bridget, Terry's faithful wife, is present and asks Shamus if he will continue to harbor unkind feelings toward them. A spark of his old love is kindled and the ex-mayor coming to a realization of Terry's sterling qualities, extends his hand in congratulation.

LUBIN.

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY (Nov. 25).—A synopsis of this two-reel special subject was published in the General Film Company's advertisment on pages 682 and 683 of the issue dated November 16.

THE SURGEON (Nov. 25).—Dr. Albert Hartley was a very busy young surgeon in one of the hospitals in New York City. Frequently he felt that he needed an energizer, so he resorted to that enemy of mankind, whiskey and he became a veritable drunkard. The hospital officers requested his resignation. He diagnosed his case. He must get away from everything familiar to him. There was one place to go—the west. For a month he drifted about like a derelict, until one day he found himself in California, with wealth consisting of seventy-five cents and some surgical instruments. Passing John Lane's ranch house near the road, he saw a sign "Ranch hands wanted." He applied for a position and went to work. Hartley's good work comes to Lane's notice and he was made foreman. Jose Cabbrillo, a range rider was discharged by Lane for cruelty to his horse. For revenge the Mexican shot Lane from ambush. The bullet shattered his skull. Hartley saw the shot fired and sent men out to capture the Mexican, while he attended the wounded man. A physician was sent for, but told them the only way Lane's life could be saved would be to probe for the bullet and trepan the skull and that he was not a surgeon. Hartley heard this and to the surprise of the Country doctor, he volunteered to make the operation. His instruments were the only proof of his ability. These the doctor accepted and both went vigorously to work, to save the life of the wounded man. Meanwhile the chase after the Mexican began and ended with his capture. Enola, Lane's daughter and her mother waited anxiously for the result of the operation, which was successfully performed. Hartley was made a hero and captured the heart of the girl he had secretly loved.

THE SAMARITAN OF COOGAN'S TENEMENT (Nov. 26).—The little house so dear to Billy and his mother is lost to them through foreclosure. He cheers her by telling her to come with him to the city, where he will provide for her. Their straitened circumstances force them to take quarters in a tenement section inhabited by gangsters. During one of Billy's trips from home in search of employment, the mother hears sounds of someone falling and rushing into the dingy hallway arrives just in time to see two gangsters beating up another, Red Maguire. With the assistance of a young girl of the tenements, the mother helps the injured man to her own apartments, where she bandages his wounds. The heart of the gangster is touched by the mother's kindness to him and he vows never to forget her. Returning home one evening Billy falls in with the gangsters and goes to the docks, where drinking and gambling are indulged in. Billy is led to drink and before long is helpless. Anxiety of the mother over Billy's absence causes "Red" Maguire to go in search of him and he arrives just as Billy is being led away by a policeman to jail where he is later sentenced to thirty days imprisonment. Not forgetting her kindness to him and wanting to spare the mother knowledge of Billy's arrest "Red" Maguire sends her a message in Billy's name. "Got a job for 4 weeks. Had to go darn quick." When Billy is released "Red" puts money in his hand saying "Bill your mother is a good kid. She thinks you've been working. Here's your wages for the time you've been away. Cut out the booze and get to work." Two years find Billy and little mother back on the farm for Billy went to work and earned the old home back again.

SATIN AND GINGHAM (Nov. 28).—May Prescott, daughter of wealthy parents, is somewhat of a coquette. Her brother invites a clergyman friend. The sister is much impressed with him. The favored suitor of the girl is a man of wealth but she does not love him, thinking only of his social standing. The clergyman is going to open their cottage for the return of his mother. He gets a woman to clean the place. He then asks May if she will go with him and see if the house is in order. She consents. When they reach the little home, they are both thirsty, and begin to prepare a little tea party. Fearing that she will get her white dress spoiled, Tom takes from a closet a long gingham apron and tells her to put it on which she does reluctantly. After the tea she goes with him in her machine to meet his mother. They leave May at her home, and her chauffeur drives the mother and son to their cottage. Later her engagement to the middle aged man is announced. Suddenly she rises from the supper table, pleads a headache, and leaves the room. In her room, she takes off the engagement ring and writes a note saying that she cannot marry a man she does not love. At the home of the young man, his mother tells him to go and light the fire for tea, he does so and returns. May steals into the house, into the kitchen, sees the tea boiling, goes to the closet for the apron and puts it on. She takes the tray, and it is a very demure little person who serves the tea to the mother and son. Later the mother leaves the room, the girl standing before the fire. The young man remembers her dislike for the apron, goes to her and tries to unfasten it, but she shakes her head and tells him that she wants to wear it all the time. She half turns and he takes her in his arms.

THE STROKE OAR (Nov 29).—Bud Hagen, sophomore, is the captain of the Varsity eight. The crew is returning to the club house after a practice spin and several of the town girls are waiting for them, among them Dorothy Butler, who is "very sweet" on Bud. The crew and girls leave the club after the boys are dressed, and Dorothy and Bud meet the Dean. After taking the girls home, Bud and his roommate, Billie Corson and Jack Thompson, are walking across the campus when they see some freshman numerals "1915" painted high on the chapel tower. They are perturbed and after reaching Bud's room they concoct a scheme to paint the sophomore numerals "1914" on the chapel bell and steal the clapper. Bud is shown climbing the tower. The Dean catches Bud, the other boys getting away. He takes the clapper and the freshman's pennant from Bud and orders him to appear at his office in the morning. Bud goes to the Dean's office and is told that as a punishment he will not be permitted to row in the race. He goes back to the boys and tells them. At the suggestion of "Dick Larkin," their roommate, they go to the "coach" and tell him. He calls on the Dean and attempts to have his order revoked but with no success. Bud calls on Dorothy. She encourages him by saying that she will call on the Dean. This she does and while the Dean would like to please his little favorite he will not give in. That night in Bud's room he and his roommates decide upon a plan to have Dorothy take the Dean off for a stroll. Telephoning their plan to Dorothy the boys get in hiding, and as the Dean and Dorothy come near they kidnap him and carry him to an old log cabin. After the crew has embarked from the club house, the Dean climbs out of the chimney. He dashes away and while the race is in progress rushes into the scene, snatches a pair of field glasses and discoveres Bud is rowing. In view of the fact that his college is winning he loses his dignity by jumping around like a school boy.

RANCH-MATES (Nov. 30).—Ed Manly and Burt Atkinson are pals, Ed is the foreman of the ranch and shares his quarters with Burt, who has a sister, whom he has kept in school for years. One day he came in contact with a cattle rustling band and was persuaded to join them. He saw what he believed to be a fortune in a few months. It would mean so much to his little sister—complete

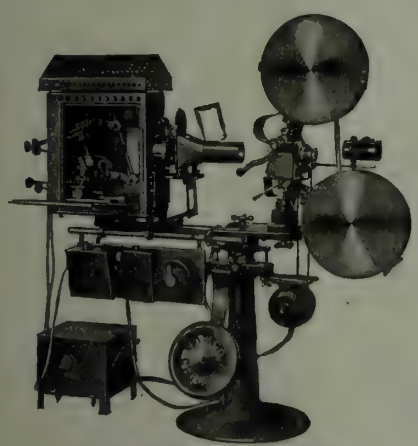
OUR EASTERN USERS
OUR EASTERN BUYERS

We now have an office in New York City, established for the convenience of Motiograph users, Motiograph buyers, and for the exhibitor who would like to use a better machine, but who has, in the past, been held back because of lack of repair facilities.



The 1913 Model Motiograph

THE DAY IS PAST when any old machine will answer the demand for the modern PICTURE PALACES so fast replacing the old ordinary picture show where the patrons were asked to STAND FOR any old sort of projection they might see on the screen.

IF YOU ARE NOT FAMILIAR with the high grade construction, the ease of operation, the quality of picture and generally superior class of The MOTIOGRAPH, call in and get acquainted with us.

THE 1913 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH in several different equipments is on display in our EASTERN OFFICE, 30 East 23d Street, just off Broadway, New York City.

OUR REPAIR REPARTMENT will be in charge of one of the most competent mechanics in our Chicago factory. A man who has been in the employ of our company from the time the Motiograph was only on paper. Before its reputation as the best made machine was thought possible.

OUR AIM IN COMING TO NEW YORK is to extend to the Eastern user, and future users, of The Motiograph every possible facility which is now being offered by the Eastern manufacturers of other makes.

WE WILL CARRY IN STOCK a full and complete line of machines, repair parts and accessories for the Motiograph machine. We will repair your Old Motiograph mechanism in one day; if not, we will arrange to loan you an emergency mechanism while yours is being repaired. We will repair your mechanism at ONLY the cost of the actual parts supplied. No charge will be made for labor.

Remember—The Motiograph guarantee is the most liberal ever made

Remember—You can buy direct from us, or from the nearest dealers education, better clothes. He paid nightly visits to the rustlers' camp and each time returned unseen. Finally the Sheriff caught two of the band, Burt escaped but one of the captured men confessed. Burt was implicated and an order for his arrest issued. That day he received a letter from his sister saying she was coming to visit him, but when the sheriff told him that he was "wanted" he knew it was all over for him. His sister would lose her love for him when she learned of it. He told the sheriff this and exacted a promise from him not to tell her. Then there was but one thing left for him to do and he did it. When the smoke cleared away Burt was cold in death. The sheriff and posse stood in awe and reverence over his lifeless body, as Ed, his pal, rushed on the scene. Next day Burt's sister arrived and Ed escorted her to his quarters. Replies to her questions regarding her brother were evaded, but finally she learned of his death. She was broken hearted. Ed told her how bravely he died. He had stood up against the cattle rustlers' hot fire only to fall mortally wounded. Ed offered her his love to make her happy and as she needed a friend he was the one.

ECLIPSE.

THE MASQUERADERS (Nov. 20).—While the guests are arriving for the fancy dress ball, Mr. Whitney, the host, is in a quandary; he cannot decide upon a suitable costume. Suddenly a curious thing happens. An escaped convict, endeavoring to elude his pursers, enters the window and walks straight into Mr. Whitney's arms. Without a thought of caution, the latter sees his opportunity and suggests an interchange of clothes which pleases both parties.

Assuming a furious attitude he then enters the drawing room and creates the hit of the evening. Later, however, his troubles begin. While strolling through the grounds he is suddenly seized by the police and carried off to jail. Believing the whole thing a joke, Mr. Whitney does not resist, but begins to realize the serious aspect of affairs when he is locked in a cell and told that he has but a few hours to live.

The guests soon miss him and inform his wife who begins a frantic search. Finally the butler remembers that he conversed with two policemen who were looking for an escaped convict.

The whole matter gradually becomes clear to all and they hasten madly to the prison. A hasty explanation gains them admission and Mr. Whitney is soon in the arms of his wife.

EDISON.

THE THIRD THANKSGIVING (Nov. 25).—A review of this subject as written by Mr. L. B. Harrison was published in last week's issue on page 638.

"SOME RARE SPECIMENS AND A FEW OLD FRIENDS" NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL PARK (Nov. 26).—One of the most unique specimens is the Secretary bird from South Africa. It belongs to the Hawk family and lives principally on snakes which it kills by stamping with its feet, this action being shown in the film.

The Giant Galapagos Island Tortoises are the only living link that connects the present wit hthe reptilian age. A specimen is here shown that is estimated to be four hundred years old. Among the wonders of the bird family is that emperor of the air, the Condor of South America, which flies almost to the height of six miles. The famous Gila Monster, the only known poisonous lizard, is brought close to view, the Tasmanian Devil, a very savage and powerful little beast belonging to the Marsupial family, grotesque in appearance and a product of Australasia; the Capybara of South America, the largest living rodent, which looks like an enormus rat weigbing about seventy-five pounds; a Puma from Texas; South American Tapir, Musx Ox from the Arctic Circle and the Great Crowned pigeons from New Guinea are all shown.

A small herd of Mongolian Wild Horses vie with the Pygmy Hippopotami from Liberia for distinction. These were secured at the enormous cost of twenty-five thousand dollars and are the only ones ever taken alive; more, they are the only living link between the Zebra and the horse and are descendants of the Ephippus.

THE TOTVILLE EYE (Nov. 27).—The Totville Eye is the name of a newspaper published in Totville. John Adams, the editor, has an assistant in the printing office, a kindly old fellow known as Scotty. Having at one time stuck type on a metropolitan daily, Scotty favors modern journalism, but his views make no impression on the formal Mr. Adams. Mr. Adams is suddenly called out of town. He departs leaving Scotty in charge. Just as Scotty and Sammy (the printer's devil) are about to lift the form of the first page on to the old-fashioned hand press they drop it and the type is "pied." Scotty decides to set up an entirely new first page and to that end he nominates Sammy as the reporter and sends the youngster out to gather some real live village news. Sammy is seen in the act of picking up several choice bits of information and rushing back with his stories to Scotty who hastily puts them into type. When the paper is given out to the villagers the following morning the population is in an uproar, but as it happened in each case the publication of the sensational news works out well for the persons involved. When Mr. Adams, the editor, returns and discovers the audacious articles in his staid old paper he has visions of a half dozen libel suits, and his rage against Scotty knows no bounds for taking such a liberty. In the midst of his tirade he is interrupted by the various parties concerned, who come rushing into his office, as he supposes, to demand an explanation for his daring publication, but to his great astonishment, they express themselves most gratefully for the lesson it has taught them, and thank him again and again.

THE ISLAND OF CEYLON, INDIA (Nov. 29).—There is a beauty spot in India, sea kissed on every side, scorched by the beating sun at noon, lulled by the breath that twilight gives. The scenic portion of Ceylon is not only coast deep, but extends far into the interior. Imagine such scenes as the Devil Dancers, snarling and grinning, twisting and turning in the ignorance of their belief that such contortions will heal their sick and drive away evil spirits. A street scene in Colombo, depicting how tea is transported to the shipping dock is typical of non-progression and fascinates by its remoteness. Another scene shows elephants standing deep in a stream just showing their backs and eyes above the water while others more sportive indulge in unwieldy gambols.

ON DONOVAN'S DIVISION (Nov. 30).—Donovan "fired" for Engineer Tracy on the fast freight run. The manly ways of the big fireman had completely won little Kitty Carlin, the daughter and assistant of John Carlin, station agent at Hillsdale. Donovan adored Kitty, but dared not tell her of his love. The regular Sunday excursion train to the lake left Perrin Station, half way down the mountain, loaded with women and children. It was followed by the fast freight With Tracy at the throttle and Donovan "firing."

All went well until the steep south grade was reached, when Tracy looked down across the double reverse curve that stretched three miles below. The excursion train had slowed down a bit to keep on schedule time, so Tracy applied the air brakes to avoid getting too close to the other train on the grade. They failed to work! He quickly called Donovan and together they worked at the brakes, the forty heavily laden box cars behind, fast gaining momentum and pushing the now useless engine ahead at increasing speed. Then the yellow streak in Tracy asserted itself; he prepared to jump and desert his engine. Donovan was at him like a tiger and together they grappled in the swaying cab until a blow sent Donovan down long enough to enable the cowardly engineer to jump.

Donovan sprang to the throttle. God! only a quarter of a mile now separated the trains. A sudden thought—there was one chance in ten thousand, and Donovan took it. South River station was just ahead. Quickly scribbling a message on the back of an order slip, he wrapped it in his handkerchief, weighted it with a lump of coal—leaned far out of the swaying cab and heaved it through the window of the little station. In one minute that message was flashed to Hillsdale, where Kitty was at the key, and in thirty seconds more the brave girl had side-tracked the excursion train and turned the switch back, sending Donovan and the fast freight on down the main line.

Donovan runs the fast freight regularly now and at a certain crossing waves to little Mrs. Donovan.

ESSANAY.

MR. HUBBY'S WIFE (Nov. 26).—Mr. Hubby, who attempts to flirt with his pretty stenographer, has his face soundly slapped by the girl and she leaves at once. Getting his friend Hobbs on the 'phone, Hubby asks him to send up a peach of a stenographer and Hobbs does so. Cassie proves to be a bewitching girl, and Hubby is making outrageous love to her when his wife enters and catches them. She gets rid of Cassie in short order, upbraids her unfaithful spouse and makes him carry her grips to the station, as she is planning a trip to the country. Hubby accompanies her halfway; then begs off and she allows him to return. But she does not take the train. Instead, she plans with her friend, Mrs. Briggs, to cure Hubby of his flirting. Next morning Mrs. Briggs, disguised as an ugly old maid, is installed in Hubby's office as stenographer by Mrs. Hubby; then Mrs. Hubby again departs, supposedly to take the train. But she makes a detour, returns to the office during Hubby's absence, changes places with Mrs. Briggs and prepares for Hubby. Thinking wifie gone, Hubby returns and starts to dictate a letter to Cassie, saying wifie has gone to the country, etc. Then suddenly Mrs. Hubby throws off her disguise, and Hubby is mauled about the office until he is a sight, by the enraged woman. He finally promises to be good, and she forgives him.

THE STAIN (Nov. 27).—Fred Winters, a young chap, loves Miriam Shelby. Calling on her one evening, Fred is about to propose, when his chum, Arthur, enters, and Miriam appears to slight Fred with her attentions to Arthur. Fred leaves and, in his room, contemplates ending his life. Falling asleep, he dreams of his ancestor, Rosny, who loves the fair Lady Madeline. Louis, a young gallant, is also a suitor for Madeline's hand. Finding them together one morning, Rosny insults Louis, a duel is fought and Louis is slain. Seeking out the Duke, Madeline's father, Rosny demands her hand in marriage. Forced into the union with Rosny, whom she loathes, Lady Madeline dies of a broken heart, and, the repentant Rosny is left to mourn beside her bier. Tossing in fitful sleep, Fred is suddenly awakened and has only time to hide the revolver when Arthur hands him a letter that has just been brought to the house. Tearing it open Fred finds it is from Miriam, asking why he left so hurriedly and to be sure to come and see her next evening. Realizing the folly of his intended step, Fred warmly wrings his chum's hand and rejoices at his self-salvation.

THE BOSS OF THE KATY MINE (Nov. 28).—Joe Benson, foreman of the Katy Mine, breaks the rules one day by taking a drink of whiskey while at work. He is seen by Bushnell, the mine boss, who lectures him severely. At noontime Mrs. Benson brings Joe's dinner. Starting home she is called into Bushnell's office, and the scoundrel attempts to force his love upon her. Looking through the window, Benson discovers the situation, bursts in, knocks Bushnell down and takes his wife home. A few days later Mrs. Benson calls on Bushnell and begs him to put Benson back to work. Bushnell agrees to do so if she will leave her husband. Desiring to get Benson away from the mine, Bushnell has one of his men attempt to intoxicate him. An hour later Bushnell leaves a note at Benson's home, advising Mrs. Benson he will await her answer at his office that night. Staggering into the house Benson finds the note, secures his revolver, goes to Bushnell's office with the intention of killing him, only to find the mine boss dead on the floor from a stroke of apoplexy. Seeing that providence has stayed his hand, Benson returns home and joins his wife and little one in a prayer of thanksgiving.

THE IRON HEEL (Nov. 29).—Old Abner Wiley, a wealthy and crabbed miser, is rescued from some tormenting boys by the son of his bitterest enemy, Robert Gregg. Back in the Rebellion days, Wiley and the elder Gregg both loved the pretty Laura. Gregg won her and Wiley has nursed his revenge long after Gregg's death. Discovering the identity of the younger Gregg, Wiley concocts a fiendish plan to bring about his revenge. He makes Gregg heir to all his possessions. In his excitement young Gregg leaves his heavy walking stick in Wiley's library. Next morning Gregg is arrested at the breakfast table for Wiley's murder. An investigation of the miser's library reveals the walking stick blotted with blood, and the entire room showing evidences of a struggle. Detective Ross discovers pieces of Wiley's personal belongings in the ruins of a burned house nearby, and Gregg is further accused of having burned the body after the murder. He is tried, convicted, and sentenced to death. On the morning of the execution Ross is at headquarters when one of the attendants passes him with a tray of empty dishes. Instantly Ross recalls seeing Wiley's maid coming from the second floor of the old house with a similar tray of dishes. His brain working rapidly, Ross rushes to the Wiley home, places the maid and butler under arrest, then lights a smoke torch, places it in the hallway, and shouts "Fire!" loudly. Suddenly, through the dense smoke, a panel in the wall slides back and old Wiley, trapped like a rat, staggers out in a paroxysm of fear. Captured by Ross, and realizing his dastardly scheme has come to naught, Wiley dies of heart failure, while Ross reaches the jail in time to stop Gregg's execution.

BRONCHO BILLY'S MEXICAN WIFE (Nov. 30).—Broncho marries a Mexican girl at the earnest entreaty of her dying father. Later a Mexican singer wins her love and, to get Broncho out of the way, she has him arrested and jailed on the charge of having assaulted her. In a frenzy of rage, Broncho secures the sheriff's revolver, escapes from jail and tracks the pair at his shack. Meanwhile the Mexican singer's sweetheart, jealous of his attentions to Broncho's wife, reaches the shack first and, when Broncho bursts in, gun in hand, he finds the pair dead on the floor, her knife having found both their false hearts.

BILLY'S BURGLAR (Nov. 22).—A review of this two-reel special subject as written by Mr. Louis Reeves Harrison was published on page 640 of the issue dated November 16.

OMENS OF THE MESA (Nov. 25).—Texas Reilly, the outlaw, does not hesitate to kill, but when the flying buzzard casts its shadow across his pathway, he is filled with fear. The chief of the rangers is hot upon his trail. Reilly has no use for his wife, but loves his little daughter. The outlaw secretes his illgotten gains in a "hide-out" in the hills, overlooking the ranger's hut. Fearing capture, he sneaks upon the officer as he is riding by and shoots him. The wounded man succeeds in reaching his cabin, where he is, aided by his old helper, who, after he makes him comfortable, goes to Mrs. Reilly for assistance. During his absence, the desperado makes up his mind that his pursuer must be gotten out of the way. He crawls over to his hut and places underneath it a large can of powder with a long fuse, which he ignites, makes his way back to his "hide-out," where he watches with fiendish delight for the expected explosion.

Mrs. Leilly, with her little girl, hastens to the aid of the wounded friend. Her husband sees them enter the cabin and knows that the only thing in the world he loves is in that cabin about to be blown to eternity. Seized with a paroxysm of remorse and despair, he shoots himself dead.

"BELL & HOWELL STANDARD" MOTION PICTURE FILM REEL

The B. & H. Standard Film Reel is the result of careful experiment and intimate knowledge of the requirements of successful MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION.

The merits of this reel have been tested for over six months, fully demonstrating that by its use an almost unbelievable amount of tears and scratches will be avoided.

ELEVEN INCH OUTSIDE DIAMETER, FIVE INCH HUB, HOLDS ONE THOUSAND FEET OF FILM

IT IS an established fact that the first two hundred and fifty and the last one hundred feet of film endure the greatest strain.

The strain on a reel with a five-inch hub equals the strain on a reel with a small hub after two hundred and fifty feet of film have been taken up. The first damage is caused by "take up" strain, and the last hundred feet is damaged by the strain between top sprocket and magazine.

217 WEST ILLINOIS ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

While his wife is attending her suffering friend, her little girl steps outside the cabin and sees the smoking fuse. She tells her mother. She lifts the stricken man from his cot and leads him and her child to a small "dug-out" or cyclone cellar, and closing the doors after them, they barely escape the terrible explosion.

Emerging from their hiding-place, they behold the complete devastation before them, and thank the good God for their deliverance.

IN THE FLAT ABOVE (Nov. 26).—Tom Talbot, a bachelor, has an apartment just above pretty little Priscilla Putnam, who gives singing lessons. Tom gives a bachelor's supper to some old friends. After feasting, they start a little game of cards, during which noises begin to ascend from Priscilla's conservatory, just underneath. To counteract the disturbance, the men begin to pound and jump on the floor. The pupils decamp and Priscilla goes to bed. The boys keep up the racket so vigorously, the ceiling and the chandelier fall from the fastenings. Priscilla screams and runs from the room. Tom and his friends come downstairs to see what damage they have done. The boys feel ashamed of themselves. Tom has never met Priscilla before, and is very sorry. He offers to make all repairs and see that everything is restored in proper shape. After this occurrence, Priscilla plies her vocation without interruption and she and Tom become more and more friendly. A few months later Tom's friends of the card party decide to give Tom a surprise. On their way up to his apartment, they find Priscilla's rooms for rent and on the door of Tom's apartments a notice that "Mr. and Mrs. Talbot will return in two months."

THE WOOD VIOLET (Nov. 27).—The birds, the trees and all nature, bring peace and joy to the heart of Olympia, a child of nature, born and brought up in its midst. Marvin Ross, on a hunting trip in the mountain fastnesses where Olympia dwells, is pursuing a rabbit. He comes up with the girl, and falls in love with her. The young man takes her to her father's cabin, where he remains a few days, during which time he becomes better acquainted with Olympia. She insists that he must not harm the animals of the woods, and to confirm his promise, he throws away his gun. He tells her of his love and she promises to become his wife. After gaining the consent of her father, they are married. They go to the city, where Marvin, being wealthy, establishes her in a beautiful mansion. She pines and longs for the woods. Her husband, noticing this, goes back to her forest home, and with her father, erects a lodge on the border of a lake. During his absence, Olympia cannot withstand her longing, and discarding her finery, dresses herself in the clothing in which she loved to roam, wanders back to the scenes of her childhood.

There she finds the lodge which her husband has built for her and a little later, he and her father find her. Her joy is unbounded when he tells her that he has built it for their future home, and the three of them will live there 'mid the scenes so dear to her heart.

THREE GIRLS AND A MAN (Nov. 28).—Tired and in need of a rest, Charles Morris accepts an invitation to visit Dick Burton at his country home. Here he meets two attractive girls, Hilda, a mercenary flirt, and Dorothy, a friend of Dick's sister, Betty. The latter is Betty's favorite and decides, if she has anything to say about it, Charles Morris will make her his wife. Betty is only fifteen years of age, but she has a wise and discerning head.

Hilda, knowing Morris is wealthy, decides to capture him, but she has more than one string to her bow. One of these strings is Mr. Bennett, an elderly adorer. Morris vacillates between the two charmers until Betty spoils Hilda's chances by waiting her opportunity when Mr. Bennett is out walking with Hilda and has her clasped within his arms. The shrewd little miss hastily summons Morris to witness the touching scene. To make doubly sure she makes their presence known to Hilda, and then apologizes for intruding upon their sweet communion. Hilda accepts the situation as gracefully as possible. It does not take much of a philosopher to guess that Dorothy and Morris have a mutual understanding, suggestive of wedding bells.

THE EAVESDROPPER (Nov. 28).—Alice takes Billy and Kitty, her little brother and sister, to a matinee. They immediately become imbued with the wonderful idea that they are actors. They set up a miniature stage of their own in the summer house on the grounds. They spy upon their sister and her lover Bob, and reproduce their love affairs. A quarrel furnishes material for an interesting production, which are a revelation and a lesson to Bob. He goes and makes amends, acting upon the suggestions of the performance.

SUSIE TO SUSANNE (Nov. 29.—Susie, the [illegible] fashionably dressed country girl, is no prize for her former sister when he returns from college, a finished and polished graduate. He takes [illegible] of her and makes himself popular among the girls of style. Susie writes her cousin [illegible] about it and she invites Susie to visit her in the city. Susie does so and Grace tells her that they will soon make John feel sorry. Susie changes her name to Susanne, and after securing an outfit of the latest style and a little coaching from Grace and her husband, Susanne is capable of holding her own among the swells of the elite.

A reception is given, to which John is invited. When he meets Susanne as a society bud, he is dumbfounded. She is so captivating and sweet that the old love of boyhood days is renewed, and he finds himself making overtures for her attention. She flouts him and coquettes with others. A few months later, she returns home to the country and he follows her. At first she will pay no attention to him, but his appeal is so strenuous she is just a little lenient. Gradually he unbosoms himself and apologizes for his uppishness and lack of appreciation for her real worth. He is so penitent that she finally allows him to take her in his arms and they seal their engagement with a kiss.

O'HARA, SQUATTER AND PHILOSOPHER (Nov. 30).—Tom O'Grady is in love with Aileen Sullivan. Old Sullivan does not object to the match, but he dislikes O'Grady and is always quarreling with him. Tim is excitable, O'Grady morose. Denis O'Hara, a kindly old Irish philosopher, is always trying to make peace. O'Grady has a goat, and one day by ill luck, it eats up some cherished flowers belonging to Tim. There is an awful row and Tim forbids Aileen to see Tom again. Tom and Aileen go to Dennis for advice and he tells them a scheme to set things right. Tom tells his father that if he cannot have Aileen he will go West.

Aileen hears the news and pretends sickness. Tim and O'Grady become alarmed and go over to consult Dennis O'Hara. He speaks to them severely and tells them they will bring down the wrath of heaven on them if they separate their children for their own foolish ends. He reduces them both to tears. They shake hands and he at once takes them over to Sullivan's cottage and Aileen is told the good news. Tom turns up, bringing a peace offering of some new flowers to Tim, and O'Hara with a smile sees his schemes succeed and everybody happy.

SELIG.

KINGS OF THE FOREST (Two reels—Nov. 11).—John Kruge and his good wife are quaint, old fashioned Boers, living in comfort on an isolated farm in the Transvaal wilderness. The one joy of their life is their beautiful daughter, Sona. Sona has grown up to maturity, and her father has selected a husband for her—a staunch, big-hearted Boer, rich in the world's goods, but many years the senior of Sona. John Vogel by name, and an old friend of the family. The young lady has a preference of her own in the person of Frits Kransmitt, Kruge's man of all work, a stalwart young fellow who loves Sona devotedly. John Vogel, upon seeing with his own eyes how things stand, gives way to his rival, and Frits and Sona are soon married. The young couple leave the parental roof and make a home of their own in the distant jungle. Wild animals abound in this vicinity, and weapons are carried at all times. Sona and Frits prosper and time slips on. A baby girl is born to the young couple and Sona names the child Iona. Three or four years more elapse, during which time many narrow escapes from death are recorded by both Sona and Frits, whose lives are in constant peril from the wild jungle beasts. John Vogel's business calls him to the neighborhood, and he makes his first call on his former friends. Frits's jealous nature fails to grasp the significance of the fatherly kiss that John gives to Sona, and in a fit of unreasoning madness, he accuses Sona of infidelity. He will listen to no explanation, and leaves the home. John, the peacemaker, goes after him and points out to him his folly. Frits, however, is too ashamed to return to his home until nightfall. When they arrive at the house, they find that Sona has taken little Iona and her effects and departed in a covered wagon. They search high and low along the trail and after hard and unceasing travel they come upon Sona's wagon, wrecked by the wild beasts. Later they find Sona, who is delirious with grief over the loss of the baby, whom she imagines had been devoured by lions while she was attempting to kill a man-eater that had stolen her calf. The men start out to hunt for the child, but find no trace of her. After a despairing search they start to pack up things preparatory to going home. Just as they are about to leave, little Iona comes upon the scene from the depths of a trunk, in which she had hidden during the lions' attack on the wagon. The little family is reunited and the mother's life and mind are saved.

MISS AUBRY'S LOVE AFFAIR (Nov. 25).—The celebrated comedienne, Miss Aubry, is told by her physicians that her nerves are in a bad way and that she will have to seek the pine woods and rough it a bit. She repairs to a well known summer resort camp, where, unconsciously, she upsets the well-laid plans of a fond father whose son is engaged to his young ward. Upon Miss Aubry's arrival in camp the headstrong son falls head over heels in love with the actress without her seeking it. The poor young girl and her guardian are made very unhappy over this unexpected defection in their plans. At the suggestion of his ward, the father calls on the actress and begs her to restore the boy's affections to their legitimate bent. With a roguish twinkle in her eye, she suggests to the father that he accomplish the desired result by "cutting out" his boy himself. The father, not being too old to enjoy a joke, consents to the plan, with the result that he not only wins the boy's errant affections back for his ward, but also wins a wife for himself.

ROPED IN (Nov. 26).—Jim Harris, weary of the rough and rowdy ways of cowboys, concludes to settle, and replies to a matrimonial advertisement. The boys get wise and poke fun at him, but when the lady's picture arrives he becomes an immediate object of envy. He quickly sends her transportation and moving funds, and puts on all the fixings to meet her. When the fair Cynthia steps from the coach, instead of showing eighteen summers, she is decrepit from fifty frosty winters. Her heart, however, is warm and pulsive and she makes love to Jim in a way that abashes that rough rider. The boys disguise as highwaymen, attempt his abduction, but Cynthia thwarts their well-meant effort by securing his release at the point of a revolver. He is weary of her endearments, however, and when he finds the cook with a trap full of live mice he induces him to turn them loose in Cynthia's room. This so frightens and disgusts the ancient maiden that she decides to leave the ranch at once and relinquish all claims.

BIOGRAPH.

GOLD AND GLITTER (Nov. 11).—As the husband leaves for the lumber regions, his wife gives him a memory message to be opened after his arrival. Attracted by a maid, cherished by the love of two old brothers, he forgets it until sometime later. The message serves its purpose, however, for through it, after a thrilling experience, the maid learns the true value of the man's love, while he in his turn, goes back to his waiting wife and finds there, along with his shame and regeneration, his heart's desire.

MY BABY (Nov. 14).—When the double wedding takes two daughters away from the old man at once, the youngest, now the only one left, in outraged spirit promises never to leave her father, but soon she too is departing for a new home. Then comes a cold hard fact of life. The son-in law claims his right to make a home alone for his wife. In his bitterness and anger, the father denies them both the house. Several years later the lonely old man meets at the gate a babe in arms. When he learns whose baby it is, heart hunger craves another sight, and sought, brings with it the only natural result.

THEIR IDOLS (Nov. 18).—Schmaltz and Labrun are neighbors and chums. Heinie Schmaltz and Irene LaBrun, their respective son and daughter, are engaged to be married. All is serene until each of the chums, while having a little social drink, toasts and lauds his particular idol. Schmaltz, of course, holds Bismarck as the greatest hero that ever lived; LaBrun favors Napoleon—then there is trouble.

HOIST ON HIS OWN PETARD (Nov. 18).—Invitations are sent out to a grand mask-ball to be held at the Metropolitan Dancing Academy, and a feature of the affair is the awarding of a gold medal to the wearer of the best costume. The maid at Smith's house receives an invitation from her sweetheart. This invitation falls into the hands of Smith and, being of a jealous nature, he thinks it is intended for Mrs. Smith. This suspicion leads him into some very embarrassing situations and teaches him a lesson.

THE INFORMER (Nov. 21).—The young lover leaving home at the opening of the war to join the Confederate Army, tells his brother to take care of his fatherless sweetheart during the perilous times which are to follow. But the brother weakens and fails to be true to his trust. He permits her to believe that her lover is dead. Caught in the neighborhood, however, between the lines of the enemy, the brother appears before them at the crucial moment. In retaliation the false brother turns informer. Both forces are aroused to arms and during the attack upon the girl defending her wounded lover and family alone in the negro's cabin, retribution comes in the form of a stray bullet.

A SAILOR'S HEART (Nov. 25).—A sweetheart at every port has ever characterized the sailor, but it is believed that the sailor in this comedy carries the tradition a trifle further. Perhaps he was sincere for the moment in his declaration that each girl he met was the first and only, but with a sweetheart at home and one in another port and a wife in still another, fate dealt very kindly with him. He was the victim of his own impulse and paid back in his own coin, went his merry way.

AN ABSENT-MINDED BURGLAR (Nov. 25).—Of course he is a big boob, but he aspired to be a hold-up man. In trying to hold up a couple of fellows on the street he is held up himself, for they are professionals at the game. They tell him to join them and become a real crook. The ambition of his life is realized. At first he looks promising to the gang, so enthusiastic is he, but later they are forced to chase him on account of his blunders.

AFTER THE HONEYMOON (Nov. 26).—Willie Doodreason marries the belle of his home town. They are both considered the fashion plates of the village, and hence the pair are well matched. But six months later, after the honeymoon is past, what a difference! No one would believe them to be the same persons—he slovenly in appearance, and she a positive slattern. Is it any wonder that they lose interest in each other? This little comedy is an object lesson, showing why many marriages are failures.

THE GROTTO OF TORTURE (Nov. 15).—A Synopsis of this two-reel special subject was published in the General Film Company's advertisement, on pages 682 and 683, of the issue dated November 16.

THE SHERIFF'S BROTHER (Nov. 27).—That two brothers may pursue widely different walks in life, and still plead guilty to the same emotion in regard to a very pretty young lady, is proven in this film. It falls to the lot of Jim Orr, the county sheriff, to arrest a band of notorious cattle rustlers. He learns that his brother Dan is a member of the band. Not only does the call of the blood make a strong appeal to Jim, but he is of the opinion that the girl he loves is in love with his brother, and for that reason he resigns his office and allows Dan to escape. Jim's sacrifice has its own reward, for as Dan is departing he thrusts a note into Jim's hand and rides rapidly away. The note is from the girl, and in it she informed Dan that his brother, the sheriff, is the man she loves.

THE THREE BACHELORS' TURKEY (Nov. 28).—Three gay young bachelors suddenly realize that it is Thanksgiving Day and that they have neither a turkey nor the wherewithal to secure one. They form a ways and means committee to settle the difficulty, and ideas fly thick and fast. A visit to "Uncle" is the most logical suggestion offered, but the only collateral they can find, except the clothes on their backs, is an old suit, which they sadly admit is of insufficient value. One of the gentlemen visits a pawnshop, where he exchanges the suit he was wearing for an old overcoat and $4 in cash. With the money he buys a turkey. His two roommates do precisely the same thing, so that when the committee reassembles there are three turkeys and a scarcity of bodily covering, as each has counted upon wearing the extra suit. The suit is being pressed by one of the bachelors, but the hot iron is left too long in one spot, with the result that the trousers go up in smoke. However, their appetites appeal too strongly, and regardless of appearances they enjoy their Thanksgiving feast.

THE GREAT STEEPLECHASE (Nov. 29).—A synopsis of this two-reel special subject is published in the General Film advertisement printed elsewhere in this number.

THE WINNING OF WHITE DOVE (Nov. 30).—Moose Head, a Yuma brave, seeking the hand of White Dove, the daughter of the chief, is informed by her father that he can only do so by securing the scalp of the Blackfoot chief, the hated enemy of the Yuma tribe. Moosehead sets forth, and upon reaching the Blackfoot camp he feigns illness. The deception wins him shelter, and the following day he makes an attempt upon the life of the chief. He is overpowered, but later escapes, and the whole Blackfoot tribe gives pursuit. Moose Head is still in the lead when he meets the Yuma chief and his own tribe. They give battle to the pursuers, and in the bitterly realistic struggle the Blackfoot chief is slain and Moose Head obtains the scarf. White Dove's dad keeps his bargain.

LYDIA PUNKHAM'S LOVE STORY (Nov. 26).—Because their parents object to the match, Lydia and Henry are forced to remain in their rooms in adjoining houses and stare at each other across the yawning yard. But love will find a way, even though the way may be a little inconvenient. The romance ends happily after a train of occurrences which provoke a great many laughs.

PICTURESQUE BRITTANY (Nov. 26).—A peek into the past is given in this gorgeously colored film, showing the quaint beauty of this land with the ruins of once magnificent structures.

THE LOVE OF ALGABERT AND ELIZABETH (Nov. 29).—A story of hopeless love and sacrifice, in which a young prince falls in love with a princess, the daughter of his ancestral enemy. The princess, realizing the impossibility of her love, enters a convent. The prince, raging at the fate which keeps him from his love, defies his enemy by entering their province alone to meet his death.

MELIES.

THE SHERIFF PROTEM (Dec. 5).—Joel Sheldon, an old moonshiner, and his daughter Rachel, live in a secluded shack among the mountains, where, in spite of sheriff's searches and raids, he continued to make and dispose of his moonshine whiskey. Finding all attempts of affection wasted upon Rachel, Tracy, a nondescript young mountaineer, threatens to betray her father for the reward which is offered for information leading to his capture, and with this threat on his tongue, he leaves the shack. Fearing for her father, Rachel tells Sheldon the truth and the old moonshiner lies in ambush awaiting the arrival of the sheriff and the man who betrayed him.

Meanwhile, Tracy, still revengeful and remembering the reward offered by the sheriff for any information leading to the capture of Sheldon, betrays the old moonshiner to the sheriff, who, on account of a wounded arm, is unable to act, but persuades and details his deputy, Forbes, to serve as sheriff protem.

Guided by Tracy, Forbes makes his way into the mountains, and upon approaching the shack, is fired upon by Sheldon and left for dead. Rachel hearing the report of her father's rifle, and fearing for him, rushes out down the trail and stumbles over the senseless body of Forbes. She supports him back to the hut, where she bandages his wounds and then discovers the warrant for the arrest of her father in Forbe's pocket. In an instant all her attention turns to anger and taking her father's old loaded rifle, she sits down before him, and with the rifle across her lap guards her guest while she waits the arrival of "Dad."

Meanwhile, Tracy reaches the shack, and, looking in through the window, sees the situation. He enters and Rachel, forgetting Forbes, arises and angrily accuses him of his treachery, and, driven to desperation by her taunts, he seizes the rifle and in the struggle for possession there is a report and a scream from Rachel as she staggers and sinks to the floor. Frightened, Tracy turns to the open door about to flee, when he is shot down by Sheldon from the outside as he rushes up, thinking as he saw the struggle through the open door, that Tracy had shot Rachel.

Forbes now regaining consciousness, kneels beside the dying girl. Sheldon rushes into the shack, and, thrusting him aside, kneels beside the body. Realizing that his only child is dead, the old man's spirits are suddenly broken and he surrenders peacefully to Forbes. The old moonshiner is marched off to the sheriff's shack, where Forbes delivers up his man and in disgust with his duty done, he surrenders his bield and refuses to serve either the sheriff or the state longer.

PHILADELPHIA.

SOME time ago Manager Eaton of the Midget Bijou Theater, located at Fifty-second and Market streets, was running a special feature, which was illustrated with a few "high art" pictures for a lobby display. Previous to the day on which the subject ran Mr. Eaton placed the pictures in the lobby, and allowed them to remain out over Sunday. A telephone call to the house by a policeman on the beat was to the effect that the pictures were objectionable, and that they must be taken in, which was accordingly done. The next day Mr. Eaton took the pictures and placed a number of date lines over a part of them, just allowing the head and a bare shoulder and one foot of the fair maid to be gazed upon by the passer-by. People became curious, and some went as far as to tear the date lines off to see the rest of the picture. This occurred about twenty times. As an advertising stunt this could not be beat, and Mr. Eaton claimed that he showed that film to the largest houses he ever had.

Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger is having a theater built at 5533 Germantown Avenue, which will cost in the neighborhood of $100,000. D. H. Harper is having a theater built at Front and Rockland streets, Logan. Levick & Waldo are having a moving picture house built at Seventh and Wolf streets. J. Fred Zimmerman will build another at Twenty-sixth and Girard Avenue. Germantown Avenue will have another, to be located at Nos. 5123-25, with Howard Snowden as owner. Alterations are being made to the theater at Franklin and Clearfield streets. Still another, to be known as the Little Theater, is under course of construction at Fifty-second and Cedar avenues, which will cost about $70,000. J. Fred Zimmerman is about to build another at Thirty-sixth and Chestnut streets, which will partly be an apartment house. Announcement has also been made that Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger has purchased a piece of ground at Lehigh and Germantown avenues, upon which he will erect a theater at a cost of $275,000, and with the ground cost it will total $400,000. Record has been made of the sale of the moving picture theater at the northwest corner of Seventh and Watkins streets to Benjamin Miller. This transaction marks the first transfer of a house in South Philadelphia for over two weeks.

In the near future assistant machine operators will have to take out a license to operate projecting machines, if the city authorities do not let up on the move which they have just started. It has come to notice that a large number of machine operators who claim to be assistants are operating more than the regular man. Several houses have been very near being ordered to close until they had both their men get the required license. A number of operators claim that the second men are not competent enough to take the examination of the regular operator, and it is proposed to have a special examination for them.

Manager Smith of the new theater which opened on November 16 at Fifty-fifth and Chestnut streets had a record-breaking crowd. A special feature was a contest, with a prize of $5 in gold to the winner, for the naming of the theater. Several thousand names were submitted, but, owing to such a large number to pick from, the winner has not as yet been announced.

Becker Brothers, who will shortly open a new theater at 628 Moore Street, will give a dinner to the members of the trade on the opening night. Some time ago Messrs. Becker gave a similar affair, which was one of the most enjoyable events that had taken place in the trade for some time. It is fully expected that the next dinner will far surpass the previous one, and the men of the trade are making special efforts to be present.

Howard S. Hartman of Reading, who was a recent visitor in the city, has just opened a new theater in that city, known as the Star, at 134 South Tenth Street.

Edward Kraupa, the pioneer film man in Philadelphia, had some feat to perform after election day. Mr. Kraupa made a wager with a friend—Mr. Kraupa backing Roosevelt—that if he lost he would push a peanut a distance of twelve squares with a steel crowbar, and not break the peanut. Of course Mr. Kraupa lost, and he pushed the peanut.

THE QUARREL (Nov. 24).—Mr. and Mrs. Lovey are the happiest of newlyweds until one evening they play poker with their friend Joker. The young couple have their first quarrel, and Joker tries, without success, to have them make up. Joker captures a burglar, takes his gun and clothes, and, disguised, compels the loveys to kiss and hug. Then he ties them together with a curtain rope and phones for the police. The frantic efforts of the frightened couple to get to the telephone, and the arrival of the police, who accuse them of having done the job themselves, make a series of laugh provoking scenes.

THE VALET AND THE MAID (Nov. 24).—A valet has a propensity for wearing his master's clothes, meets a maid who is in the employ of his master's lady friend. He thinks the maid is a swell, and she imagines he is the same. He takes her to the theater and to supper afterwards, but greatly to his misfortune, picks out the restaurant where his master and the maid's mistress are likewise dining. They imbibe too freely of liquid nourishment and when each is discovered by their respective employers and ordered to their homes, the valet upsets two heavily food-laden tables, and helps make a wreck of what was formerly a perfectly good restaurant. The next day master and valet are walking through the park, the valet carrying master's grips, when they chance to meet the maid and her mistress, the maid leading her mistress's dog. They see each other as they really are and their flirtation is at an end.

THE TONGUELESS MAN (Nov. 19).—The tongueless man comes into the lives of a young artist and his wife in a rather mysterious manner, but later proves a valuable help in straightening out the tangle of their lives. He becomes the devoted servitor of the artist and enters into their life as though he had ever been a part. The couple are dissatisfied with their lot, each not knowing why their love for the other has grown cold. She has not awakened to the full realization of her love for her husband, and he, man-like, allows the days and weeks and months to drift by without one demonstration of love. One day a supposed friend, another artist, comes into their lives, and, realizing the situation, makes desperate love to the wife. He fails in his conquest in compromising the wife, but, instead, awakens in her the real love for her husband, but the observant husband sees nothing but that his wife has ceased to love him and loves another. At last, in desperation, the husband goes out with the intention of destroying his supposed rival, but the tongueless man stops him at the psychological moment and rescues him from a serious attempt at crime and untangles the situation by showing the husband that his wife has done nothing but indulged in a light flirtation, and proves that the wife really loves him. The supposed friend is frightened away by the tongueless man, and a happy reconciliation is effected.

THE OPEN ROAD (Nov. 18).—Peggy Dodge and Billy Martin are in love with each other, and both are content with their lot until the breath of the city is wafted upon Billy Martin, in the form of his old friend, Fred Dunn, who visits him, in company with his stylish sister. The sister Jean takes a fancy to Billy and asks him to come to the city, which he does, leaving his sweetheart of the farm alone. Daily she goes about her tasks, but misses her sweetheart more and more. Every morning he was accustomed to meet her at the big gate, which he opened for her as she drove her oxen to the fields. Every evening he would meet her and together they would drive home and share the evening meal. Billy soon tires of city life, however, and one day decides to give up the bustle of the city and return to his farm and his sweetheart. This he does, creeping up to his old bedroom one night, and exchanging his beautifully cut tailor-made clothes for the homespun of the farm. This done, he creeps down to the same gate at which he was wont to meet Peggy, and as she starts to open the gate all alone he leaps from his hiding place, faces her and asks her forgiveness. In a moment they are in each other's arms.

AMBROSIO.

GRANDFATHER'S FORGIVENESS (Nov. 20).—A young man has married without his parents' consent, and he desires a reconciliation, the old people refusing all his overtures. A mutual friend devises a scheme for bringing the father and son together again. Inviting the old people to dinner, he tells the son to bring his wife and child to the house, and the latter is introduced as the son of a friend, and soon becomes a prime favorite with the old lady and gentleman, with whom he takes dinner and charms them with all kinds of childish attentions. Afterward, leaving the guests for a moment, he returns, bringing with him his father and mother, and the long delayed reconciliation at last takes place.

ECLAIR.

HIS DETERMINATION REWARDED (Nov. 19).—Guy Olliver, a married man, has fallen into the company of a certain Adolp, who lives by his wits and scheming. He induces Olliver to gamble with the usual result of losing. Olliver then begins his peculations from his employer, is caught and sentenced to prison. His sentence expires. He is back among his wife and family determined to live straight and keep away from the old associates. He secures a position. Adolp discovers him and tries to persuade him back to the old life. Olliver refuses and Adolp begins an underhanded persecution. He tells Olliver's employer he has an ex-convict in his employee and Olliver is discharged. Adolp keeps this up till Olliver discouraged of ever getting back into respectability agrees to join Adolp and his gang in a housebreaking job.

They are about to depart upon their depredation when Olliver's little girl comes to the saloon, and begs her papa to come home with her. The good in the man awakens. Hastily he writes a note of warning to the man whose home is to be robbed. This note he gives his child to deliver to the man who is to be burglarized.

Adolp, Olliver and the men are in the home and preparing to gather up the valuables when the door opens and a shot is fired. The child has delivered the note in time. The owner of the mansion secured policemen and all the gang are capturned with the exception of Oliver, who is allowed to go free as a part reward for his act. He is given a position, his determination has been rewarded.

MOTHER'S BANKROLL (Nov. 21).—Mrs. Tompkins decides to invest in a new piano, trading her old upright. The day the trade is to be consummated, she draws her money from the bank and fearing to carry it with her on a short neighborly visit, she decides to hide it in the house. Several places suggest themselves, but she makes the kitchen stove her temporary vault.

Papa Tompkins has been using some oiled rags. Taking them to the kitchen he opens the stove and finds the roll. He imagines who had hidden it there and feels that he can find a much safer place. He does, in his daughter's room, in one of her dresser drawers.

Daughter Agnes has received a present by mail that morning. Wishing to show it to her beau, she runs up to her room, opens the drawer, and under the little box finds the bank roll. Rather at a loss to account for its presence there, she imagines that it is mother's. "Poor place," says she, "I will find a really safe place for it." She does, in brother Billy's room, in a hat on the closet shelf.

Son Billy breaks his hat, remembering that he has a "holdover" that is fairly good, he repairs to his room for it. He finds the roll, imagines the owner, and decides to place it where it will be perfectly safe, the piano in the parlor.

The piano company sends for the old piano. Agnes allows the men to take it, then leaves with her beau for a soda. Bridget, the hired girl, returns. Although it is her day off, builds a fire and Mrs. T. returns to find her depository a blazing furnace. The father arrives, reassures her—money gone—Agnes happens in—she reassures them both—nothing doing—Billy found on the lawn, laughs at their foolish fears, he shows them where it is—not—then comes the race after the piano, the frantic unwrapping of same when found and the final restoration of mother's bankroll to her, to the surprise of the piano movers.

THE BLACK HAND (Nov. 21).—Mr. Bodkens reads an account in the paper of different people receiving black-hand letters and warnings. To him it is a joke until one of his fellow clerks impresses on him the fact that they are really dangerous and mentions that even he, Bodkens, is liable to receive one.

Bodkens is a trifle nervous when he arrives home. Finding an imprint of a black hand on his door does not help matters and added to this, when he and his wife and four friends sit down to dinner, the hand once more appears, this time on the tablecloth. The search for the owner of the hand and the finding of him, are amusingly shown and must be seen to be enjoyed.

INSECT HUNTING (Nov. 22).—One will be able to follow the hunting of insects in meadows, the hunting for insects on branches by means of umbrellas, searching under stones and in the trunks of trees, on carrion, etc., etc.; then in an extraordinary way one will learn how to hunt the aquatic insect. Next some very curious specimens will attract the spectator's attention by their ugliness or ferocity, such as the Praying Mantis, the Chrysomelis or the Green Beetle, the ferocious carabis, etc. He will be able to also notice the Dytiscus (swimming beetles), the enemies of fish culture.

POWERS.

A LEG AND A LEGACY (Nov. 20).—Dave Wall receives a letter from his uncle's attorney stating that providing Dave marries a protegee of the old man, who Dave has not seen for sixteen or seventeen years, the entire fortune will be left to the new wife and Dave. Otherwise the fortune will revert to the State. Dave is in dire need of the wealth left by the old man and is thunder struck at the conditions under which the money is left to him. He commissions his man-servant to investigate and report to him regarding the beauty of the unknown girl. Joe starts his investigation and comes upon the young lady, who has been paddling in the river. She has replaced one shoe and stocking. She hears someone approaching and realizing the predicament she is in she quickly places the bare foot under her and sits on it. When the would-be hawkshaw discovers her, he realizes on seeing only the one foot that the girl is minus a leg. He so reports to his master.

Dave resolves to let the fortune go by default, but when the landlord presses him for his rent, he realizes that there is nothing left for him but to take the best of a bad bargain. In the meantime a flirtation is taking place on the beach between Dave and a very handsome young lady. Dave is badly smitten, particularly so, after having saved the young lady from drowning. As the two become better acquainted, they learn one another's name when lo! and behold! they discover that each is the one the other must marry to inherit the money.

HER YESTERDAY (Nov. 22).—Flo, a village milliner, goes to the city and mingles with a vicious set. She is living with Dick in luxurious apartments. She writes her parents that she has a position in a millinery store at a small salary. They write that they are coming to visit her and she is alarmed. She rents a cheap room and introduces them to it as her home. They leave and she accompanies them to the station and then returns to the humble apartments and thinks of her deception, the shame of it all and the life she is leading, and she is obsessed by a desire to reform.

That night she meets her gay companions at a cafe and tells them that she has decided to forsake the immoral life and return home. They greet her decision with jeers, but she leaves. She is followed by Dick to their apartments, but she repulses him and returns to her native village. There she meets Anson, who loves her. She loves him in return, but cannot bring herself to mate with the good man. She meets Dick on the street and he forces her to meet him, saying he must have money and she must assist him to get it. The building committee of the village church meets and the money is entrusted to Anson. He passes the isolated spot where Flo meets Dick. Dick secretes himself and Anson shows Flo the money. Dick being a witness unbeknown to the minister. The preacher goes and Dick rejoins Flo and tells her he is going to rob the pastor. Flo forestalls him by gaining entrance to the study of the pastor through a window, armed with a revolver. Anson is seated in an adjoining room. Dick enters through the door and is covered by Flo with a gun. She demands him to go and not rob the church, but in her fright she weakens and Dick knocks the gun from her hand, the noise of which arouses the minister and he grapples with Dick, overpowering him. Dick thinks he has the solution and orders Anson to release him or he will tell the world the shame of Flo. She tells the preacher to hold him and then Dick tells of Flo's past life. When Dick has finished, the minister points to the door, bids Dick go, and takes the trembling girl in his arms. He will forgive and forget her past life.

WAS MABEL CURED? (Nov. 22).—Mabel Jones returns home from boarding-school, filled with the idea that she is a born novelist and with a partially written manuscript upon a sociological subject, in which the hero is a burglar. Mabel's father is a sergeant of police and having heard in his past experience about all the dealings with burglars he cares for, he turns a deaf ear to her pleadings. Mabel persists in her determination and the sergeant is about to grow real angry when he sees a chance to cure her of her mad infatuation for under-world subjects. Among the sergeant's acquaintances is a young novelist named Jefferson Lang, who is also writing a sociological novel and in which the heroine is a sneak thief.

By clever planning and aided by the rest of the police boys, Mabel and Jeff are brought together, he believing her to be "Shifty Sadie," the sneak thief, and she knowing him as "Baffles," the gentleman burglar. Then follows a game of cross purposes and misunderstandings between the young couple, which culminates in them both being arrested by a strange policeman. Unfortunately for the sergeant, his "fine station hand" in the matter is discovered by the pair at the eleventh hour and through the kindly aid of a prison chaplain they turn the tables on the sergeant and the station house in general by getting married.

A FIGHT FOR FRIENDSHIP (Nov. 18).—Will Irwin and Fred Seward are college chums and friends. On graduation day, being full-fledged engineers, the boys are reviewing the good times they have had together. During the temporary absence of the boys, some students enter the room and, as a joke, they mutilate several of Fred's photographs, throw his clothes around and put some of his more valuable belongings in Will's grip. Fred returns and flies into a passion and upon Will's entrance he accuses him and finally calls him a thief. They part bad friends.

A few years roll by and Fred proposes to and is accepted by Mae Rand, the daughter of the rich contractor, John Rand. He is told to "ask papa." Fred selects a bad moment, for Mr. Rand is absorbed in a telegram which tells him that his chief engineer has quit his job and a big transportation project is held up. Fred sees the wire and offers his services. Rand accepts and tells him that if the contract is finished on time Fred can marry Mae.

Fred goes to work diligently, but his progress is retarded by the surrounding ranchers, who object to the project. Finally they descend upon the camp, intimidate the workmen and bribe the storekeeper not to furnish further supplies. Fred shows fight and is knocked unconscious.

The foreman, believing Fred to be in a serious condition, writes out a wire to send to Rand. As he is about to send it, Fred's old chum, Will, rides up seeking a job. He is acquainted with the facts, recognizes Fred and resolves to heap coals of fire on his head. He shows them his credentials and attacks matters in a determined way. Being refused stores, he makes a night raid, binding the storekeeper, and leaving his check for what he has taken. He demands the protection of the sheriff and deputies and fights the ranchers with his own coin.

The work is completed as Fred recovers his reasoning powers. He asks to see the man who saved his bacon, but Will rides away in a good humor, leaving a little note asking for the return and continuance of the old friendship.

IN THE LONG RUN (Nov. 20).—A happy little family consisting of Jim Dowlan, his wife and mother, just finish their meal and Jim rides away to town on business. No soner has he gone than "One-shot Bill" rides up and seeing the two women alone, forces them to give him food and water, after which he sets out for town. Arriving there, he is recognized by the sheriff, but before they can capture him, Bill has made his escape. Fleeing from the posse, Bill remembers the two timid women in the shack where he had demanded food, so hurries there and commands them to hide him. As he hears the husband returning, Bill pushes the wife in the closet in front of him, informing the mother if she values her daughter's life not to reveal his hiding-place. Jim enters, but can get no satisfaction from the mother, but looking in the mirror on the opposite wall, he sees Bill as he opens the closet door to threaten her, and realizes his wife's danger should he make a false move. As he is trying to decide what would be the best to do, he hears the sheriff and his posse approaching. Then enter the shack, but Jim is forced to declare he knows nothing of Bill. When the sheriff departs, Jim steps out on the pretext of joining his party, but really to tell of the desperado's hiding-place. Acting upon the sheriff's advice, Jim mounts and rides away with the men, but not so the sheriff and his deputies. They station themselves on either side of the door, so when Bill, believing the coast clear, comes outside, they at once disarm him and lead him away to his just deserts.

THE SHANGHAIED COWBOYS (Nov. 22).—The foreman of the O. D. Ranch is having the "deuce and all" of a time with his cooks. The last edition fires herself while in her usual unsober condition. The foreman plans a treat for the boys and engages a real live French cook. The boys are expectantly awaiting results and have brought a large appetite along with them. M. Caspar is introduced and greets one or two of the boys in enthusiastic style, leaving them wiping their faces in disgust. The course dinner is served in small portions and the finger bowl water duly drank and the boys ask for something to eat. Caspar is enraged, and goes. The boys adjourn, drink long and deep and his themselves to a box car to talk it over. Deep slumber overtakes them and breaks up an interesting debate. The box car lands them in a seaport town. The captain of the "Nancy Lee" is over particular about the polishing of his deck and brasses. The seamen don't like the job and they desert in a body. The captain and the mate go ashore. They cannot sail without a crew. Disappointment drives them to a saloon, and there they find a bunch of mystified cowboys trying to find out where they are and why? A bright idea strikes the captain, and for a slight consideration the barkeeper adds something to the boys' grog, which sends them into dreamland once more. When they awake they are confronted by the captain and his mate, are forced to don sailor togs and holystone decks and clamber into the rigging. They do it unwillingly and ungracefully. The boys concoct a plan. They wait their chances and lasso the captain and the mate and force the man at the wheel to steer for terra firma. Arriving, they take the first train home and are received with open arms by the puzzled foreman and two delightful girls, who are assisting the repentant and reinstated cooky "of the first part" in the culinary department.

BISON.

TRAPPED BY FIRE (Nov. 19).—The mother is dying. She commends the care of her younger son, Bill, to his eldest brother, Jack, who accepts the trust. Jack is steady and trustworthy and has his hands full with his well-meaning but harum-scarum brothers. The boys go West and obtain employment on Circle C Rranch, where both fall in love with Milly, the ranchman's daughter. Jack proposes to Milly, but it is made clear to him that the girl is interested in Billy. As soon as Jack sees this he accepts the situation sorrowfully. The cowboys go off to the round-up, leaving Jack and Bill in charge. Bill and Jack go riding; they see the Indians drinking and scent trouble. It becomes necessary for one of the boys to defend the pass in order to let the other carry a warning to the cowboys. They draw and Jack so arranges it that Billy may get away. The Indians give chase and divide up, one lot going to the ranch and the other chasing the boys. Billy warns the cowboys and they get to the ranch in time to rescue Milly and her father from the burning cellar in which they have taken refuge. The Indians are repulsed and Jack's body is found and all recognize how faithfully poor Jack kept his trust.

THE HALF-BREED SCOUT (Nov. 23).—The pioneers are moving West. The guide Dickson, and Jim are both in love with Lucy. Jim has the call. Dickson cannot accept his defeat gracefully, and when Jim finds him forcing his attention upon Lucy, there is a struggle, in which Dickson is worsted. Dickson temporarily abandonds the wagon train, which runs out of water on the desert. Great suffering results. Dickson rides up with water and offers to supply the wagon train if Lucy is given him in marriage. Lucy, seeing the suffering around her, offers to go with him, but Jim and others interfere and he rides away.

Jim starts out to find water and is found on the point of death by some trappers, who revive him. They ride in haste to the wagons and find a few survivors, Lucy being one of them. The refugees are taken to the settlement. Later the Indians visit the setlement for trading purposes, Dickson accompanying them. He sees and recognizes Jim and Lucy, but they do not see him. Dickson awaits his chance, selects a moment when Lucy is out alone, seizes her and rides off with her. He takes her to his squaw, Red Flower's tepee. Jim and the trappers give chase when her absence is discovered, but have to abandon their search. Red Flower resents the intrusion of the "white squaw," but relents when Lucy soothes her and attends to the bruises inflicted by Dickson. She crawls through the back of the tepee with Lucy, leads her to the edge of the cliff and going down first, the two women cautiously descend to the bottom of the cliff.

Dickson and the Indians set out to track them, but Red Flower's cunning is more than equal to theirs, and after hiding during the day, Red Flower steals up to the camp at nightfall and takes two horses. The women ride away. Dickson and the Indians hear the sound of galloping and follow. The girls reach the border of the settlement just in time, and Jim and the trappers ride out and rescue them. Dickson and the braves are pursued, and Dickson is killed. Jim and Lucy are reunited.

THE DEBT (Nov. 21).—A review of this two-reel drama, as written by Mr. G. F. Blaisdell, was published in the issue under date of November 2, on page 435.

CHAMPION.

BLUE RIDGE FOLKS (Nov. 18).—Dallas Walters and James Barker, two young farmers, love Ruth Barton. Dallas is the favored suitor, and this incites the jealousy of Barker to such an extent that he threatens to foreclose the mortgage on the house of Mrs. Walters, Dallas' mother. But the demand is met by Dallas, much to the surprise of Barker, who then picks a quarrel with Dallas. A tramp who had heard Dallas tell Ruth of his payment to Barker, goes to Barker's house with the intention of stealing the money, but is caught by Barker. In the fight which follows the tramp hits Barker on the head, rendering him devoid of his reasoning powers, but Barker manages to fire a shot at the tramp, who, in falling down, knocks over a lamp, which sets the house on fire. Barker walks out of the burning house unseen by anyone. Dallas hears the alarm of fire and rushes to the home of Barker, believing that he is responsible for the fire, on account of the squabble he had with him. He is seen coming out by the housekeeper and is arrested. By the aid of Dallas' brother he makes his escape from the courthouse. They go to the mountains, pursued by the sheriff and his posse, where they discover Barker, whom they thought had perished in the fire. Barker, whose reason has been returned by a fall, explains his fight with the tramp who had perished in the fire. This exonerates Dallas, who immediately marries Ruth.

JACK'S WORD (Nov. 25).—Jack Burton was very active in assisting the sheriff of the county in running down cattle thieves and on the occasion of the capture of Arizona Jim, a notorious horse-thief, he so distinguished himself that he was nominated for sheriff.

Proud of the honor done him, Jack hurries to his sweetheart to inform her of his newly elected office, but she, having a horror for gun-fights, exacts a solemn promise from him never to shoot or seek to injure a fellow-man, if he desires her for his wife. Lurking in the vicinity, Arizona Jim, having served his term in prison, and nursing a grudge against Burton, overhears the promise made and plans to turn it to his advantage. Realizing that he cannot keep his promise and remain sheriff, Jack sees his predecessor and in the presence of the assembled inhabitants of the town, turns over the office to him. The old sheriff is at a loss to understand the reason and as Jack will not explain, his friends believe he has developed a "streak of yellow" and are disgusted.

Their suspicions are confirmed when Arizona Jim, knowing he is immune from punishment because of Jack's promise, publicly insults him and when Jack does not resent it with gun-play he is branded a coward. The last straw is added to his endurance when Arizona Jim insults him in the presence of his girl. Jack controls himself, then taking the lady home he seeks his tormentor in a saloon and invites him to drink. Not understanding this new attitude of the submissive Burton, Arizona accepts the proffered drink and draws his gun to further humiliate Jack in the presence of his old-time friends. Jack quickly whips out his gun and dares the man with the drop to shoot. A coward at heart, Arizona looks into the muzzle of Jack's gun and his nerve failing him, his own gun drops to the floor. Jack takes him by the collar and jerking him out of the saloon shows him up as a coward, and compels him to leave the town. He hurries to his sweetheart's home, where the news of the incident had already been carried and she accuses him of having broken his promise to her. For an answer he draws his gun and opening the ejector shows that his weapon had never been loaded throughout the encounter. The news reaches his old-time friends and Jack is given an ovation that proves his complete vindication.

HER OWN COUNTRY (Nov. 28).—The Mendes family, never having had a child of their own, had raised the orphan daughter of an American ranger. Proud and arrogant themselves, they had tried to impart to their ward a spirit of intolerance for all things, excepting family pride and traditions, but in this they had failed.

The crisis came in Viola's life with the arrival of Juan Corte, a cousin of the family. Meeting the unsophisticated girl, he desires to have her for his wife. His suit is looked upon with great favor by her Spanish foster parents. But Viola startles them all by an indignant refusal. She steals out in the dead of the night in an effort to escape and she becomes lost on the desert, where she is discovered by an American ranger, who places her on his horse and brings her to his camp. In the morning she tells him her story and he determines to shield her from her foster-parents and lay siege to her heart.

Leaving her comfortable at the camp he goes out to hunt. When her absence is discovered, all is confusion and Juan Corte declares he will pursue her, bring her back and compel her to accede to marry him. He finds the right trail and coming upon the girl in the camp of the ranger, he seizes her and returns to the hacienda. Once within, the ponderous gate is locked and with the key in his possession the enraged Spaniard taunts the poor girl, telling her that on the morrow they will repair to the Mission and be married. Viola determines to make one more attempt to escape.

Charley Dexter, the ranger, returns to his camp and seeing the horses tracks and signs of the struggle, at once surmises what has happened. He, in turn, follows the trail and comes to the hacienda. He hears Viola fumbling with the gate and calls out cautiously. She answers him and he knows he is on the right track. Carefully scaling the wall, he drops beside her. They start for the small side gate, when they are discovered by Juan, who rushes at the American intruder, poniard in hand. Dexter plants a blow directly between Juan's eyes and he drops unconscious. Mendez aroused by the struggle, hurries to the gate with a gun, but already the American is mounted, speeding away with his countrywoman to a life of happiness.

THE HIDDEN TREASURE (Nov. 30).—Bill Binks sold his property and came home in high glee, carrying the currency, for Bill didn't believe in banks. Bill tried to think of an unusual place to hide that currency and finally hit upon an old pair of boots. Then Bill betook himself off without saying a word to his faithful helpmeet. Pudd'efoot Pete, awakening from a delightful slumber beneath the sheltering side of a barrel, stretched himself and made way for the "eats." Repeated knocks at Bill's door so incensed Bill's wife that in desperation she hurled half the articles from the kitchen at poor Pete and wound up with the boots.

Getting into the boots, Pete found a giant stack of bills. Recovering from his faint, he set out upon the task of making the world happier, and incidentally spreading Bill's bills wherever there seemed no joy. He hired an automobile and set out for a restaurant. What Pete did to the chicken and the sugar is a scream. With a full stomach he hailed forth once more and seeing a poor woman grinding an organ fell to dancing, much to the happiness of all concerned. He left a small package of bills behind him and sallied forth in quest of all sorts of funny adventures.

Passing a grocery store, Pete stopped dead. Perspiration broke out in great beads on his forehead, for there staring him in the face was forty boxes of soap, neatly arranged on the store front. Pete didn't hesitate. Calling an express wagon, he paid for the soap and personally saw it taken to the wharf. Then he carefully piled it up and made one grand plunge into the middle of it, and thus did Pete get back at an old enemy. He wound up the day in a remarkable manner. Out of a new building, friends carried an injured workman. Pete followed them sadly home. To the wife he gave what remained of his money, and after a brief interval of desperate misery, struck up a tune and went back to sleep on his lumber pile.

ON BOARD THE "S. S. DUBUQUE," NAVAL TRAINING SHIP (Nov. 30).—Much has been said and done to popularize the State Militia department, but little is known about the naval training stations and through the courtesy of the Illinois Naval Reserve this series of pictures gives the outside world a beautiful glimpse of the routine through which the recruits are passed to become able seamen in the service of the marine department of Uncle Sam.

PUNCH.

OH YOU BABY (Nov. 28).—Tom Long and Billy Short are two friends in hard luck. Billy is so very small that Tom conceives the idea of dressing him in baby's clothes and leaving him on the doorstep of a handsome residence, so that he will be taken into the bosom of a wealthy family, where he will be in a position to at least get enough to eat to relieve their immediate healthy appetites. Billy is left upon Mrs. Love's doorstep, where he is found and received with joy by the family. He has a hard time keeping from making love to the maid, and at night admits Tom to the house and entertains him in lavish style with the aid of Mr. Love's cigars and champagne. The maid takes Billy out for an airing in the baby carriage. She meets her sweetheart and Billy has a hard time controlling his jealousy, especially when the Frenchman takes a violent dislike to the baby (?). Finally Billy forgets himself and starts a fight, which proves him to be the most remarkable baby on record.

POOR FINNEY (Nov. 28).—Finney, a boob, loves Marion Dean, but she cannot be bothered with him. Seeing that Finney annoys his sister, little Billy decides to play a trick on him. He lines Finney's hat with limburger cheese. The victim of the joke has a bad cold and cannot smell a thing. But everybody else can. He goes up on a Fifth Avenue bus, and is immediately left in sole possession. Everybody avoids him and he cannot understand why. Finally his hat is lifted from his head and wafted down a sewer. He buys a new one and meets Marion at the lake. She is with a young Lieutenant, whom she presents to Finney as her fiance. Overcome with emotion poor Finney dives overboard and is last seen at the bottom of the ocean petting the fish and hoping that they, at least, will love him.

HAZEL KIRKE (Nov. 17).—A review of this two-reel subject is published in another part of this issue.

THANHOUSER.

THE TRUANT'S DOOM (Nov. 24).—Tommy was vigorously opposed to the idea of going to school. He tolerated going to school for a few days, then determined to "play hookey" and hied himself to where he knew there was good fishing. He was happy for awhile, then weariness asserted itself, and he fell asleep. Tommy had a frightful dream. He imagined that cruel constables were placed upon his trail by a stern teacher, that he was captured and led to court, where all reviled him. Even his own mother disowned him as he was led away to a felon's cell and garbed in the striped uniform of shame. In his dream he and another convict escaped, but the bloodhounds of the law relentlessly took up the chase, overtook their prey at the banks of a river, and the trembling schoolboy was shot to death. He was extremely happy to wake up a few moments later and find he was still alive. In his gratitude he decided never to play truant again.

THE THUNDERBOLT (Nov. 26).—A broker who was trying to get rich dishonestly, found himself in danger of arrest. Just as he was preparing for flight a neighbor entered. This man had been poor all his life, but coming unexpectedly into a legacy of $10,000, decided that the broker was the man who could invest the money for him. The broker took the cash, stuffed it into his pockets and left his office forever. He decided that this windfall should be set apart for his little daughter. The old lodge keeper on his estate had been in his employ for years, and was very fond of the little girl. To him the broker went, swore him to secrecy and obedience, and gave him the money, which he promised to hide from everybody until the girl came of age. The broker then departed, but was captured while trying to escape, convicted, and served ten years in prison.

On his release the broker hunted up his old servant, intending to reclaim the money and with it and his daughter to start life anew. The servant had been faithful to his trust, but when the broker arrived the other man was on his death bed, and passed away without being able to tell where he had hidden the money. The ex-convict and the girl were sitting alone one night when a fearful storm arose. A thunderbolt struck the house, wrecked the stone chimney and in fragments it fell tumbling into the room. The old man jumped forward, and out of the rubbish pulled a small strong box. He opened it with trembling hands and extracted a roll of bills. A yellow piece of paper was bound with them, but this dropped to the floor as the ex-convict counted the money. The girl picked up the paper and glanced at it. She then learned that the bills were the same ones her father had stolen years before, the victim being the father of the young man to whom she was engaged.

The girl declared that the money should be restored to the rightful owner. The old man protested, and the argument grew heated. Suddenly the door opened and the girl's fiance entered. From his home nearby he had seen the lightning strike the lodge and hurried over to be of assistance. The girl took the money from her father, placed it in her sweetheart's hand and asked his forgiveness.

THE FOREST ROSE (Part One) (Nov. 29).—Forester and Maywood, two wealthy neighbor planters, volunteered their services to defend their country when the war of the Revolution broke out. Forester was made colonel of his regiment, while Maywood became a captain. The men mortgaged their plantations and gave the benefits to the government, which was hard pressed for funds. Colonel Forester was mortally wounded at the battle of Cowpens, but before he passed away Captain Maywood promised that he would care for Forester's motherless little girl. Maywood's family at the close of the war was so penniless that the government gave them 1,000 acres of land, which at that time was known as the Northwestern territory, and into this land journeyed the family.

As the years went by Albert, one of Maywood's sons, fell in love with Rose Forester. Albert continually cautioned his father against the invasion of the Indians, but the elder man was opinionated and declared that there was no danger. One day when Albert and his friend, Louis Wetzel, returned from a hunting trip they found that Maywood's cabin had been destroyed by fire by the Indians, and apparently all of its occupants, with the exception of Rose, whom Wetzel, by virtue of his woodcraft, determined had been carried off by the Indians.

Part Two.—Albert Maywood vows that he will avenge the death of his parents and will rescue the abducted Rose. He and Wetzel set out and track the Indians. They rescue Rose, but the trio encounter another band of Indians, who capture Albert and Rose, Wetzel being successful in making his escape. Albert, however, by his cleverness soon effects his escape, and he and Wetzel go in search of Rose. In their wanderings they come upon a small fort upon the banks of the Hockhocking River, the commandant of which is in fear of an attack from the Wyandottes. Albert and Wetzel go on a reconnoitering expedition for the commandant, and from a place called Standing Stone they observe the Indian village far below. As their canteens are nearly empty, Albert takes them to a nearby stream to refill them, and there he meets two women, apparently Indians. Fearing that they will give the alarm, he grapples with them, and in the course of the struggle he discovers that one of them is his "Forest Rose." The real Indian woman escapes, spreads the alarm, and hundreds of Indians surround Standing Stone. While the two men are planning the defense Rose slips away, but returns, aids the white men to pass the sentries and escapes with them. The trio are followed, but after many hardships reach the fort, where Albert and the "Forest Rose" are married.

SOLAX.

THE PARALYTIC (Nov. 27).—The story revolves about the jealous plots of Stephen Swenson, a man with little or no moral sense. He is jealous of young Henry George, who is betrothed to Blanche, the daughter of the paralytic. Swenson hires two thugs to "do up" his rival. The thugs drop George down a well, in the sight of the paralyzed man, who is powerless to interfere. Knowing that the paralytic cannot divulge the crime, Swenson comes back to make love to the paralytic's daughter. What follows is the pantomimic agony of the paralyzed man in his mute attempt to disclose the fact that Swenson is a murderer.

JENKINS-PERKINS WAR (Nov. 29).—Sallie Jenkins and Billie Perkins are engaged to be married. Their fathers go to a political meeting. Old man Perkins is a rank Roosevelt man, and old man Jenkins is a Wilsonite. They have a fierce quarrel at the meeting. On their return they find their children making love and separate them. Billie sends a note to his sweetheart, which asks her to meet him in his auto, and they would go to town and get married. Each one leaves a note to their fathers, telling them what they intended to do. The respective parents discover the notes and drive after them. There is an explosion in the automobile, which gives the parents an opportunity to catch up with them. The parents take their children home.

At early dawn Billy, disconsolate, decides to commit suicide and throw himself into the river. He leaves a note to his father to this effect, and, tearing up the sheets of the bed, makes a rope of them and exits by the window. Sallie, also very disconsolate, decides to commit suicide at the same place, and leaves a note to her father, telling him of her intention, and also makes a rope of the sheets of the bed and descends from the window.

Billie arrives at the boathouse. On the dock are a number of boats piled one on top of another, so that one cannot see from one side to the other. Billy arrives on one side, looks at the water, gets cold feet and sits down to think, drawing his hat down. As he does so, Sallie arrives on the other side of the boat, throws her gloves and pocket-book on the pier, looks at the water—gets cold feet and decides to wait. Those moments are fatal, for it gives the old people a chance to catch up and spoils the dual suicide, but Jenkins and Perkins make up and the merry war is called off.

couple quickly find that they are not alone in their billings and coings and that their elders are conducting a little courtship of their own. Due to an unfortunate collision of the two fond couples there is a halt in the passion program of the elder couple and Pearl's father writes to Fred's mother saying that all is over between them because he thinks it his duty to give attention to his daughter and not go entering into double harness again. The younger generation of this conjugal quartet disbelieve in this pre-nuptial divorce idea of their parents and with a diplomacy worthy of the foreign corps, they reunite their elders and Pearl gallantly proposes for her bashful father. Thereupon all retire to a jeweler's shop and get a wholesale price on wedding rings.

THE DESTRUCTIVE DUELISTS (Nov. 26).—Calino, getting doughty in his young age, struts into his club and over a trifle, quarrels with a fellow member. A duel is inevitable. They arrive at the dueling grounds. The spirit is willing, but the aim is weak. Both duelists perforate everything in the neighborhood but each other. Their idea of a duel is of the "catch-as-you-can" kind and they proceed to duel all over the immediate neighborhood. Calino, considering it advantageous to be at the head of the procession, takes the lead with the assistance of his two very good legs. In the characteristic French fashion they bungle into all sorts of places and like the bull in the china shop overturn crockery, people and card tables, table d'hote meals and their own reputations for courage. Calino's opponent is a good marathon racer and keeps right on after him. Their course takes them into the river and finally ends with both very much battered and bruised, but with their honors satisfied to the hilt. In jail, they proceed to smile and make up.

RELIANCE.

THANKSGIVING (Nov. 27).—According to the agreement of Dolly's separated parents, she is to spend Thursday of each week with her father. As Dolly's mother is preparing Thanksgiving dinner the maid takes her to her father, who gives her a big doll. On the way home Dolly gets lost and meets a poor girl by the name of Mary Gret, who invites her to her home. Dolly's mother is distracted upon the non-arrival of her child. She telephones her husband to come to her, and together they go to the police station. Mary's parents also rush there. When Mary's parents return Mary is preparing the Thanksgiving dinner. A few minutes later a policeman arrives, who recognizes Dolly. He asks her to come to her home, but she refuses. Mary's father then slips out and he returns with Dolly's parents. Dolly suggests that they all go to her home for Thanksgiving dinner, and it is at this dinner that Dolly's parents are reconciled.

THE BROTHER OF THE "BAT" (Nov. 30).—Marbray Lewis is a young millionaire clubman who has led a very selfish life. He falls in love with Alice Graham, but she refuses to marry him until he has done something for somebody. She suggests joinging the "Big Brother" movement and become brother to the "Bat," a small boy who that day was arrested for trying to steal her purse. Marbray agrees, and the "Bat" is paroled in his care. The boy has no use for his new guardian until he sees him box. Becoming interested, he suggests a new training. The "Bat," very much in earnest, is permitted to act as Marbray's trainer. Under his instructions the young millionaire is not permitted to eat anything he likes, he is deprived of his cigarettes and made to take cold baths and run for miles. He gets no sympathy from Alice, who approves of the training. Just when the "Bat" is becoming fond of his new brother fils real brother, a Bowery prise-fighter, known as the "Slugger," finds him and takes h,n back to the old life. The "Slugger" and his pals decide to have the "Bat" admit them into Marbray's home, so that they may rob it. The boy warns Marbray, who is giving a dinner party. The "Bat" pleads for his brother, and the young millionaire tells him to go, but the "Slugger" announces he will take the "Bat" with him. Marbray suggests that they fight for the boy. The "Slugger" laughs at the idea, but agrees, and soon finds that he has a foeman worthy of his steel. Despite his best efforts, Marbray gets the best of him, and, true to his promise, the "Slugger" leaves the boy with Marbray. When Alice rushes in with the other guests, alarmed at the noise, she finds him with a black eye and learns the whole story. Satisfied that Marbray is at last the man she would have him, she accepts him.

The Adventures of Lieut. Petrosino

THE Famous Italian-American Detective

In Four Parts and 80 Scenes, a Total of 3,500 Feet
BY SPECIAL PERMISSION OF MADAME PETROSINO

No public minded citizen of the United States or other countries need be told how this famous detective met his death in Palermo, Italy, while engaged in tracking the Black Hand criminals.

Undoubtedly the finest detective story ever produced—without a dull moment from beginning to end.

A genuine startler with plenty of action, and a sure crowd magnet.

Perfect in every detail, beautiful scenery. Splendid acting, magnificent quality, and staged with greatest possible care.

A genuine feature in every sense of the word.

States now selling at 15c. a foot, including territorial rights. Territory for other countries now open.

Magnetic one, three and six sheet posters, together with booklets, cuts, photos, slides and lobby frames now ready.

EXHIBITORS-LOOK-READ!

ARE YOU BEING CHEATED? IF SO, WE CAN PREVENT IT.

The Watchful Eyes on Your Business

IT'S chiefly a question of tickets in the Moving Picture business. You'd like to be there at the window all the time, for then you would know exactly the number of tickets sold. No employe could cheat you by selling the same ticket twice, and no employe could make a mistake. But you can't be there all the time—your time is too valuable.

Here's the remedy—an automatic eagle eye on those tickets every minute—a simple little machine that registers every ticket sold, that makes mistakes impossible, that prevents reselling. A National Ticket Dispenser in the window puts the whole situation in your grasp. It is to you what the fare register is to the Street Car Company.

You want to know how many tickets are sold. The National Ticket Dispenser tells you at a glance, for it registers every one. The girl can't make a mistake. It won't let her. She can't get back a single ticket and sell it over again. It won't let her.

It forces employes to be honest and careful, for the cash drawer must tally with the Dispenser's accurate record.

You can't expect your employes never to make mistakes. The National Ticket Dispenser can't make a mistake.

It makes ticket selling easy. You need no longer worry about getting experienced ticket sellers. Any girl who can press a lever can operate it.

The National Ticket Dispenser is also a time saver—it works faster than a ticket seller can count off tickets from a loose roll.

It counts every ticket.

It cuts single tickets or strips as desired.

It registers every ticket in the strip the same as single tickets.

It cuts the ticket exactly at the end.

It prevents reselling of used tickets.

It prevents mistakes.

It gives you the actual number of tickets sold at all times.

It prevents your competitor from getting a line on your business.

It can be refilled in ten seconds.

Price $18.00

National Ticket Dispenser

With a National Ticket Dispenser you can use blind tickets.

The National Ticket Dispenser is 8¾ in. high, 14 in. long and 3 in. wide. It is made of ornamental metal finished in copper. Nothing to get out of order. Will last for years. Takes the standard roll of tickets. It is provided with a secure lock. You can carry the key and nobody else can read the counter.

A Necessity Wherever Tickets Are Sold

Finish: Cabinet is of finest, golden quartered oak, highly polished, and trimmings are of metal, finished in colored enamel, baked by special process, which retains its brilliancy, or if desired all metal parts heavily nickel plated. Glass is best polished French plate, quarter-inch thick.

Size: 45x12x12 inches
Weight (boxed) 100 lbs.

PRICE:

Chopper	$50.00
Foot Lever (extra)	10.00
Nickel Trimmings (extra)	5.00

Security Ticket Box

Built expressly for those who do not require the more expensive "Chopper."

Tickets are deposited by patrons upon entering.

Of same construction as Photo-Play Ticket Chopper, minus the defacing mechanism. In place of same, Security Ticket Box has trap, which when tripped by attendant drops all tickets into chamber below, this being secured by locks.

Price $35.00

Good Pictures Depend Upon Your Lens

The best films will not produce good pictures on the screen unless your lens equipment is right; and the public likes to patronize the show that has the best pictures. Assure your patrons of brilliant, clear pictures—and your show of profitable, steadily growing patronage—with the

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

Our objectives and condensers are standard—their use on your machine insure the best results in sharpness, detail and illumination. The most successful operators endorse and use them.

Bring the crowds—and keep them coming to your show—by giving them the kind of pictures they want.

The Edison and Nicholas Power machines are regularly equipped with our lenses. They can be procured, also, through any film exchange.

JOHN AND FLORA FIND A BOAT

LINKED BY FATE

Saved from a wreck, John, Flora and her father, a minister, are washed ashore on a barren island, where the father, dying from privation, requests John to marry Flora and himself ties the knot. On finding John's diary, Flora has reason to believe him already married, and to free him makes it appear that she has been drowned. John departs without her in the only boat, but Flora is saved by a passing steamer. Five years later they meet again and she learns that the woman in question is only his sister It is a happy reunion blessed by Fate.

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

Sunday, Dec. 1

Standing Room Only

A tale of a jail and a girl, of cooking good and cooking bad. You will laugh ! laugh ! laugh ! When the sheriff hangs up the "Standing-Room" sign you'll fairly scream ! It is one of those funnyfilms that make the Thanhouser Sunday release famous as a comedy issue.

Tuesday, Dec. 3

A Will and a Way

Through her independence, a girl enrages her rich old father, is disowned, and sees her cousin made heir. Then the temperamental father, repentant, makes a new will, cutting off his nephew and deeding his wealth to his daughter. But the nephew, who is a scoundrel, tries to make away with the second will. What results makes good drama.

Friday, Dec. 6

A Romance of the U.S.N.

The feature of this reel is an American sailor's great dive under water, where he cuts the wires connecting with a submarine mine and saves his nation's fleet from being blown up. The part a pretty girl plays in getting word to the sailor about the mine, is mighty thrilling, too.

Tuesday, Dec. 10—In 2 Reels

Aurora Floyd

One of the best-known of the English book-plays, as gripping and famous as "East Lynne." The court room scenes just teem with excitement and the "big scene" is a scene of big suspense.

Friday, Dec. 24—In 3 Reels

The Star of Bethlehem

The most impressive Biblical subject ever produced and the Thanhouser Masterpiece of 1912. Issued as a regular release, at 12 cents a foot.

FIVE-A-WEEK ESSANAY

THIS WEEK! "BRONCHO BILLY" THIS WEEK!

Released Tuesday, Nov. 26th.

"MR. HUBBY'S WIFE"

One of those furiously funny farcical bits of frivolity built for laughter and long remembrance. Augustus Carney in his new character-creation of "Mr. Hubby."

Released Wednesday, Nov. 27th.

"THE STAIN"

A startling and altogether unusual production of great dramatic value. The regeneration of a young man through the revelation of his ancestor's dark romance. E. H. Calvert, Lily Branscombe and other Essanay favorites in splendid portrayals.

Released Thursday, Nov. 28th.

"THE BOSS OF THE KATY MINE"

A strong, virile Western drama showing how the hand of Providence terminated a situation involving a woman's good name and the salvation of her husband. Excellently portrayed amidst the rugged beauty of the hills.

Released Friday, Nov. 29th.

"THE IRON HEEL"

One of the month's greatest dramatic productions. A plot of circumstantial evidence entwined about an innocent victim that is fiendish in its unyielding clutch until fathomed in the nick of time. Norman McDonald, Francis X. Bushman and Harry Cashman featured.

Released Saturday, Nov. 30th.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S MEXICAN WIFE"

A brilliant Western dramatic study, beautiful in point of perfect photography, and excellent in plot strength. Mr. G. M. Anderson featured in the character he has made famous throughout the world. Don't fail to book this superior attraction!

NEXT WEEK!

DON'T BE HOODWINKED Into Paying Big Money for State Right Features!

You Can Get the Greatest Features Ever Made Without Paying a Penny Extra

From the very outset, the Universal organization, with its enormous resources, men of stamina and ideas, has striven to give you, Mr. Exhibitor, the greatest, strongest and most evenly balanced program that money and brains can get together.

The program today is as strong as the "Rock of Gibraltar." Nothing too good or too costly if it will give you the maximum benefit of your confidence in us and the Universal program.

Thousands of dollars are being spent at our West-Coast Studios alone, to give you the most thrilling and intensely exciting western dramas and 101 Bison features.

Every single week we offer you two (sometimes three) crowd-getting features on our regular program. Bigger money makers than most of the State Right features, and you don't have to pay a single cent extra for them. All that you have to do is to

"DEMAND THAT UNIVERSAL PROGRAM!"

Not only in the story and producing end have we directed our special efforts, but we have hammered at quality until we have succeeded in getting the best photography you ever laid eyes on.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

UNDERWRITERS' TYPE "B"

The final test of a motion picture machine lies in its ability to project steady, clear-cut pictures while it is subjected to ceaseless grinding. To do that it must be built simply and only the best materials can be used. The Edison, the pioneer moving picture machine, is built to last. Countless experiments have shown just what materials are best suited for each part and each part is thoroughly tested before it is placed in the machine. Hardened steel is used in the Edison where there is the greatest strain. Everywhere there is the greatest possible care taken to prevent wear. Buy an Edison and let that "One Moment Please" sign gather dust on your shelf.

The exceptionally high grade lens used on the Edison gives the clear, sharp picture that your audience has a right to demand. The well-balanced mechanism gives freedom from flickers.

THE CROOKED PATH

LUBIN 2 Reels

A STORY OF THE UNDERWORLD

A valuable watch and money stolen from a banker by Dan Lyons results in the arrest and conviction of the crook. While his sweetheart, Nell Harris, sits alone in the park reading of the long prison sentence given her lover, she is approached by a young clergyman, William Kimball, who questions her regarding her trouble. Nell admits her wrong deeds and tells him of her desire to follow the straight and narrow path. Kimball takes her to his blind mother and soon grows to love her. They become engaged and Nell is very happy. Dan Lyons in his prison cell succeeds in communicating with his pals by means of a note tied to a rat's tail and receives a supply of saws with which he effects his escape. He changes his convict's suit for the old clothes of a scarecrow and arrives in the town in which Nell lives. He sends her a note asking her to return to the old life, but she refuses, and in revenge Lyons plans to rob the home of William Kimball. He and his pal are discovered and handed over to the police, and the minister accuses Nell of assisting in the robbery. She confesses her former associations with the crook and is forgiven by her fiancé, who promises to shield her from all future evils of the Crooked Path

The Harem Captives

PATHE 2 Reels

The story is concerned with the adventure of Fatima and Ourida, two Arabian sisters, although widely different in dispositions. Fatima is beautiful, passionate and petulant, while Ourida combines with a lovely face a charming, peaceful nature. Arthur Budlong, a westerner, is in love with Ourida and has won her heart, which kindles the spark of jealousy in Fatima's breast. Rather than see Ourida win the affections of her handsome lover, Fatima bribes a tribe of nomads to kidnap her and her sister. The Nomads succeed in carrying off both the willing and unwilling captive before Budlong is aware of the happening. With his Hindoo servant, Arthur follows the trail until it reaches the City of Tunis, where it is lost. The sisters arrive in the city, are sold to a wealthy merchant and accordingly enter his harem. After ceaseless efforts, Budlong finally learns of the abode of his beloved and her sister and despatches his servant with a note to them, giving the details of his plan to effect their release. Ourida is overjoyed and Fatima feigns to be, but instead, turns informer, and when they come to the gate to await Budlong's arrival they are met by servants and brought back to the harem. Arthur and his servant reach the gate and after a desperate struggle with the guard they rescue the girls. Finding that Fate is against her, Fatima gives vent to her jealous anger, and while the outburst shocks the lovers, they offer to assist her to escape, but she refuses. They hurriedly leave her, to act as principals in a wedding ceremony.

THE DAWNING

Vitagraph 2 Reels

Helen Mason, beautiful, high-strung and self-willed, prefers the love of Victor Gardier, a young artist, to the attentions of Henry Pendleton. The latter declares his love for Helen and asks her hand in marriage, but she refuses. The young artist visits Helen, but instead of proposing he acquaints her with the fact that his uncle offers him an opportunity to complete his art studies in Paris. She begs him not to leave her, but he turns a deaf ear to her pleadings, and after his departure she gives way to her anger and disappointment and in retaliation she promises to marry Pendleton. They are married, but not mated.

They visit Paris and Helen conceals the joy to her of a visit to the artist's studio, and her vanity is flattered by a request to have her portrait painted. She appears for the first sitting, when Victor, alone with her, vehemently expresses his burning love, though knowing she is the wife of another. She repulses him and flees to her husband, whose protection she begs and which she so little deserves. The artist and husband meet on the field of honor and Victor is seriously wounded. Sitting at her window as the dawn is breaking, she prays for her husband's safe return, and as he enters unharmed she throws herself into his arms fervently declaring her love.

AT NAPOLEON'S COMMAND

CINES-KLEINE 2 Reels

This is a story laid in the time of Napoleon's great triumphs. A Lieutenant, on leave of absence, bids farewell to his sweetheart and rejoins his army. Two years elapse and the Lieutenant has not returned to his sweetheart. She becomes impoverished and marries a Sergeant, who sends her to his mother's home in Paris. Years afterwards the Sergeant has been promoted to Field-Marshal, and he, together with his wife, is now in the court of Napoleon. During the court ceremonies the wife of the former Sergeant meets her false sweetheart, who has also been promoted from Lieutenant to Marshal. Her husband and old sweetheart meet on the field of honor. Napoleon hears of the intended duel and orders the officers to their commands. During a battle that follows soon after both the Marshals are killed. The wife, in searching the battlefield for her husband, finds near him her old sweetheart. The husband, dying, begs forgiveness of his wife for her old sweetheart, and the picture closes with Napoleon and his army passing by and the woman kneeling beside her husband and old sweetheart.

THE SAMARITAN OF COOGAN'S TENEMENT

Billy (Arthur Johnson), and his mother go to the city and take up cheap quarters in a tenement house after losing their village home. The tenement is headquarters for gangsters. Red Maguire, one of the gang, is badly beaten in a fight—is rescued by Billy's mother, who binds up his wounds. Billy falls into bad company, gets arrested for disturbance, and is sentenced to 30 days. Maguire recovers, leaves the house and sends a telegram to Billy's mother (signing Billy's name), saying he has secured work and must leave at once. At the expiration of Billy's sentence Maguire gives him money, telling him to take it to his mother as his wages—also gives Billy good advice, which is accepted, and prosperity comes to all. A strong picture with a moral.

SATIN AND GINGHAM

May Prescott, engaged to a rich man, rather older than herself, falls in love with a young clergyman. One day he puts a gingham apron on her as she is serving tea. The young lady winces at what she looks upon as a badge of servitude. A few weeks later she puts the apron on herself, and when her lover tries to remove it, she protests, declaring she wishes to wear it always. A sweet embrace settles the argument. A very pleasing story.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29TH.

THE STROKE OAR

Bud Hagen, sophomore and stroke of the Varsity Eight, with a lot of his class, see that the freshmen have painted their numerals on the chapel tower. To get square, they paint their numerals on the chapel bell. The Dean, discovering the trick, forbids Bud to row in the race. The sophomores kidnap the Dean and lock him up until the race is nearly over. He escapes, and seeing Bud and his crew winning, forgives everything. Plenty of action.

Facts and Comments

MEN who do much advertising in the moving picture field are too frequently approached and importuned with a request to advertise in programs, circulars, pamphlets, etc., etc. Such requests are particularly numerous at this time of the year, when balls are held. Operators' unions, sometimes more than one in one city, arrange programs and then appeal to advertisers to defray the expenses of a ball or some other social affair and incidentally to enrich the treasury. As a rule the amount asked for advertising space in these publications is altogether out of proportion to the return which the advertiser has a right to expect. Indeed, the value of the space to the advertisers is not very strenuously insisted on because everybody knows that it is very small indeed. The advertiser is asked to contribute because it is assumed that he can easily afford it. He is told that by advertising in this program or that pamhlet he will become known as a "good fellow." Just how his enrollment on the scroll of "good fellows" will bring back the value of his investment is not explained very clearly. It seems to us that organizations of operators, etc., etc., owe it to their own sense of pride and independence not to resort to such tactics.

EXCESSIVE realism in depicting crime, even where it is but an incident to the general plot, is to be deplored. It crops up constantly even in the films of clever and reputable producers. In one reel we recently saw a man who was gagged and tied, and as if that were not enough to keep him safe and quiet two men were shown at either side of him pressing pistols to his temples. In another "thriller" blood was seen running like a stream through the floor down into the basement. It cannot be pointed out too often and too plainly that such things do infinite harm to the industry as a whole. Let us say a man sees one of these "blood and thunder" films. He is sure to remember it when, a few days later, he reads in the papers that two half grown boys have been incited to the commission of crime by seeing moving pictures. There is as much difference between the ways of telling the story of a crime as there is between Shakespeare and the dime novel. Every one of Shakespeare's tragedies tells of crime, but does not exploit it and never revels in the harrowing details to produce a thrill. The dime novel wallows in the crime as a crime. Some manufacturers do not seem to grasp this difference, obvious as it is to the average thinking person.

ORGANIZED exhibitors in Ohio are on record as favoring a two-reel show for five cents or four reels for ten cents. The question promises to be taken up in other localities, also, and we earnestly hope that something practical will come of it. The two-reel entertainment for five cents is no fine-spun theory but a rockbottom fact. In many cities this kind of entertainment is still conducted on a profitable basis. In Philadelphia a well-known theater on Market street shows two new reels for a nickel and is crowded all the time. It has been adhering to this program while other houses, within a stone's throw and situated on the same main thoroughfare, have offered four and five reels for the same amount. In crowded portions of big cities it is the height of folly to offer more than two reels for five cents. The people do not expect more than a short entertainment. It may be different in smaller communities where the exhibitor caters to practically the same patrons every night. There, in the winter time especially, the patron does not wish to be hurried, but wants to settle down comfortably and see a good long show. Even here, however, the plan of two reels for five cents ought to hold good. In the absence of ruinous competition, which by the way can never last very long, the exhibitor will have no trouble in getting ten cents. He can lengthen the program by splitting the subjects when there is more than one on a reel. Such reels are plentiful and can easily be had. Ohio is to be congratulated once more for its progressiveness. It seems as if the Buckeye state was a very hotbed of motion picture progressives. Ohio is the only state in the Union where the daily press pays close attention to the pictures and to the events in cinematography.

WE receive from time to time throbbing poems glorifying in various metres and rhymes the moving picture and all its works. So men, women and even children yield to this poetic frenzy and are reckless in the use of stamps in forwarding the effusions to this address. The poet of the motion picture may be one of the vaunted possibilities of our great industry, and we hope to see and meet him before we die. We are certain he has not revealed himself in any of the productions which stern editorial duty compels us to read. If we have so far carefully refrained from printing specimens of this rhymed enthusiasm it was not because we loved poets less but because we love our readers more.

IN a big Western city the Common Council passed a resolution prohibiting exhibitors of motion pictures from giving premiums or prizes of any kind to increase the attendance. The ordinance came directly from the reputable exhibitors of the city. They wanted to put a stop to unfair competition which offered miserably cheap and nasty pictures and sought to gain patrons by giving them cut glass and German silver and what not. The premium nuisance is distinctly on the wane. Less than four years ago this undesirable form of attracting patronage was in much greater vogue. In some places the trading stamp spirit ran riot. To-day the premium proposition is condemned by all reputable exhibitors. No trading stamp or premium can improve the quality of the pictures. People go to the electric theater to see pictures and not to collect trading stamps. It is true that even reputable merchants are enlisting the trading stamps in aid of business, for it seems to be an age of trading stamps. We would not like to see the trading stamp enter the motion picture theater. Premiums to children are to be especially condemned. Only recently the authorities in Liverpool canceled licenses of exhibitors because the exhibitors gave away candy and ice cream. If the pictures cannot win favor without such extraneous aids then they had better not be shown at all.

Success

By Louis Reeves Harrison

ALL the wise men were not born in our generation, and all the photodramas of merit have not yet been written, so any of us is at liberty to attempt authorship with just as much chance as the other fellow of landing on top—I believe the same thing has been said about becoming President of the United States—so it is just as well to be cheerful about it as long as the rent is paid. A look over the field should not discourage the humblest aspirant. A study of what is being shown on the screen, far from dampening the spirits of scenario scribes, should inspire a feeling of confidence—the worst possible is nearly over.

There was once a man named Seneca—not an Indian—who studied philosophy in the first century at Rome. In a forecast of the present moving-picture situation—one of those general prophecies that neatly fit particular instances—he said that the swift changes in human relations always left something new to write about. To use his own language: "Much still remains to be done, and much will ever remain; nor will opportunity to add yet something more fail him who shall be born a thousand years hence." If splendid Seneca lived to-day, and saw all the photoplays yet produced, he would still urge us onward, so "much still remains to be done."

The more pictures I see the more convinced I become that we are beginning the right way—we are starting at the bottom, many of us merely dabbling in the art for car fare, others only indulging in an innocent kind of occupation to fill in leisure hours, and I see no reason why we should not as long as the money we earn in carrying a hod holds out. While hod-carriers may not always succeed in literature and the drama, it is said that Caruso was a bricklayer, and others of that honorable occupation—all evidences indicate—are engaged in the production of moving pictures.

We must be patient, take pains and persevere—there is brick-laying equipment—and not consider the questionable pursuit of gain. It is not entirely wise to look upon scenario-writing as a source of livelihood. The best plan is to find out exactly what is wanted, then devise an original plot. Be careful about preparation, then lead into a struggle and wind up in a way that will bring tears, laughter or applause. After turning out a few masterpieces, one may live hopefully, if not on the proceeds.

Why should we not all write scenarios? Vanity is a trait that we all share in common, paper is not expensive, and those who know the difference between a good play and a poor one before it is shown on the screen can be counted on the fingers of a buzz-saw operator. Besides, it is the fashion—everybody's doing it. No matter how little you know about it. No matter if what you write is utter rot—look at what we critics have to review and congratulate yourself. We will have to hide when Gabriel blows his trump.

I think it is a laudable effort for a man to try to say something new. He will be a winner some day when the platitudinous playwrights have appropriated all there is to pilfer. The fellow who writes from instinct has the only incentive that will keep him at it until the cows come home to be milked. The ambition of true genius is getting its bitter test, the bitterest to which it could be subjected in any field of endeavor, for the author must not only be indifferent to money reward but to the derisive amusement with which he is regarded by those who are getting all the gelt in the game.

Those who stick to it will meet with success in varied forms. One thing they get rid of is the popular notion that there is such an enormous amount of ignorance in the world that they can hold the attention of a vast audience numbering millions with what is deplorably stupid or merely stale. The author who is going to amount to something keeps writing in spite of modest remuneration and remote appreciation until he strikes his true gait. It may be that what is new to him is old to others, and he has to find this out before he is really able to entertain and instruct in delightful combination. He may have to spoil a bushel of scenarios before he is able to get at the true value of what he is attempting or before he really produces something original in such nice proportions that it will make a hit.

Success of the highest kind is in store for those who master all the technical difficulties, who study the exposition of a screen story from every point of view, who try to attain perfection of structure and characterization, who trust to their own inventive powers and observation, who depend upon original work rather than servile imitation of what has already been done to death. First learn things, then be a revealer of them. Photoplay scenarios are not the only things that a gifted author may write, though they afford a fine training school for those aspiring to composition.

I have surprised producers and possibly offended some of them by declining to write a line concerning what appeared to be an important release, and have in some cases taken pains to point out where the plot was neither coherent nor logical, or where the end was purely arbitrary rather than inevitable, or where the whole story was warped by strained and obvious effort—all these things either insult the intelligence of the audience or prove so irritating that they seriously interfere with interest in the story.

So far as I am concerned, the success of a play depends very largely on the way it affects an audience, but, being forced to forecast the impression it will make, I am compelled to ask myself certain questions in the private presentations which may be of value to those seeking to avoid error on their pathway to success. Does the photodrama contain any strong elements of interest to the average audience? Are they poetic, artistic or dramatic? Are one or more characters presented in a manner to enlist sympathetic interest? Are they so depicted as to be swiftly understood? We must know something about people before we care very much what they do—are we so introduced as to feel an interest in what becomes of them?

Both authors and producers waste time on trivial details in the earlier scenes that might better be applied to necessary explanations or to demonstration of personal qualities in the leading figure of a kind to make the subsequent action consistent—is preparation so weak that interest will flag or fall down altogether? Is there a main theme? What is it? Is it entertaining or instructive? Is there a picture of life as it was, as it is, or as it might be? If the play is not a comedy, one merely intended to amuse, does it contain anything worth knowing or so told as to stir the sympathetic emotions?

The big play is on. It will be a success when authors learn to eliminate all but logical and significant situations and forge a technique of their own out of the old conventions so as to set forth contemporary motive powerfully, truthfully and with a thread of unceasing interest.

"The Flag and Baby" Picture

By W. Stephen Bush

AN observant and discriminating exhibitor remarked the other day that nine-tenths of the motion pictures now before the public may be divided into about ten molds or types. "Show me," he said, "the first two hundred feet of any picture and in nine cases out of ten I will be able to put it in one of ten duly labeled pigeonholes. The remaining one-tenth is the salt and flavor of the art, and without it the motion picture as a means of amusement would soon be taking gigantic strides backward."

I hope there are more than ten molds, but whatever the number, some of them are showing pitiful traces of wear and tear. Among the molds that we should like to see cracked and then cast into a Sargossa Sea of Deserved Oblivion is "The Flag and Baby Film." Cheapness floating like an evil spirit in the air descends into the studio and embodies itself in the "flag and baby film." Flags are notoriously cheap. At the market prices quoted I should say that a purchase of five dollars' worth would last for at least one generation. As for moving picture babies, the supply exceeds the demand by about a hundred to one. There are few mothers who do not religiously believe in the superior abilities of their tender offspring to make a startling and sensational success in the films. Studios are besieged by small armies of mothers anxious to see their darlings portrayed in the pictures. Competition has ruined the baby market. Given a well-equipped studio and the necessary cheap scenario for the "flag and baby picture" and the producing expenses for that particular film are so trifling that I am ashamed to venture on a figure.

The "film baby" gets in its deadly work as soon as it is born. Scarcely a day old it is pressed into service to reconcile angry grandfathers. There is not and there never was, nor ever will be, an angry grandfather who does not immediately become mollified at the sight of a grandchild—in the moving pictures. Grandfather Jones in the opening scenes chases the lover away with a shotgun, and when his daughter marries the man despite his veto, he rushes off and makes a will disinheriting her. Then there follows one of two things: Either the grandfather reads in the paper that he has just become a grandfather and hurries with his blessing to the disobedient daughter or he strolls out on a fine morning and by the merest accident runs right plumb into the grandchild in a baby carriage. The ensuing inward struggle of the grandfather between his old parental wrath and his newly awakened grandparental affection forms a "comedy business" which is supposed to convulse the audience with delight. Let no one worry, however, about the finish of it all—the grandfather will take up the child and presently the perforations in the film indicate the happy ending of it all.

Just as soon as the baby begins to toddle he becomes a hero. It is related of the infant Hercules that he, in his playful moods while in the early pinafore stage (or its ancient equivalent), choked the life out of overgrown serpents. The film baby outclasses Hercules. He baffles burglars, rescues maidens in distress, foils every villain, catches every variety of criminal, acts as a wholesale restorer of happiness and makes a specialty of reuniting all sorts of reatives from discordant parents down. That there will always be room for pictures in which babies and children play a human and fairly probable part is very true. It must never be forgotten that women and children form a large portion of the audiences in electric theaters, and they like this sort of thing, if it is not overdone. There's the rub. Unfortunately it is very much overdone. We are asked to condone a thousand feet of cheap and stale stuff just because the "baby is so awfully cute." It is painful to see a manufacturer of means or a strong, sturdy director hide behind a supposed infantile prodigy. It gets tiresome. Even women often utter sighs of weariness over such a perpetual crop of preterhuman infants. At present it is a pretty hard task to compile a program without the cinematographic counterpart of the renowned "chee-ild" of the speaking stage. Where the trap-drummer insists on imitating with his usual zeal all the various noises which a toothless infant is capable of producing, the entertainment degenerates into a torture, and we cannot help looking upon the money paid for admission as a very poor investment.

The combination of flag and baby is as a rule a bad sign. Films in which this combination figures to any extent carry in almost every case their own condemnation. They always remind us of the experience of the late Artemas Ward. That versatile person was called upon to proclaim the attractions of a side-show which was particularly bad. "Allow me," he would say, "to tell you that this is positively the most marvelous aggregation of wonders ever seen upon earth; no advance in the price of admission, children half price and thank God the dear old American flag still floats above us." Where a precocious babe with its eye glued to the camera toddles across the studio with an American flag our worst suspicions are generally confirmed. We can almost hear the producer apologizing to us for taking our nickel or dime in exchange for being permitted to witness his film. There ought to be a closed season for the "baby and flag" film, but there isn't. Only artistic or plain ordinary human conscience can preserve the producer from an occasional epidemic of these nuisance films and, alas, conscience in its struggle with "nerve" loses more often than it wins. Where the epidemic infects two or three manufacturers at the same time the public and the exhibitors have a distinct grievance and possibly a legal remedy, for it is said that the law provides a remedy for every real wrong. Just now we seem to be passing through one of these trying periods. Common sense is a fine antitoxin. Its liberal use is recommended to directors who may be troubled by the symptoms of the disease.

GEORGE OBER, VETERAN ACTOR, DEAD.

George Ober, veteran actor and producer, and whose last work was done with the Vitagraph, died at his home in Hastings-on-Hudson on November 16, after a week's illness of pneumonia. He was 63 years old. Mr. Ober began his theatrical work as a boy in the Ford Theater, Baltimore, in which town he was born. He was well known for his open-air productions, notably such plays as "Rip Van Winkle," "She Stoops to Conquer," "The Rivals," "As You Like It." He also had at one time on the road several companies known as the Ober Players. Mr. Ober had played with Charlotte Cushman, Frank Mayo, Edwin Forrest, and with Edwin Booth. Mr. Ober is survived by his widow, who was Mrs. Adelaide Powers, of Chicago, the mother of Frederick L. Powers.

Mr. Ober was a charter member of the Screen Club, and that organization sent a floral remembrance. An official letter of condolence was sent to the widow.

Helen Gardner's Idealization of Cleopatra

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FROM amid the Cleopatras who ruled Egypt, and they were a long series of princesses, many of them as beautiful and accomplished as they were daring and unscrupulous, one stands out alone, Cleopatra VI, one of the most remarkable figures in human history. Even hostile accounts of her admit her superior beauty and intellect, and the fact that she was not deficient either physically or mentally stands as a pronounced contradiction to current theories of intermarrying. She was descended from many generations of inbreeding and was twice married to her own brothers; yet, in spite of the tendency of Greek historians to chronicle the vices rather than the virtues of any period and of that gossip about great characters which so easily degenerates into scandal, this wonderful woman made pawns of world conquerors in the great game of chess of her time. Her morals were those of her age, or of her ancestors, but she reached beyond her environment and swayed the destinies of the world through her mastery of its makers.

Scenes from "Cleopatra;" a Five-Part Production by the Helen Gardner Company.

It is unreasonable to judge any historical figure from a far-removed code of morals. Hence Cleopatra should be considered according to the stock from which she came, the customs of her time and the incidents which bore directly on her career. The women of her family played with love as lightly as they did with human life, but there is a surpassing majesty in the selections of the great Cleopatra, that of Julius Caesar alone being enough to indicate her high intellectuality. Playwrights have naturally preferred to deal with the passion that held brilliant Marc Antony enthralled because of its dramatic incidents and tremendous double tragedy, but the woman's whole life makes it plain to those who reason as well as read that she was the greatest genius of her period as well as its most beautiful woman, one of those shining lamps that light our way in exploring the dark caverns of past ages.

In the five-reel production dealing with the most dramatic episodes of Cleopatra's life Mr. Gaskill has not transcended the truth in his conception of the character, nor has beautiful Miss Gardner in her masterly interpretation. If I have any fault to find it is that Mr. Gaskill adhered too closely to the Sardou play rather than deal with the formative period of Cleopatra's girlhood. Possibly there was not room in this presentation, big as it is, for it is crowded with effective incidents from beginning to end, and the continuity of the story as told by the talented director and sympathetic actress is perfect. There is no lapse of interest at any stage of the production.

The general cast is good, but there is little use of noticing individual members of the company. Miss Gardner holds the center of attention without paltry subterfuge of any kind. Her art seems to be that of temper more than of training, of inspiration more than method. Whatever Mr. Gaskill's system, she has put soul into it.

It does not require any special delicacy of perception or exceptional cultivation of taste to discern the intensity of her impersonation. It is full of varied moods as the character of Cleopatra must have been, at one time the incarnation of tigerish ferocity, at another imbued with the seductive languor and delightful enervation of tropic temperament. With all the witchcraft of a worldly woman and all the wondrous charm of a naturally beautiful one, she holds the eye every moment she is on the scene, so that all the merits of those playing up to her are merely comparative.

I expected her to reveal a certain amount of complacent self-consciousness or at least some of those ingenious devices often used by stage ladies to thrust themselves into prominence, but she is artist enough to conceal her art and merge mimicry with realism so delicately that she seems unconscious of the fact that she is acting or has any other individuality than that of Cleopatra herself. I think her performance will rank as one of the greatest ever shown on the screen up to the present time.

Mr. Gaskill could not adhere closely to the lines of a play already successfully produced on the stage without following dramatic traditions in much that is done, but he has had the courage to divest himself of their restraints on more than one occasion and follow his untrammeled judgment. The play is strong throughout, but I believe it would have been even stronger had he trusted more to his artistic instinct and less to established conventions. Some of the brightest and most interesting points made in the play are very plainly of his devising. He has proven his case beyond the shadow of a doubt.

The fifth reel—it might just as well be called the fifth act in a drama of this size—is a powerful one. Miss Gardner's acting up to this time is one of enthralling fidelity to truth in its matchless grace of movement and swift decision of mind. She is moulded for the part in feature and form and she depicts the great queen as one not relying upon physical appeal to the senses alone. She exhibits Cleopatra in her lighter moods, a creature of tremendous vigor and wayward passions, but this is all changed as the tragic end approaches. She is no longer a girl of caprice, but a great woman dominated by a passion that sweeps the strings of her heart with overpowering strength.

She is steadfast, devoted and determined in this one great love of her life, so loyal to the wayward Mark Antony that she hesitates at no sacrifice for his sake. She is not to be turned from him by the armies of the world, by the fleets of the world, nor by the diplomat of the world; and she fights for her heart with her head, mastering her stormy passions that she may more skilfully use her keen intelligence. Her great eyes grow hollow with anxiety when she is led to believe that her conquering lover is false, but she sets out with unconquerable bravery to ascertain for herself the truth of ill reports.

Her character rises to the emergency. She plays with Caesar in the great game of diplomacy and comes near outwitting him, but her heart breaks and her fortitude fails her at last. When Antony lies wounded to death in her last retreat she begins to lose the self-control that enables her to overcome all difficulties. It is then that the weakness of womanly sympathy aids in destroying its object. She could

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' BALL.

Breaks All Records for Attendance and Is Great Social Success.

IT was predicted a couple of weeks ago in the columns of the World that the New York Exhibitors' ball would be an avalanche, and the prediction was more than fulfilled at the Palm Garden, where the affair took place on the evening of November 14th. The crowds began to arrive as early as 7:30 and by 9:30 there was no room for another person in the large hall. As the evening went on, there were many clamoring for admission and these were literally turned away by the hundreds. It has been estimated by the officers of the New York association that fully 2,000 were unable to gain admission into the hall.

The overflow ,not being able to get into the entertainment hall, were obliged to content themselves with going downstairs to the lower dance hall, and dance while the exhibition and entertainment were in progress upstairs. Soon the lower hall was packed to suffocation, and it became necessary to summon police reserves to keep order at the door. There were really too many people on hand to allow of any freedom and dancing, and many a toe was stepped on. Every available foot of space was occupied, including the stairways and steam radiators. It is estimated that there were 5,000 people who attended, which is without a doubt the largest motion picture gathering that the trade has ever known. At last year's ball there were 2,000 guests and the entertainment committee based their calculations according to the former attendance. As a consequence they were totally unprepared for the tremendous attendance, and at an early stage of the proceedings, members of the New York League admitted that they had made a mistake in not securing Madison Square Garden. It is certain that Palm Garden is too small for the New York Exhibitors' annual affair and the officials have determined that larger quarters will be secured next time. Before the entertainment was over it was impossible to check any clothing in the check room and late guests were obliged to carry their wraps about from place to place.

The entertainment began with a display of motion pictures. No Licensed pictures were exhibited, but the Independents made a good showing. The first reel was a picture entitled "His Wedding Day," by the Arrow Company—a well acted comedy-drama that was a credit to its makers. This was followed by "A Woodland Nymph," a rather daring creation on the subject of prehistoric man, by the Reliance Company. The next reel was "The Truant's Doom," an original juvenile comedy by the Thanhouser Company. This was followed by The Gaumont Event film, which is a topical reel on the order of the various topical weeklies. Next came "The Old Chateau," a romantic drama by the Gaumont Company which was very well received. The last reel was the first part of "The Miracle," one of the recent large feature pictures that has just been imported. There was shown also "Warriors in Old Japan," and other fine Japanese subjects, by the General Film Publicity and Sales Company.

The artists appearing in the olio were announced by Mr. Len Spencer, as only Len can make an announcement. He first introduced Andrews and Kershaw, clever cabaret performers, who were present for the occasion by courtesy of the Little Hungary Restaurant. Ruth Alvoid next rendered songs in fine voice and artistic manner. Kenneth Casey made a tremendous hit and proved himself to be a juvenile character change artist of rare ability. His work was of the "big time" class and it is quite evident that this young man is being educated to be a first class performer.

Maurice Costello received an ovation as he stepped upon the stage and when quietness was restored he delivered a very funny monologue, assisted by Kate Price in the balcony. Kate yelled, "Cut the comedy, kid," and Maurice said to the audience, "That's my wife."

President Samuel Trigger was given a pleasant surprise, which came next on the bill. It was the presentation of a loving cup by the members of the New York League as a token of their appreciation of his indefatigable efforts on behalf of the association. As a tribute it certainly was deserved, for everyone who knows him knows that Samuel Trigger's heart and soul are in the League work.

Mr. Charles M. Seay, stage director of the Edison Company, was next introduced and he entertained the audience in a most interesting way for eight or ten minutes.

Mr. Harry Mayo, of the Vitagraph Company, next entertained with songs.

Little Marie Elaine, known to fame as the "Thanhouser Kid," did a cute little specialty with songs and captured the hearts of everyone there. She is a wonderful child. Her ability is decidedly manifest.

Little Adele De Garde, of the Vitagraph Company, did a juvenile specialty with songs to an enthusiastic response.

Edward O'Connor, of the Edison Company, amused the audience immensely with Irish stories and songs, and left the audience in a very hilarious mood when he retired.

Miss Florence Turner was received with prolonged applause as she appeared looking fresh and pretty in a costume of yellow silk. She gave a very clever imitation of a saleslady trying not to make a sale. Miss Turner surely has a warm spot in the hearts of all picture lovers.

Mr. John Bunny next appeared and was greeted with screams of delight the moment he stepped upon the stage. Mr. Bunny is a capital entertainer and could surely draw a top salary in vaudeville, should he ever care to go into that field, but he claims that as yet vaudeville is one of the sins of which he is not guilty. Mr. Bunny gave a funny and interesting monologue of his recent experience abroad for the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. Crane Wilbur, of the Pathe Company, did some splendid work in a dramatic recital. He is a finished actor with pleasing personality and the audience did not get enough of him.

Mr. Sidney Olcott, director of the Kalem transatlantic company, next entertained the audience for a brief ten minutes relating anecdotes of his recent trip to Egypt and the Holy Land. His talk was very interesting and not long enough.

Mr. King Baggot, the handsome leading man of the Imp Company, appeared in his official capacity as president of the Screen Club. He thanked the members of the New York League for so handsomely remembering the club and mentioned the forthcoming ball of the Screen Club to be held at Madison Square Garden during February.

Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was the last to appear and delivered a forceful speech, calling attention to the rapid strides and elevation of the motion picture business and outlined some of the aspirations of those in the trade whose purpose is high-minded. Incidentally he congratulated the New York League on its splendid success with the ball and retired with enthusiastic applause ringing in his ears.

Mr. Len Spencer read from the stage a number of letters that had been received from city officials expressing their regrets. One letter was read from the Mayor of New York City, Hon. William J. Gaynor, regretting that another engagement prevented him from attending. The Mayor's letter was as follows:

November 6th, 1912.

Dear Mr. Trigger:

I regret to say that another engagement prevents me from accepting your invitation. The moving picture shows of this city are one of the best educators we have. The work they are doing in the way of education and amusement is invaluable. But we must all work to keep them pure, and free from pictures which have a bad influence in the way of inciting people to violence, and the like.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) W. J. GAYNOR, Mayor.

Another letter from Mr. Joseph Johnson, Fire Commissioner of the City of New York, was read as follows:

November 7th, 1912.

Dear Mr. Trigger:

I regret very much to inform you that I have a previous engagement which will prevent my attendance upon your second annual entertainment and ball at Palm Garden, November 14th.

Your association is of vital interest to the welfare of its members. It is only through organization that a general clean-up of conditions can be accomplished. I am therefore glad to hear you say in your letter that you have banded together for the purpose of placing your business on a higher plane, and to co-operate with the various municipal departments.

I wish you very great success.

Yours very truly,
JOS. JOHNSON, Fire Commissioner.

Another letter from Mr. Eugene McAneny, President of the Borough of Manhattan, was read.

After the olio the dancing began. Mr. Maurice Costello and Miss Gene Gauntier, Mr. King Baggot and Miss Florence Turner, led the grand march, but they did not get very far as there was such a tremendous crowd that the grand march got all snarled up until it was difficult to tell who were the marchers and who were the onlookers, so closely were they mingled together. Never again in the Palm Garden, is the verdict. Nothing but Madison Square Garden or the Grand Central Palace.

The treasurer of the New York association reports a total of those attending to be nearly 5,000 persons, and that over 4,000 tickets were paid for. The proceeds will be applied to the coming great exposition of the entire motion picture trade at Grand Central Palace during July of 1913. It is probable that there will be another entertainment and ball before the next heated term. Perhaps in March or April, when better accommodations will be assured.

Among Those Present.

No one will expect us to give a list of all those who helped to form the vast host assembled at the Palm Garden, but mention may be made of a number of those more prominent in the trade whose presence added to the gayness of the occasion. The presence of the National League President, Mr. M. A. Neff has been mentioned; other out-of-town guests were B. E. Cornell, of Syracuse, N. Y., vice-president of the New York State League; R. N. Davidson, vice-president from Binghamton, N. Y.; John C. Davies, State Treasurer, Saugerties, N. Y.; G. F. Wright, president of the Albany Local; Bert A. Gabbons, Syracuse, N. Y.; Fred J. Herrington, national vice-president for Pennsylvania, and H. A. Victor, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; G. A. Robinson, president, and L. F. Blumenthal, national vice-president, of New Jersey; Mr. and Mrs. Day, of Auburn, N. Y., and Mr. I. M. Madkin, of Chicago, who stayed over to see what happened.

Of course there was a large number of photoplayers in the crowd. There were Kalem players—Miss Gauntier, Miss Joyce, Miss Hollister, Jack Clark, Bob Vignola, Jack McGowan and Director Sydney Olcott; Vitagraph players—Florence Turner, John Bunny, Maurice Costello, Kate Price, Flora Finch, Harry Mayo and many others of the same clan. From the Edison studio there was Charles Seay, Joseph O'Connor and a good delegation. Victor Smith and S. M. Spedon also helped swell the numbers of the Vitagraph crowd; William BilKalem looked after the Kalem players.

There was a genuine outpouring of independent representatives, including Carl Laemmle, Pat Powers, Mark Dintenfass, Dave Horseley and Bill Swanson, of the Universal forces; H. E. Aitken, J. V. Ritchie, Charles Hite, Herbert Blache and Madame Blache, Charles Baumann, Ad. Kessell, Harry Raver, Joe Miles and a lot more from the Film Supply and Mutual offices.

Among the Feature men were Herbert Miles and Bill Steiner, H. A. Spanuth, H. A. Lande, Abe Warner and a lot more who got the gate in the crush.

King Baggot and his detail of Screen Clubbers were to be found at almost any part of the hall.

Little Mary, beloved of all picture people, wasn't half big enough to go all around, but she got some reception wherever she did appear.

Edwin August and Ormi Hawley were seen occasionally. Billy Quirk just couldn't be lost even in that big crowd.

C. Lang Cobb was busy trying to find his popular better half, Agnes Eagan Cobb.

M. Jourjoun and a delegation appeared for the Eclair Company.

Coles and Morrison headed the delegation of machine men, and the supply men had no end of delegates in line including Arthur Jacobs and Thomas Brady.

Of course all the trade paper men were on hand and most of them were busy most of the time.

To conclude: It was the greatest and most successful gathering of motion picture people that has ever been seen in any one place at any one time.

KANSAS STATE CONVENTION.

On Monday and Tuesday, December 9th and 10th, 1912, the Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will hold their first State convention. The charter members of the State branch met at the Grand Hotel, Kansas City, Kan., on Thursday, November 7th, and formed a temporary organization, electing E. Wayne Martin, Hutchinson, Kan., president; Geo. McCrum, Kansas Ctiy, Kan., secretary.

The charter members engaged the services of President G. H. Wiley, Missouri State branch, to act as State organizer. They decided to hold the convention in Kansas City, Kan.

Motion picture trades are invited to make exhibits and can secure all information by writing Mr. Wiley at Kansas City, Mo.

The State of Kansas has 450 motion picture exhibitors and there is no question but their first convention will be a big success from start to finish, as the exhibitors are taking a great interest and looking forward to a very pleasant time at the convention.

SANDUSKY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

The motion picture exhibitors of Sandusky, Erie, Huron, Seneca and Ottawa counties, Ohio, organized about two months ago as Local No. 7 of the Ohio State League and held a meeting at Fostoria, Ohio, on November 12. Although the organization is less than two months old it has a membership of twenty-five out of the thirty-two exhibitors in that territory. An effort is being made by this organization to confine the length of shows given to two reels for a five-cent show and three reels for a ten-cent show. At the last meeting a resolution was adopted regarding the American Tobacco Company's coupon proposition, which reads as follows:

Be it resolved, That we, the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Sandusky Local No. 7, oppose the use of, and do hereby refuse to accept for admission coupons issued by the American Tobacco Company; and deplore the action of said tobacco company in trying to cheapen our shows by the use of cigarette coupons.

Further, That a copy of this resolution be furnished the Moving Picture World, and a copy spread on the minutes of this meeting and a copy be furnished Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the National League.

J. D. KESSLER, President.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS TO ATTEND LONDON EXPOSITION.

The Cinematograph Exposition to be held at Olympia, London, in March, 1913, has aroused much interest in the minds of the moving picture exhibitors of New York, whose plans are rapidly maturing toward making the first First Moving Picture Trades Exposition in America the biggest kind of a success. So great an interest has already been manifested by large manufacturers of photoplays and also makers of articles pertaining to the exhibition of these plays that the committee in charge of the coming American exhibition, which will be held at the New Grand Central Palace beginning the 7th of next July, have arranged to have representatives at the London exposition, so that they may be benefited by seeing how our English friends run a show of this kind.

Arrangements for office quarters are now being made, as the details of such a large undertaking will necessitate the committee having quarters of their own. Many novel and unheard of before ideas have been originated by the committee, which will all help in convincing the exhibitors who attend the convention that New York is sure some town, and that the exhibitors of New York besides being a collection of regular fellows are always on the job to further the interest of the business throughout the world, which without doubt this coming convention and exposition will do.

Letters have already been sent to leading exhibitors in other countries telling them of the plans being made here in New York for next July and inviting them to be present.

Plans are being made to advertise the exposition like a circus, and even so far ahead as this there is every indication that the public will take a greater interest in this exposition than they have in any other of any kind ever held.

MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

Enthusiastic Gathering in Boston on Tuesday Elects Officers. Banquet Is Held.

There was an enthusiastic meeting of exhibitors at Commercial Hall, Boston, on Tuesday, November 19th. Exhibitors were present from almost every State in New England. Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the National League, called the convention to order at 2 p.m. and addressed the assembled exhibitors at length on the value of organization. He was followed by Mr. Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York State League, who told what has been accomplished in New York.

Following these addresses, the work of the organization was at once taken up and forty-five of those present signed the charter application and paid the stipulated dues. Officers were elected as follows: President, Joseph Mack, Boston; first vice-president, Charles Hoddon, Wakefield; second vice-president, C. W. Buckly; treasurer, S. H. Bunce, Boston; secretary, Alden H. Washburn; national vice-president, George F. Washburn, Boston.

Looking toward the organization of other States in New England, President Neff appointed P. S. McMahon, of Bristol, Conn., as national vice-president for Connecticut; Hiram Abrams, of Portland, Maine, national vice-president for Maine; Samuel Merchant, Bristol, R. I., national vice-president for Rhode Island. Following the business meeting, the members of the new association partook of an elaborate banquet at the Quincy House.

President Joseph Mack acted as toastmaster. Addresses were made by Mr. Neff, Mr. Trigger, George W. Washburn, L. H. Sweet, of the Nicholas Power Company; Mr. Marsdon, of the General Film Company; Arthur D. Jacobs, of the Exhibitors' Advertising & Specialty Company, New York; Lawrence Casey, city clerk of Boston; C. Lang Cobb, of the Reliance Company; A. F. Washburn and J. J. Raymond.

PRESIDENT NEFF AT ALBANY, N. Y.

President M. A. Neff, of the National League, accompanied by S. H. Trigger, president of the New York State Association, met with members of the Albany Local No. 2 at the New Kenmore Hotel, Albany, N. Y., on Sunday afternoon. All the officers and sixty members of the association, including Mr. John C. Daniel, state treasurer, were present. An enthusiastic meeting was held which was followed by a banquet at which a number of prominent citizens from Albany, Schenectady and Troy joined the exhibitors in the festivities. Mr. Neff and Mr. Trigger left for Boston on the following morning.

NEFF VISITS NEW YORK TOWNS.

Following the Boston meeting, Mr. Neff and Mr. Trigger visited Utica, Syracuse and Rochester, N. Y., where they met with hearty receptions from the motion picture theater managers.

IOWA EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

Official notification has been received that the members of the Iowa Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will meet at Des Moines, Iowa, on Tuesday and Wednesday, December 3 and 4, 1912. Headquarters of the convention will be at Savery Hotel, and motion picture exhibitors throughout the state are cordially invited to be present. Manufacturers desiring space for exhibits and other information concerning the meeting, should address F. W. Young, national vice-president, 319 Security Bank Building, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

COLUMBUS EXHIBITORS WILL GIVE BALL.

A ball will be given at Memorial Hall, Columbus, Ohio, on December 12th, by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of that city. Arrangements are being made to secure the attendance of a number of moving picture actors and actresses. Among the features will be a moonlight dance with all the necessary effects. The committee in charge of the arrangements for the event is composed of J. W. Swain, A. B. Hatch, John Brady, L. E. Smithhisler and J. E. Stewart.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER IN PICTURES.

The Puritan Special Feature Co., 211 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass., have put this well-known play of New England life in a three-reel special feature film and are now selling state rights.

Victoria Forde is taking the lead in Otis Turner's big primitive Indian two-reel production, "When the Earth Was Young." It was a trying part, but she "came over" with it splendidly.

The World's New Home

NOTICE is given to patrons of the Moving Picture World that it has vacated its old offices at 125 East 23rd Street and is now more comfortably housed in offices on the seventh floor of the Pullman Building, No 17 Madison Avenue, New York. On and after Monday, November 25th, the World Staff will be pleased to greet its friends in the new offices.

CONCERNING MR. DYER.

The following is an official statement of the facts concerning the recent resignation of Mr. Frank L. Dyer from the Presidency of Thomas A. Edison, Incorporated, and other Edison interests at Orange, New Jersey.

"Mr. Dyer, besides having the executive management of many of Mr. Edison's Companies, had other interests which demanded part of his time. These interests have grown so extensive of late that he has felt for some time that he was unable to do full justice to the multitudinous duties which his various connections involved, and, as a duty to himself, to Mr. Edison, and to the enterprises with which he was connected, decided that he must curtail his numerous responsibilities.

"After reflection he came to the conclusion that he would withdraw from his service with the Edison Companies and, therefore, tendered his resignation to Mr. Edison, who accepted it with regret. Mr. Edison has concluded to assume the presidency caused by Mr. Dyer's resignation.

"The details of the business of the Edison Company at Orange have been in the hands of Mr. C. H. Wilson as General Manager for a number of years, and he will retain his position and in addition has been made Vice-President of the Company. Mr. Edison takes the Presidency in order that he may direct the policy of the Company in addition to the technical details which he has always had charge of. No other changes in officials or personnel of the Company will be made."

It is further stated by one in position to know that Mr. Dyer will continue in the motion picture business.

CORBETT--CHAPMAN.

The Moving Picture World is in receipt of the announcement of the marriage of Mr. Bernard M. Corbett to Miss Emma Violet Chapman, which happy event occurred on October 30, 1912, at the home of the bride's sister in Boston. Mr. Corbett is widely known to the trade as one of the traveling salesmen for the Thomas A. Edison Company, Inc. Mr. and Mrs. Corbett will be at home after January 1, 1913, at No. 152 West Concord Street, where they will be pleased to welcome their friends. The Moving Picture World extends its hearty congratulations, and wishes the bride and groom a long and happy life.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE value of moving pictures in demonstrating difficult surgical operations, as performed by an eminent European operator, was established most successfully before 93 prominent physicians and surgeons of Chicago, at a special meeting of the South Side Branch of the Chicago Medical Society, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 12, at Lincoln Center, Oakwoods Boulevard and Langley Avenue. The Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, head of Abraham Lincoln Center and a divine of national reputation, was also among the spectators, having requested the privilege of being present.

Dr. Emanuel Friend, one of Chicago's well-known surgeons and physicians, made arrangements with George Kleine for the films used, Mr. Kleine also furnishing two experts of his office staff to supervise the exhibition and project the pictures. The demonstration preceded the business meeting of the society, and Dr. Friend accompanied the pictures with a well timed and interesting lecture.

In his introductory remarks Dr. Friend said: "It is with great pleasure that I have the opportunity of presenting to you this evening the cinematographic illustrations of various surgical operations. No better elucidation of the object of this demonstration can be given than the article of my friend, Mr. George Kleine, in his cataloging of these films, and through whose generosity I am enabled to present them here." The article was then read, and the following films were run off:

Film No. 1—Extirpation of a Cyst of the Thyroid Gland.
Film No. 3—Partial Bilateral Thyroidectomy for Exophthalmic Goiter.
Film No. 4—Extirpation of a Testis for Tumor.
Film No. 5—Extirpation of a Large Myxoma of the Thigh.
Film No. 6—Lumbar Nephrectomy.

The demonstration proved a big innovation, and the use of moving pictures in surgical operations was welcomed by those present as a marked advanced step in medical education. This opinion prevailed so strongly that a number of prominent operators present requested Dr. Friend, when the meeting was over, for definite information regarding the making of films for surgical demonstration work, as applied to original operations of their own. The Rev. Mr. Jones was also so impressed that he declared his intention to use films in the future with his lectures and sermons at Lincoln Center.

The exhibition was most satisfactory, from the point of projection. All the details were brought out fully and clearly, and many of those present remarked on the clear definition of the pictures. At the same time, they expressed doubt as to the practicability of having moving pictures made that will show the details of an operation, when the structures are deeply situated.

The great difference in the technique of European and American surgeons was strikingly shown in the pictures; and while all present admired the dexterity and the thorough familiarity of the European operator with each subject, they still confessed, without prejudice, that the average American surgeon excels his European colleague in finesse and cosmetic results.

Dr. Friend is of the opinion that the time is not far off when all colleges engaged in the teaching of medicine and surgery will use films during the college course, illustrating the various incisions, operative procedures, and the techniques of the prominent operators throughout the world, to show the advantage or disadvantage of this or that procedure. In medicine as much as in surgery, he thinks the demonstration of the various objective symptoms—for example, the atactic gait and atrophy of the muscles in locomotor ataxia, or tabes dorsalis in progressive muscular atrophy, and many other affections—can be shown to distinct advantage without practical demonstration on a patient, who may feel humiliated by such a demonstration.

Dr. Friend holds further that so long as professional ethics are maintained in the taking and demonstrating of these subjects, just so long will cinematography be a great aid to medical and surgical science. In other words, so long as self-aggrandizement and self-seeking are eliminated by the operators, so long will such demonstrations be of great practical value. "These procedures, like those in other lines, can be debased by public exhibitions and newspaper notoriety," said Dr. Friend, with great emphasis. "Mr. George Kleine, very rightly and ethically, refuses to place any of these films with other than strictly scientific bodies."

At the close of the exhibition a vote of thanks was tendered unanimously to George Kleine for his liberality and courtesy in furnishing the films, the equipment necessary, and the able services of Frank L. Hough, Jr., and R. W. Horn. Mr. Hough had charge of the demonstration, and Mr. Horn was operator.

New Moving Picture Theater for Fort Wayne.

Another big new picture theater for Fort Wayne is under construction, and will be finished some time in the closing days of December. The Jefferson Company, of Fort Wayne, is the owner, the incorporators being A. L. Randall, Sprague Green, and Austin W. Stults, all of Fort Wayne.

Sprague Green, who has made a big success of the Lyric Theater, will be the manager of the new house. He retired from the management of the Lyric on November 10, and was succeeded by B. H. Barnett, who has been part owner of the Lyric Theater for the past year and a half. It has not yet been determined whether the new house will be a five or ten-cent theater, but it is stated that the highest grade of moving picures will be shown. The new theater will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000 when completed.

Infringers of Copyrighted Films Caught.

On Monday, November 18, suits were entered in the Federal Court, Chicago, against the Chicago Feature Film Sales Co., 172 W. Washington Street, and John Fitz Williams, owner of the Royal Theater, on Halsted Street near 56th Street, charging infringement of copyrighted films. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, of New York, is the plaintiff.

For some time past the company mentioned has had agents at work in the Central States trying to locate several prints of their copyrighted films which, there was reason to believe, were being distributed by unauthorized persons. The reports of these agents showed that Chicago was the center from which the illegal operations were conducted, and Isaac B. Owens, copyright counsel of the Universal, arrived in the city during the week of Monday, November 11, and appeared before Judges Landis and Carpenter, of the United States Court. As a result of the motions made, the U. S. marshal was instructed to seize the alleged infringing films.

On Friday night, November 15, the marshal seized one copy in the picture theater of John Fitz Williams, and another copy on Saturday morning, November 16, in the film exchange of the Chicago Feature Film Sales Co., in which Max Lewis is largely interested. The films seized were entitled "The Flying Circus," which is a Great Northern production, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company owning the exclusive rights in America.

Before leaving for New York on Saturday, November 16, Mr. Owens stated that the Universal is determined to stamp out the unlawful use of its copyrighted films. "The company is in the market to handle these films exclusively, and is ready and able to supply the demand," said Mr. Owens. "The company is not disposed to have its rights infringed in the manner in which infringement has been attempted, and I have instructions to enforce its copyright privileges in every case of violation."

It has leaked out that there was considerable mirth in the office of the Chicago Feature Film Sales Company shortly after the marshal had seized the copy there. The cause of the hilarity, it is said, was caused by the arrival of another copy of the infringing film from an outside customer.

No "Franchise" in Booking of Licensed Films.

The following article in the Chicago American of November 16 created quite a stir among exhibitors in the city district referred to in it:

"Alfred Hamburger, whose ability to work while others sleep and to get a hundred and one cents out of each dollar has made the Louise Amusement Company amazingly profitable, has engineered a brilliant move in contracting with the General Film Company for an exclusive first-run moving picture franchise, giving his Langley Hippodrome and Drexel Theater, both on Sixty-third Street, the initial showing on the releases of the company. The franchise gives him this privilege over a territory of five miles, bounded by Stony Island Avenue, Stewart Avenue, the Midway and Sixty-ninth Street.

"Any other exhibitors of motion pictures within this territorial rectangle will hereafter have to be satisfied with the films of the General Film Company after the two Hamburger theaters in the boundary lines have displayed them. Such deals as this are rare and difficult and to Hamburger must be given the palm for commercial shrewdness, such as has marked every step in the progress of the Louise Amusement Company, of which he is president and general manager."

After investigation, I found that the use of the word "franchise" by Mr. Hamburger's publicity man to the writer of the foregoing article, was malapropos, the significance of the word as applied to exclusive bookings for vaudeville acts being very different in meaning from the sense in which it was used in connection with the booking of films. The Langley Hippodrome and the Drexel Theater, seating 1,200 and 834 people respectively, were formerly vaudeville houses. They now run high class picture programs and charge 10 cents admission. First runs and within 10 days are the ages of the films used. Other theaters in the district use films aged 10 to 30 days, and commercial, and charge 5 cents admission.

There is no reason for a howl among the owners of these smaller houses in the district under discussion. They have never used, and could not afford to pay for, such high class programs as the Langley Hippodrome and the Drexels. Besides, the 10 cents admission charged by the latter places them in a different class, and gives the smaller houses an even break.

Chicago Film Brevities.

F. C. McCarahan, manager of George Kleine's office, this city, left for a week's vacation November 16. He will take in Springfield, Ohio; Cincinnati, and home points in Kentucky during the trip.

Omer F. Doud, editor of the scenario department of the American Film Manufacturing Company, accompanied by W. J. Bauman, chief Eastern producer, left for California Thursday, November 14. Mr. Doud's headquarters will be at Santa Barbara throughout the winter.

Charles Abrams, general manager of the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, spent several days in the city during the week of November 11 in the interests of his company. Since his departure from New York, Mr. Abrams has visited Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Terre Haute. He left for Des Moines on Sunday, November 17, and will afterwards visit Kansas City, Denver, St. Louis and other cities.

C. W. Fowler, manager of the Pictureland Theater, Kokomo, Ind., accompanied by C. M. Benson, formerly the piano player of the Pictureland, visited the World office last week. The Pictureland is owned by Miss I. S. Hutton, who purchased one-half interest in the house last May, and the remaining one-half interest about a month ago, from T. B. Jay, who is now running his new house, the Grand. The Pictureland is showing to good business and a prosperous winter season is looked for. There are five regular picture theaters in Kokomo. The Sipe Opera House, which plays road attractions during the season, also runs pictures outside of that period. All the houses, with the exception of the Sipe, are offering two reels for 5 cents admission. The Sipe offers three reels for the same price. Kokomo, with its population of 25,000, is considered one of the finest picture theater towns in Indiana.

NO INJUNCTION AGAINST DOBBS.

Beverly B. Dobbs, the pioneer Arctic cinematographic explorer who has been exhibiting "Atop of the World in Motion," the original Alaska-Siberia motion pictures, throughout the United States and Alaska, had an injunction served upon him by Capt. Kleinschmidt, of New York City, preventing or restraining Mr. Dobbs from advertising any motion pictures under the name "Alaska-Siberia." Dobbs won his case in the Supreme Court, New York, on Nov. 14. The court decided that Mr. Dobbs is fully entitled to use the name "Alaska-Siberia," and Capt. Kleinschmidt's injunction was vacated. It was further shown that Mr. Dobbs is the pioneer "Alaska-Siberia" moving picture producer, in fact, he had given exhibitions in the United States and Alaska, long before Capt. Kleinschmidt's pictures were taken.

"Atop of the World in Motion" (the original Alaska-Siberia Motion Pictures), will inaugurate a New York engagement at Weber's Theater, beginning Sunday, Dec. 1.

On the Selig Firing Line

By A. MacArthur, Jr.

THE announcement that the Selig Polyscope army had invaded the little town of Desplaines reached the Chicago office of the Moving Picture World, and being a lover of excitement I accepted the invitation of Mr. Oscar Eagle, who is directing the movements of the two opposing armies.

For those who have never witnessed real action on a battlefield, the three forthcoming military dramas of the Selig Company will be a treat.

We all met at the plant of the Selig Company on the third day of battle, at 7:30 a. m., and, after piling into the waiting automobiles and driving thirty miles out into the country, I was introduced, in my experience, to an entirely new phase of picture making. Already costumed and awaiting the call to battle were a troop of Confederate and a troop of Federal cavalry; also two regiments of Confederate and Federal infantry. I was presented with a mount and, in company with Mr. Eagle and his assistant, Mr. J. Frankenburg, rode out to witness the mimic slaughter.

Immediately upon reaching the scene of battle, all friendship ceased, and the respective armies took up their positions behind breastworks and entrenchments; and the men, who a minute before had been joking with each other, set their jaws and settled down for the business of the day.

Excitement and realism are the only words that can express my sensations for the day. Following the line of battle, with the Director-in-Chief Oscar Eagle and his lieutenant of staff, Mr. Frankenburg, we saw almost perfect reproductions of some of the most stubbornly contested engagements of the Civil War. First the North would start an assault on a Southern battery, only to be repulsed and, for a time, the tables would be reversed. Bombs were exploding everywhere. A man would drop here, and then two or three at another point. The fortune of battle favored first one side, then the other. Suddenly the Federal troops, being reinforced by a troop of cavalry, made a very exciting charge, blowing up the enemy's breastworks and disabling their field pieces. The Confederates contested every inch of ground they lost; but, being outfought and outnumbered, finally surrendered. After the surrender, peace was declared for a short period, during which time a hearty lunch was put away. When each man had been reinforced by the noon day meal, war was again declared on another field, which had been wired and mined earlier in the day.

It was during the afternoon work that Miss Winnifred Greenwood, the only lady on the field, distinguished herself, with honors to spare. In the face of heavy battery and musket firing, disguised as Belle Boyd, a noted Confederate spy, Miss Greenwood made her way through the Federal lines and was about to end her work, when she was supposedly shot down, falling right in front of an exploding cannon. She was carried across the line, in time for her to deliver t-h-e p-a-p-e-r-s before she died, and thus saved the day for the Confederates, who charged and routed a detachment of artillery and cavalry of the Northern army, in a most realistic way. During the heat of the conflict a switch was thrown, and it seemed that the whole field was tossed into the air when the mines were exploded. After the smoke cleared away, men and horses were lying all around, where they were supposed to have dropped as a result of the heavy fire, and the terrific upheaval of earth. This last big scene ended the war for the day, and the combatants were glad to retire and talk over the exciting scenes, before the next day's carnage began.

Tom Mix, the famous "bulldogger" of steers and noted for his daring horsemanship, takes a prominent part in all the leading scenes in the war drama.

Miss Greenwood, the leading lady of Selig's Eastern company, was deservedly praised by Producer Eagle for her nervy work. It looked strange to see her, the one lone woman, amid the strife and roar of battle. Mr. Eagle and Mr. Frankenburg are to be congratulated on the fidelity to historical details observed by them in the disposal of the forces at their command, and on the atmosphere of realism that prevailed throughout the stirring scenes.

FRANK B. COIGNE IS BACK AGAIN.

"Broncho Billy's Mexican Wife" (Essanay).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

BRONCHO BILLY is still to the fore among Essanay's releases, as "Broncho Billy's Mexican Wife" will prove. This tale of life on the Southwestern border, as told in pictures, affords some fine touches in character drawing, several strong situations that border on, but just avoid, the shedding of gore in view of the spectator, and settings about as appropriate as one could wish to represent the section in which the scenes are laid.

G. M. Anderson should please his multitude of followers in this exciting episode, in the life of Billy, for it reveals the latter as he appears under the stress of injustice, in addition to his well known resourcefulness and daring. A faithless woman is more than a match for the wisest man in cunning; and, in this case, Billy's Mexican wife makes him appear like a deuce spot, when he measures his crăftiness against hers. By the way, the role of the wife is capitally played, and the young woman, whoever she may be, deserves praise for keen imaginative acting. The mocking, malignant sneer on the wife's face, as she tantalizes her imprisoned husband by kissing her Mexican lover, while her maddened mate looks on through prison bars, expresses the lowest depths of woman's self abandonment and fiendish cruelty.

It would be impossible to enact this story, when men of red blood or women who have been betrayed are included, without a tragedy. The closing scene shows the reward of the unfaithful wife and her companion, but the act of punishment has been skillfully avoided in the pictures.

The photography deserves more than usual commendation. It is really a delight to view the pictures from this standpoint.

Broncho Billy is a great favorite of old Mexican Pietro, who has an only daughter Lolito. The latter is a beautiful girl, who loves a strolling musician, one of her own race. Pietro knows nothing of this attachment, and, on his deathbed, gets Lolito's promise that she will marry Billy.

On the day of the marriage ceremony, a band of Mexican musicians visits the small town. Manuel, the lover of Lolito, is with them. Ignoront of her marriage, he calls on her and is received with a show of great affection. They are interrupted by the appearance of Billy on the scene, and the Mexican slinks off after some sharp words from the man of broncho fame.

Later on, they are again discovered together by the sharp-eyed husband, and Manuel is led to the wooden bridge leading from the town and warned never to return on pain of death. While Billy is thus engaged, his unfaithful wife resorts to cunning to thwart his plans. She inflicts a wound on her shoulder with a large knife, and hurrying to the Sheriff's office, charges her husband with the crime of attempted murder. Billy is arrested and imprisoned.

But Billy is not the only one in the story who has been betrayed. Anita, the sweetheart of Manuel and the dancer of the wandering troupe, has watched every movement of her lover, and is mad with jealousy. When Manuel and Lolito, free from the intervention of the imprisoned Billy, enjoy each other's society without restraint, Anita is a silent and vindictive witness. She bides her time until the opportunity arrives, and both are discovered dying by the Sheriff and his posse. With her last breath Lolito declares Billy innocent of the charge made against her, and denounces Anita as the slayer of herself and companion.

EDGEWOOD AMUSEMENT COMPANY INCLUDE NEW HOUSE.

The Edgewood Amusement Company, of Wheeling, W. Va., is soon to start the erection of a moving picture theater in Edgewood, Wheeling, W. Va. The building will be finished on the outside with rough cement after a Grecian design, and will be one of the most beautiful picture houses in the State of West Virginia. The structure will be thirty feet by one hundred feet and will have a seating capacity of about 400. The interior appointments, decorations and fixtures will be of the best material, which will make the house as pretty and comfortable as possible.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE advantages to be secured from the use of motion pictures in schools and colleges are now the subject of discussion throughout the leading countries of the world, but instances where movements have been made to give them practical tests are limited. This does not reflect upon the proposition. It is due to a lack of comprehension of what it really involves. In the first place, exhibitors, as a rule, are opposed to it from a business standpoint. Others look upon it as a commercial scheme of film manufacturers. Many educators withhold their sanction because there may be a possibility of the pictures reducing their force in the educational departments. Other people look upon the proposition as an attempt to supplant study with amusement.

When the matter is not given the thought it requires it is not unreasonable to entertain such ideas. But when one takes the time to look into it from all points of the compass the deductions made by those in opposition are without support by facts or reasonable argument. It is not proposed to transform schoolrooms into amusement parlors, nor is it intended that the same class of pictures (even the education subjects) now in use in the picture theaters shall be installed in the educational rooms. In such an event the proposition would surely fall flat—become a folly of the past. It would be justly stamped as an uprooter of the principles of true educationalism with nothing but pecuniary gain as the incentive on the part of the sponsors.

An editor says he recently secured a straw vote from pupils of a high school on the advantages of illustrating studies with motion pictures, and publishes a number of letters received. All but one are favorable. They are not endorsements of a character that preclude adverse argument for many reasons, one of which is that nearly all the letters reflect a desire for novelty. This is to be expected from pupils. Anyway, it is not the proper source from which to ask for declaration of opinions upon such an important subject. The supervising educational bodies and the instructors are better qualified for the purpose.

The one exceptional letter is referred to at more length for the reason that the writer has, like many others, already referred to, misunderstood the proposition. This writer says the pupils would be interested in the pictures only while they are new to them and it would be necessary to intersperse the dry topics with love stories in order to get the pupils to like the pictures.

The proposition involves one of the greatest tasks ever undertaken in educational circles if it is carried out conscientiously and the true aim is to be attained. The educational subjects now shown at the picture theaters are of a high order of merit as a rule and reflect great effort and labor to place before the people a faithful representation of the details as shown by the originals. But they are educational only in a general sense. They are made to interest the old and young, and they create a desire on the part of many to seek still greater knowledge pertaining to the respective subjects. They are not instructive in the real sense of the term. They are made to form a part of an amusement program and therefore lack a great many essential features they would have if intended for use in educational departments.

To make the proposition a practical and effective one the educational subjects of the present will be disregarded and the subjects to be used must necessarily conform to some extent with the text books used in the schools. Made to order, as it were. The pictures are not to supplant the text books, but place before the eyes of the pupils parts which cold type may convey to their minds in an ambiguous or incomplete form. The film manufacturers are not in a position to supply films of this kind until they know exactly what courses of study are to be covered and how much film is to be devoted to the various parts of a topic. It will be necessary to supply them with a complete outline of this character adaptable to the schools where the text books are in accord with that outline. A set of films made for one locality may be useless in the schools of another and the manufacturers could not go to the trouble and expense of making up a large amount of educational matter of their own creation with the intention of making big sales to the schools and colleges. For this reason, it is contended that, if the true aim is kept in mind and the proposed system is established, the educational institutions and the picture houses will be as entirely independent of each other in every respect as they are to-day. Such subjects will not be adaptable for the places of amusement and these will have the same patrons as before because the schools will not be in opposition to them.

It is frequently said with well founded confidence that the motion pictures are in their infancy. Most people seem to accept this statement as referring only to the commercial and artistic branches of the industry, while it is really a sane prediction of great practical uses to which the pictures will eventually be put, one of the most important of which is explanatory aid in the study of text books, notwithstanding the skepticism of some people who are deeply interested in the manufacture of such books. One of them, in discussing the subject the other day, looked upon the introduction of motion pictures in the public schools as a huge joke. He, too, entertained the notion that it was intended to wipe out the text books and do all the teaching by pictures and lectures. Like many others, he now sees the matter in a different light.

This is a reminder of what occurred in a small town near Philadelphia last week. A shrewd lawyer was defending a man on a charge of burglary and impressed upon the minds of the jury that his client had been impelled to commit the act by the alleged hypnotic influence of a motion picture he had seen a few hours before. The burglar was acquitted and the next day the town fathers, by heck! amended the ordinances so as to prohibit the exhibition of moving pictures depicting crime. The ingenuity of the lawyer stirred the solons to action that was taken by Boards of Censors long ago. The lawyer saw the light that made things lighter for his client and great was the rejoicing of both.

The bald schemes some people resort to in an effort to break into the posing ranks of motion picture companies frequently provoke as much laughter as indignation by the audaciousness with which they are executed. One day last week a man appeared at the office of a film company and made application for a posing position. He left when told there was no opening, but returned about two hours later in an apparent high state of inebriation, although able to navigate quite well and make himself understood. "How do?" was his first exclamation, as he pushed his hat to the back of his head and addressed the party he had previously interviewed. "You turned me down because (hic) you thought I could not act (hic). Well, I'm the best ever and (hic) you had better grab me before (hic) somebody else gets me." Eventually he left minus a job. The next day he sent a letter to the office stating it was not an apology for his apparent condition on the second call, because he was not intoxicated; in fact, he never drank, or smoked. He then renewed his application, stating that he was a salesman out of a job and, as his friends believe him to be a clever actor, he sought work in the pictures. He closed the letter with the confidential statement, "My clever impersonation on my second call to your office should leave no doubt on your mind as to my ability and bring me a quick engagement."

NOTED FILM MEN INSPECT AMERICAN PLANT.

On Monday, November 11, a party of men, well known in film circles from various points of the United States, met at the Chicago office of the Mutual Film Corporation. The big new touring car of the American Film Manufacturing Company happened to be downtown, and it was promptly decided to test the carrying capacity and speed of the car. As many as could find comfortable quarters in the car took possession of it and with the good-natured jibes about being obliged to get out and walk before destination was reached of those who were left behind, the start was made and in about sixteen minutes the car pulled up at the American plant, all voting the chauffeur and car an excellent combination.

The inspection of the plant proved of great interest and the facilities for producing good "Flying A" pictures were highly approved. The party consisted of Dr. Schallenbarger of Chicago, Mr. Mandlebaum of Cleveland, Mr. Bracken from everywhere, Mr. Gregory from New York, en route to California, Mr. Freuler, general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Mr. Nehls, manager of the American Film Manufacturing Company.

COMING KLEINE RELEASES.

Three excellent split reels, composed of first class comedies and interesting travelogue subjects, will be placed upon the market by George Kleine this coming week.

For the Tuesday Cines, "All on a Summer's Day," describes a series of delightful and amusing incidents, which take place at a house party in the country. There is an abundance of pretty girls and handsome men, which with the unusually attractive settings would make any ordinary film a success, but, adding to this the fact that the story itself is clever, a very presentable release is offered, which will add quality and variety to any program. The climax of the story, where both hero and heroine win their wagers, each entirely unsuspicious of the other's purpose, is very ingeniously worked out. Alfred Bracci and Dorothy Ferreri, two of the best known Cines players, enact their roles in their usual satisfactory fashion.

The reel is completed by an interesting travelogue, "The Beautiful Valley of the Tronto," taking us upon a delightful trip, starting at the source of the river, down through the valley, which contains so many picturesque old castles, and other fascinating ruins of the past.

"A Man for a Day" is the Eclipse offering for Wednesday. The film describes the adventures of a mischievous boy, who wishes to dress and conduct himself as a man. After withdrawing all his savings from the bank, he carefully arrays himself in evening clothes and goes to the races, where he wins a small fortune. He is unable to stand prosperity, however, for he soon gets into all sorts of scrapes before a kind policeman discovers the young rascal and promptly escorts him to his alarmed parents, who administer a punishment which he will not soon forget. The role of the boy is very well taken, and several of the scenes, such as that at the race track, are unusually interesting.

"Trebizond and Surroundings," depicting many scenes in and about the town of Trebizond in Asia Minor, fills out the necessary thousand feet.

The Saturday Cines, "A Comedy of Errors," is an extremely amusing subject, which ought to bring many laughs from the audiences. It describes the comical adventures of two raw recruits, who are made the butt of much ridicule by the other troopers in the regiment. The plot is not a new one, being wound around a case of mistaken identity, but is exceptionally well executed, and the public will certainly enjoy it.

The other subject on the reel is "Corneto Tarquinia." The film spreads before us many places of interest, which have been well preserved from medieval times, such as the Principal Gate, the beautiful Vitelleschi Palace, the National Square, St. Stephen's Square, the Great Tower, the Castle, and several remarkable views of the town.

BALL PLAYER SEES HIMSELF "AS ITHERS SEE HIM."

Mr. Beales Becker, outfielder for the New York Giants, visited the Marple moving picture theater at Wichita, Kan., on the day that the manager was showing the World Series pictures as photographed by Pathe Freres. The manager says that Mr. Becker went into ecstasies of delight when he saw himself on the screen. The picture played to crowded houses on both days that it was booked. The Marple bears the distinction of being the oldest licensed picture house in the city of Wichita.

ENLARGES PICTURE HOUSE.

Messrs. Fitzer and Fitzer, owners of the Happy Hour Theater, 224 North Salina Street, Syracuse, N. Y., have leased the entire building in which their theater is located. When the remodeling is completed, the house will then seat about 1,000.

Doings at Los Angeles

Big Doings Among Forces of Universal, Kinemacolor and Vitagraph—A Scenario Contest—Essanay in Town.

FIFTEEN important producing companies working in and around this city without a sensation, a scandal or a fight makes this one of the dullest news weeks, in the big southwestern motion picture producing field, that has occurred for a year.

Wesley G. Gilmour, general manager of the Universal forces in this section, scratched all the hair off of the back of his head trying to think of a story. "There isn't any news this week," he finally said in despair, "because everything is going along smoothly and harmoniously. Our several companies are getting out their usual releases on time, nobody has gone off the payroll and so there has been no need for new members to be put on, and everyone is too busy to get into trouble."

After thus establishing the fact that there was no news he proceeded to tell about some of the things which are not news. For example, a cattle chute was built at the railroad station near the Universal company's big ranch, "Oak Crest," in the San Fernando valley last week, and since then shipments of long-horned range cattle have been arriving in droves almost daily. They are to be used in a series of pictures showing life in the Western cattle country. Before the series is completed there will probably be nearly 1,000 head of cattle on the ranch, after which, Mr. Gilmour says, the Universal Company may be obliged to go into the beef packing business to dispose of them.

New cottages are being built on the ranch every week. At the present time about 65 families, members of which are in the employ of the company, are living on the 20,000 acre ranch. These are in addition to several hundred braves, squaws and children in the Indian village. It is a distance of several miles from the nearest railroad station to the studio, which is located at the foot of the range of mountains which run through the ranch. A special train is run out every morning and back every evening for the benefit of those employees who live in town. Gilmour buys the tickets in blocks of 500 and with the present force he is obliged to write a check for the railroad company about five times every two weeks.

Concerning Kinemacolor.

The Kinemacolor Company within the last ten days has produced three big features, "Five Miles from Tombstone," a Western drama; "The Violin," a sentimental drama, and a Christmas pantomime in which for the first time the company successfully employed the double exposure device, a thing heretofore held to be impossible with the Kinemacolor process.

The company is greatly in need of photoplays. All of their productions are two reels in length and most of the scripts submitted are not full enough of meat to make two reels. Another defect is that a great many of them do not come up to the high standard the company is trying to maintain. Western dramas which are not of the blood and thunder variety, quiet comedies, and strong drama are the three kinds most desired. Scripts should be addressed to the studio, 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles. The photoplay editor is Mrs. Anita Hendrie Miles, wife of David Miles, the managing director.

The greatest sign of activity in this field is at the new studio which the Kinemacolor Company has taken possession of. The extensive alterations and extensions which were decided on, such as new stages, new dressing rooms, laboratories, property rooms and offices are now fully under way. Although the company has three acres of ground, it begins to appear as if there will be no room for that hotel which is to be built for the convenience of the employees. Another project which was begun this week is the erection of an immense practical stage fully equipped with traps and other accessories, so that when completed it will accommodate pantomimes, spectacles and other big productions. In the midst of all the disorder the three directors are grinding out films according to regular schedule.

Chaos at Keystone.

Great as are the disadvantages under which the Kinemacolor directors are working, their lot is pleasant compared with that of Mack Sennett and Fred Mace, of the Keystone Company. The Keystone plant at Edendale is more restricted as to space, and the plant is being reconstructed all at one time. Trying to keep carpenters out of his pictures has almost driven Sennett—a temperamental individual at the best—insane this week. Richard Spencer, the photoplay editor, "edited" scripts for a couple of days sitting on a pile of lumber while the carpenters were taking the interior out of the offices and putting it back again. And Charley Kessel, who, as the boss, has privileges, discovered imperative business at the Santa Monica canyon plant where the workmen are not due until the Edendale plant is finished.

Vitagraph Activities.

An important change in the plans of the Vitagraph Company of America, it is reported, promises to make the Vitagraph Western studio at Santa Monica one of the most important production points in the motion picture industry in this country.

The rumor is that the work of Rollin S. Sturgeon, Western manager and director, has attracted such favorable attention that he is to be given greater opportunities. The Western studio is to be put on an equal footing with the Eastern plant. More actors and other employees are to be hired and Sturgeon, it is said, is to have vastly increased financial facilities. Big subjects requiring two and three reels will be turned out occasionally in addition to the usual 1,000-foot lengths. In harmony with this policy, it is said, the company is looking for more ground space and will within a few months have a new studio which in respect to being modern to the minute will have no equal in this section.

Clune's Method.

A new publicity policy which has just been adopted by William Clune for his string of motion picture houses in and around Los Angeles is already producing box office results, although it has only been in effect two weeks.

Clune has set an example for other exhibitors in this section by going in hard for advertising of both kinds—that which is paid for at regular rates, and that which the newspapers can be induced to print for nothing because it has some news value.

His first step was to employ one of the snappiest newspaper reporters in town, F. R. Dyas, whom he took from one of the daily newspapers. Acting upon Dyas' advice he then made yearly advertising contracts for liberal space in every daily newspaper in the city. Since then the several programs of his Los Angeles houses have appeared in the advertising columns of the newspapers every day, and in addition the Clune theaters are accorded as much free space in the amusement departments as any of the regular theaters. More than this, several of the papers have been induced to notice special attractions with feature stories.

Another innovation just established by Clune is a daily conference with the managers of the three big downtown theaters and with the various other department managers of the big amusement concern. These conferences have developed several valuable minor ideas.

Announcement was made this week that Clune's Grand hereafter will have a first run feature every week supplemented by ordinary first releases.

Strange "Co-incidents" in Scenario Contest.

Announcement of the prize winners in the photoplay contest of the Egan dramatic school, which closed November 1, was made this week.

There were four prizes of $100, $75, $50 and $40 respectively, and by a strange coincidence the two highest ones were awarded to Mrs. Nell Shipman. A still stranger coincidence is that Mrs. Shipman is the wife of Ernest Shipman, one of the officials of the several motion picture companies under the Egan management, and the man who supervised the details of the contest. While coincidences are under discussion another might be pointed out, namely, that of the five judges who made the awards, four of them are connected with the companies which paid them. Naturally the announcement of the prize winners excited a great deal of interest among local photoplay writers.

The judges were P. A. Thompson, of the Utah Moving Picture Company; Seth Hart, of the Golden State Moving Picture Company; Norval McGregor, stage director, and Frank C. Egan, head of the Egan school, which is interested in two other motion picture companies affiliated with the two mentioned. The fifth judge was T. L. Tally, a local exhibitor.

Details of the contest were given out in the following statement which emanated from the publicity department of the Egan offices:

"There were 301 scenarios submitted, covering territory as far east at Albany, N. Y. These were reduced to a final thirty under the system of 'the survival of the fittest' and the lucky four selected after a final gathering of the judges.

"The first prize of $100 is "Sold to the British," by Nell Shipman, 1016 Fair Oaks Avenue, South Pasadena, and deals with the theme of plans of the Panama Canal fortifications, which are stolen, and offered to the secret service agents of foreign countries. They are recovered by aid of the dictograph. A story of strong heart interest carries.

"The second prize, of $75, was also awarded to Nell Shipman for a scenario entitled "Outwitted by Billy." The Billy in question is seven years old and after years of hardship manages to save his mother from disgrace by producing her marriage certificate at the crucial moment and secures her a good home."

The two minor prizes were given respectively to Eleanor McLaughlin, Hotel Ripples, Ocean Park, and to Charles Saxby, 221 South Bunker Hill Avenue, Los Angeles. What relation they are to the companies, if any, was not announced.

Mr. Shipman says his wife has had so much experience in writing scenarios that he "would hate to say" how many she has had produced.

Essanay at Los Angeles.

Just as this matter is being written information comes that Director Mackley, of the Essanay Company, accompanied by a number of players and others has arrived in this city and has engaged the studio formerly occupied by the Lubin company in Hollywood, where they may remain several months. The report is that the company is made up partly of people who were connected with the Essanay forces at Niles in the northern part of this State, and that G. M. Anderson is to remain at Niles with the rest of his company. This will give the Essanay Company two studios on the Pacific coast. George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay, is authority for the statement that the permanent studio of the Western section is to be at Niles, where the Western company has been for many months.

Brevities.

Frank Woods, formerly "The Spectator" of the Mirror, now one of the directors of the Kinemacolor Company, and Dell Henderson, director of the comedy department of the Biograph Company, together with Fred Mace, of the Keystone, and several other motion picture actors connected with the host of companies now producing in and around Los Angeles, are attempting to arouse interest in a project to organize a branch of the Screen Club in Los Angeles. With the possible exception of New York City, there is no other community in the world where there are so many persons engaged in the producing end of the motion picture industry as here. One or two of the local colony are already members of the Screen Club and there is no one who does not want to be. It is probable that a meeting will be called soon to discuss the matter.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Motion Picture Company, is reported to be in Southern California looking up a location for a new "Flying A" company which is to be stationed here permanently. His plans, it is said, are to move the company here and have it producing films before the first of the year. William Bauman, of Chicago, is mentioned as the man who will have charge of the new company. This project will not interfere with the American studio at Santa Barbara, which will continue operations as usual.

Los Angeles daily newspapers have just discovered that this city has become one of the largest producing centers for motion pictures in the world, and this in spite of the fact that the Moving Picture World has been for sale on all the local newsstands every week, price only 10 cents. The important discovery has been followed by numerous special stories about local phases of the industry. Nearly every paper has taken a crack at it. The last was Hearst's Examiner, which printed a full page feature story describing the enormous plant of the Universal Company in the San Fernando valley.

Harry Revier, of Los Angeles, who has been directing a motion picture producing company at Monterey, Cal., which is in some manner affiliated with the Universal Company, through which, at least, Revier's productions are being released, ran down to Los Angeles this week on business. He was here only one day when a long distance telephone message announcing that Mrs. Revier had suddenly been taken critically ill, called him back north and he was compelled to leave on an hour's notice.

"Gloom" Dougherty, photoplay editor for the Biograph Company and president of the Grouch Club, has a real excuse for his habitual attitude since someone published a notice in some publications read by photoplaywrights—especially the bad ones—announcing that he would be glad to receive manuscripts addressed to him personally, and that he would criticise them. He is not receiving manuscripts personally because his mail has become so heavy that he has had to hire an extra clerk, and the only criticism he is indulging in is directed at the originator of the report.

A vacancy of the Municipal Board of Motion Picture Censors was caused this week by the resignation of Miss Emma Bumiller, who was forced to give up the work because constant inspection of films was ruining her eyesight. Mayor Alexander immediately appointed her successor, and the council the same day confirmed the appointment.

P. M. POWELL.

JOSEPH SMILEY.

Joseph Smiley is one of the Lubin Company's most important directors, favoring comedy work. It was under Smiley's direction that the famous Buster Series of pictures were made in which Roswell Buster Johnson, Brooks McCloskey, Henrietta O'Beck and a dozen other kiddies were employed. The children ranged from three and one half to nine years and were all trained by the able director. Smiley is an American being born in Boston, and has spent all of his working career upon the stage. He spent many years with Fanny Davenport and the Klaw and Erlanger productions. Also with Liebler and Co., who sent him to Australia to produce "Mrs. Wiggs and the Cabbage Patch" for the Williamson Theaters. He also directed a studio in Havana and made many famous pictures of Cuban atmosphere.

NEW YORK CITY GETS ANOTHER PICTURE HOUSE.

On the sixteenth of November last, Mr. Emil Rosenbaum opened at 2138 Third Avenue, New York City, an up-to-date moving picture theater. The house is fitted with all the latest improvements, among which is a Radium Gold Fibre screen. Mr. Rosenbaum is also the proprietor of the "Rose" moving picture theater at 2172 Third Avenue. He also intends to open a few more picture houses in New York City, and is on the jump looking for suitable locations.

HIBBLING PICTURE CONCERN.

The International Film Company, of Hibbling, Minn., has been incorporated under the laws of the State of Minnesota, with a capital stock of $50,000, to do a business of manufacturing motion pictures for advertising and educational purposes. Scenic pictures will also be taken by the concern.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Plea for Decency.

NOTHING printed in this department has attracted more widespread comment than a recent comment on the use of lurid stock posters to advertise certain prominent houses in New York City. One exhibitor even came up from his exchange to express his thanks in person and we have received letters from all over the country in which this evil is decried. It is a healthful sign that the interest should be so widespread, for it indicates that we are correct in our belief that a great majority of the exhibitors are decent and that practically all want to be.

One exhibitor, some fifteen miles from the Comedy and Crystal Hall Theaters, tells us that he feels the effects of the posters and a man in a nearby town writes that the hardest part of getting started in his residential suburb was convincing the possible patron that he was not running his house "like those New York places."

Give a dog a bad name and he may well hang, but the motion picture business is too big, too important to be permitted to suffer from the ill advised action of a few years ago. Hundreds of exhibitors have made gallant efforts to live down the old, unpleasant reputation and by careful management have built up businesses that in proportion to the capital invested yields a larger return than most dramatic houses.

In the past two years, particularly, there has been a marked tendency all over the country to break loose from the store show; the successor to the old Biograph theaters of the Pacific Coast, and to house the attractions in sanitary, well built structures planned expressly for the purpose.

Some of the Leaders.

In the south Frank Montgomery has built up a chain of handsome photoplay theaters that are either converted dramatic houses or specially built. He provides large auditoriums, ample seating room for each patron, surrounds the patron with an elegance that is not excelled in the best homes and conducts a style of performance that is patronized by all classes of persons. He varies his bill with musical and novelty numbers but has cut out vaudeville because he cannot get the style of players he wants and will take no other. Wherever there is a Montgomery house the pictures have come into their own. They have been raised to the same level with the home of drama; have been exalted far above the cheap vaudeville shows.

Up in Oregon the People's Amusement Company, starting with a single house, now conducts a chain of theaters in Portland and elsewhere that is almost large enough to support an independent film exchange of its own.

Further down the coast Turner and Dahnken, forced out of the Exchange business by the formation of the General Film Company, have turned their attention to the exhibition side of the business and not only have an ample list of going houses but are forcing others to completion with what speed they may. The other day the Mayor of the town laid the corner stone of one new theater and all of the local notabilities were on the platform to give their approval to the venture.

All over the country there are lesser circuits, giving clean, all picture shows under surroundings as decent and orderly as the Metropolitan Opera House. Many of these are conducted by old showmen, others are run by men who grew into the business when the store show came and proved their right to continue when the "joint" was abolished. They prepared for the coming of a better day when the conditions were still bad, and now they are reaping their reward.

Helping the Business.

Every house of this sort, whether in circuit, or not, helps the business to a higher plane, each manager, according to his capacity, wins respect for his business venture by respecting it himself.

And there is the keynote to the present situation. Your house is what you make it. If you respect it yourself others will take it at your own valuation. If you run a clean, decent, comfortable place of amusement, the motion pictures are regarded as the favorite of all classes, but if you are given to hanging about the theater in your shirt sleeves, lounging in the lobby with a half burned cigar in your mouth, if you plaster your front with posters more or less germane to the subject until it suggests one of those fake clothing sales where the windows are covered with oilcloth signs that the story may be darkened until the shoddy quality of the goods cannot be observed until the victim arrives home, then you place your house in the same category with the fake sale and the junk auction.

If this merely reacted upon the houses and its owner it would not be so bad, but one of these houses in a town will hurt not only all the others but houses in other towns, in other states. You are not doing yourself as much hurt as you are doing others. You may not care, perhaps, because you are content with small houses of young rowdies and foolish girls. They like to come to your theatre because "everything goes." The dark house keeps down the light bill and the moral tone of the town as well, but you care only about the light bill. But others, seeing, do care, and because your noisy house attracts more attention than the respectable, properly conducted theater, the general public forms its opinion of the business from your house rather than the others. They argue that these of others are seemingly well conducted, but that is merely the lamb's wool that hides the wolfish pelt, and so the head of the house stays away and warns his children of punishment to come if he finds that they attend, and he and his family are deprived of a delightful and inexpensive entertainment.

Educational Campaigns Needed.

While this writer was inquiry editor for the Motion Picture Story Magazine, for more than a year, it was made plain that thousands of fathers absolutely prohibit their children from attending photoplay exhibitions, in spite of which they do attend. There was something impersonal in a nameless department that seemed to invite confidences. One young girl wrote that if her father could only be coaxed to see a performance he would give in, but he had not been in a photoplay theater for years and would not let his family attend. Such a man, of course, is pigheaded and unreasonable, unwilling to admit the changes the years have made, but some decent exhibitor is losing money because someone else in his town, who has not grown up with the business, will persist in clinging to the antiquated ideas and methods of the business of six or seven years ago.

Mr. Neff is doing a splendid thing in conducting his campaign for state and national organizations, but he is not yet being backed up. Three of four exhibitors from the same town may attend the convention and foregather for a couple of days and talk about what is good for the business, but when they get home again they do not still hold together for the good of all. Each is suspicious of the other's motives, afraid that some man will get more than the others and so the man of today who urges campaigns of education is laughed at and invited to tell what he gets out of it that the others do not.

Change Must Come.

The condition cannot continue, but the trouble is that even the smaller house can be so cheaply run as to show some profit and the short sighted proprietor is content to make a little money easily rather than fight for a larger reward.

The live man hustles as well as he can by himself. He interests libraries and schools in educational features, he gets the ministers in to see the semi-religious and religious subjects, he keeps the local editor apprised of the new things that are being done. If he has a house program he may print some educational article from this paper or the general press, he gives the gossip of the players, he makes a readable and educational program, but every paragraph, every phase of endeavor, carries the incubus of the house down the street with its noisy gang of half grown boys and girls shouting under the screen of six cent, second hand posters that seem to guarantee rivers of blood with every thousand feet of film. Those who come to the right house know that that house is right, but since they do not enter the cheaper place they do not always know that precisely the same sort of pictures are advertised by the lurid butcheries. They know that the Unique is all right, for they are regular attendants there. They might go to the Elite, as well, but they do not like the atmosphere of the house, heavy ladened with disinfectant to mask the lack of ventilation and as evil in the moral tone, and so they stay away.

Be Proud.

If you are a hod carrier be proud of the fact that you are one of the best hod carriers in town. If you are a manager, take your stand with the others who have pride. Be proud of your front, of your interior, of your program, of the class of patronage, of the fact that you are one of the men in the motion picture business; a business that some of the best known theatrical showmen are not ashamed to enter. William A. Brady was one of the first store showmen with his Hale's Tours, but could not get enough scenics at that time to provide a proper change of bill and so dropped out. Others are interested, not as openly as Daniel Frohman, perhaps, but heavily and the time is not far distant when they will come from under cover of their dummy managers and link their theatrical and photoplay enterprises.

If you have a house you can be every bit as much a manager as the man who in the old Fourth Avenue days ran at the Lyceum the one theater that in this generation was stamped with the cachet of social approval.

But if you want to be like him you must do as he does. You must throw out the shoddy, the false and the unclean. You must respect yourself and make others respect you and your house.

There was a time when you had an excuse for using old stock paper. It was before the makers of pictures went to the expense of providing you with paper that fitted the subject and generally was made with an actual scene from the play. Now you can get one sheet of all subjects and with a poster frame, that can be used over and over again, you can make them into three sheets if you are unwilling or unable to pay the sale or rental price of the three and six sheet posters furnished for most important stories. And in no case have you an excuse for overloading your lobby with a mass of junk that completely hides the front of the house and throws the rear of the lobby into suspicious darkness. Darkness has ever been the bane of the picture theatre. Have your house light and attractive.

Do the Best You Can.

You may not have a large house or a pretentious one, but no matter what the size you can have a clean and attractive one; one that recommends, not damns, the pictures in the eyes of the passerby. Some day the passerby may turn in, and perhaps he will get the habit and become one of your standbys if only you can get him in that first time, but you can't do it if you pick your films by title and slip the exchange clerk a dollar now and then to ship you all the battle, murder and sudden death titles. You can run a sensational title occasionally, but when you get it keep it down.

Show only a one sheet and give the banner to something with a more attractive sound.

This sounds like bad advice, but it is not. The man who is attracted to the house by the gaudiness of your announcements will come anyway and at the same time you will get the more decent crowd, as well. You may not believe that, but it has been proven time and again. The man who has the most money to spend for the pictures is the man who likes the best. You'll get him, if you offer that sort, and you'll also get the man who wants the vicious. He's bound to come to the pictures, and if he cannot get what he wants he will take what he can get and rest contented.

For five years L. Lawrence Weber fought almost single handed for the decent burlesque show. He was backed up by one theatrical paper and a few far seeing managers. There are still some rather questionable shows, but the money is all going to the clean and decent show where fun takes the place of filth and the comedian gets a laugh because he says something humorous and not because he says damn. Burlesque is making vastly more money because it gets all of the old time patrons and an entirely new class in addition. It is the same way with every picture theater in the country whether it is located in the vilest slum or the most proper residential district. The clean pays by far the best, but there are too many exhibitors who cling to their case hardened opinions and will not make the experiment.

Clean Up.

There are two houses in Brooklyn that lie on a thoroughfare not yet fully built up, though there is a large colony of suburbanites to draw from. One house is up a flight of six or seven steps, with an open lobby. An arc light provides all the illumination. In these November days the chill winds sweep the space and there is no shelter. Usually the house is perhaps half filled.

The other is down the street, a place built especially for photoplay with a reasonably ample lobby. Most of the light is within the lobby, shining out like the lights of home. The flaming arcs are shut down after the first house is in because there are no store fronts to compete with and in the brightly lighted lobby there is always a crowd, waiting to gain admittance as the first house clears. One house is inviting, the other bleak and desolate, living largely off the business of its more important neighbor.

And yet it would not cost much to at least make the entrance attractive, to keep the front clean and neat, to convey the suggestion of welcome. A storm door on the entrance side could be made to give the suggestion of shelter without violation of the fire laws, and the paint brush now and then would do a lot.

One man makes good, not so much because he has a better house as because he knows how to use it to the best advantage. The air is clean and sweet; pure air, not the sickening smell of almonds that has come to suggest the picture theater as certainly as the ether or iodoform odor suggests the hospital. He has paid the cost of installing a proper fan ten times over from the additional business gained.

Why don't you?

We know that many exhibitors have to count the pennies, even the half pennies, but if you cannot afford to have your house scrubbed out do it yourself. Soap and water does not cost much and it brings a big profit.

And Keep Cleaned.

And once you have cleaned up, keep cleaned up. Don't let the house fall back. Rip out those old cloth-backed posters that were perhaps the heritage from the man who failed before you. Get frames, wood if you must, brass if you can. Fasten them to the sides of the building if there is any chance. Don't make a man walk around a row of frames to buy a ticket. Make his way straight. Get a coat of paint down, light colors, not a drab or brown. Touch it up with gold leaf or the plain paint as your purse permits. Clean the windows of the box office every day. It will take only a few minutes, and a smudgy glass suggests a smudgy house. Keep the seats clean. Let a woman feel that if she is wearing a white dress it won't hurt to go and see the show.

Watch your lights. The daylight house is not the house where the lights shine in the eyes of the audience instead of on the screen. It is a house that is light and cheerful without any direct ray of light showing unless you purposely crane your neck to see.

You may not be able to make a clean sweep. The change perhaps, should not be too abrupt. Get your old patrons gradually accustomed to the reforms while at the same time you prepare for the new people.

And when you have set your house in order go after the business, the same business the pretentious house has. Make the people understand that you have the same sort of films and the same clean house that the other exhibitors have. Give out some free matinee tickets through any one of the several schemes of distribution. Get the women in, and if they like your way of doing business they will come and bring their families.

Handling the Old Patrons.

And have it very clearly understood by the old crowd that they are welcome only so long as they behave themselves. Surreptitious cigarette smoking (and this is by no means uncommon), loud or loose talk, flirtatious tendencies and all rowdiness should be checked. Don't "bawl out" the offender. Ask him to step to the back of the house and there tell him quietly that you are not running that sort of house; that he is welcome to stay under the new dispensation or he can have his money back if he prefers. Be firm but quiet and show that you mean it. If you tell the captain of the nearest precinct that you are going to clean up, the officer on post will be instructed to give you help, but try and handle the situation alone for the moral effect. If you have to call a policeman, push the case to the limit. No matter what threats or pleas may be made, send the first offender to prison if you can and it will be quickly understood that you mean business right from the jump.

Get Together.

Get together with the other fellows. There is no reason why you should be jealous of each other. Have your own little association to take care of local things. Perhaps some good can be done by massing your ads. Be quick to identify yourself with any public movement that promises to be for the public good and you'll be the sort of manager that you should be, that very probably you are under your stiff necked, old fashioned exterior. Let yourself come out. Be a "regular" fellow. It's a lot more comfortable.

And the Manufacturers.

But there is another side to this question. If the makers of films would try they could help the movement by refusing to cater to the sensational trade, either by ceasing to put sensational and misleading titles on wholly innocent subjects and by throwing back the occasional sensational picture that is purposely planned to make a sensation. One of the worst offenders in this line is one of the oldest established and supposedly most conservative of the companies, but all offend now and then. In every studio there comes the time when the good of the business is forgotten in the elation over the discovery of a plot that will be a "knockout." The subject is released and sells famously abroad, where there is always a demand for the sensual and erotic, and so another one is made and more bullets are supplied the old time managers to shoot into their own bank accounts while the enterprising manager must either run the release, cut down his program or take an extra commercial.

Make these salacious releases for the foreign market if need be, but hold them back from American and English circulation where they are a stench in the nostrils and an offense to the decent men and women who are more loyal friends to the pictures than some of the makers of photoplays.

There has been a vast improvement in the business in the past year or so. Take care of your end, whoever you may be, and boost the pictures so high that they may be none above you. It can be done, but it will take team work, whole-hearted, get-together work in every city, town and village in the land.

Cards Work Best.

J. T. Robertson, of the Lyric Theater, Libertyville, Ill., writes that he prefers to issue card programs rather than dodgers. He says:

> I get these out every week and find it a good paying proposition. Every Monday they are delivered to every house in town and are handed out at the theater each night. The cost is but little more than the dodger on cheap, colored stock, and I find that when these are handed out they are read and put into the pocket instead of being thrown away as the ordinary dodger would be. The verses on the back also have a tendency to cause the card to be retained, as the people have come to look for these poems. Now and then, in place of a poem I run the steam and electric time tables and most of these are retained for reference until the next one appears.
> My theater is small, seating only 212, and the town is small as well, but by advertising and living up to my advertisements, I manage to get good crowds.

The cards are about 9 by 3½, printed on one side with a program for the week and on the other with a poem. We think that Mr. Robertson would do well to have the imprint of the theater also appear on the reverse, most particular when the time tables are run.

He also uses a smaller card to announce the vaudeville acts. We wonder if he would do better without vaudeville.

At any rate the use of a card is good where it can be afforded, since the advertising looks more pretentious. The general tendency is to get rid of the throwaway as quickly as possible.

CLASSY POSTER DESIGN FOR ITALA SUBJECT.

Film makers are devoting more time and attention to posters as is evidenced by the Itala Company's designs for the first four releases made under Harry Raver's direction, one of which is shown herewith. The Itala Company issues with "The Horror of Sin" the first three sheet and one sheet combination ever supplied with an Independent one reel release. Four scenes are shown on the two posters.

The Paper Test.

IT has been said before, but seems to need repeating that the best test for script paper is that it shall be so heavy that the typewriting on the second page does not show through on the first. It is best with a dull surface and should not be so cheap that it will tear easily under handling. Paper of a light buff or corn color is excellent if heavy and stout enough, but the best paper, after all is the dead white and the best ribbon is a black record. Do not use a copying ribbon under any circumstance. This will answer several inquiries.

Promise and Performance.

Several complaints have been made recently that companies promising a certain minimum price for scripts offer less than this when the script has been sent.

In some cases the complaint is founded on fact, one company, for example, offering $35 for a two-reel subject when $50 has been named as the minimum price. But the author is not compelled to accept the $35 if he expected $50 and it is entirely up to him whether he takes the lower bid or not. A courteous reply to the effect that the script was submitted with the understanding that $50 was the lowest price offered will either bring the $50 or the script. If you don't want to take chances on its being the script that comes back, take the $35 but do not kick. You are not compelled to take the lower price. If you do it is your own fault. If the company is not willing to give more than $35 for your work and you are willing to take that it doesn't matter what they designated as the minimum price. It is for them to decide what they will give. It is for you to decide what you will take. If you take what they offer that's all there is to it and you have no grounds for complaint.

Doesn't Like the Idea.

This is taken from the Editor, the leading magazine for literary workers. We understand that the present lowest price for the $20 course is now four instead of two dollars, but the principle is the same. The Editor says:

> We should not have printed in The Editor the advertisement of the National Authors' Institute. If any readers who answered the advertisements of this concern which appeared in The Editor have cause for complaint we will be glad to have them advise us and we will do our utmost to secure satisfactory adjustment for them. We make this statement of our own volition. No one has complained to us that the National Authors' Institute has not given value for any money it has received. We have discovered, however, that it is the custom of the Institute to offer for $2 to prospects who hesitate to enroll the course which it sells to early purchasers for $8. We do not wish to assert that this may not be a legitimate practice. But if the Institute can afford to sell for $2 to those it has to solicit several times, it should sell to those less difficult of persuasion for the same price.

Sit Tight.

Some of the writers seem to see in the growing practice of having a tame author about the studio a menace to the free lances. Undoubtedly the move of the Universal will have a tendency to cut down the number of scripts purchased, but this reduction is for a time only, for it will be found in the long run that it is not possible to obtain a sufficiently varied output from a single writer for each studio and the bars will be let down again. Very few men can turn out three and four subjects fifty-two weeks in the year and give variety and novelty to the work. The very fact that it is not a question of making a sale but merely one of keeping the directors supplied will tend to keep down the average of the product and presently it will be discovered that the stories are falling below standard and there will be a call for outside scripts at a better price than the ten dollars that Hal Reid seemed to consider sufficient payment.

One well known writer who turns out two or three scripts a week declares that he refuses a contract because the general sale keeps him more on his mettle and much the same condition is found elsewhere. There are perhaps half a dozen writers who through aptitude and training combined can turn out two scripts a week that keep up to standard, but such writers are rare and do not seriously affect the situation.

The greater menace to the free lance is the horde of incompetent and uninformed writers who are turned out by the correspondence schools. They keep the average down and prejudice the studio against the outsider because they send in the same old stories week after week and are inclined to argue with the editor when their brain children are spanked and sent home. They are much more of a threat to the business than the contract writer.

The Soul of the Story.

Do you give your story a soul, or do you merely send out a waxen thing that never can receive the breath of life?

It is soul that sells the story and no matter how brilliant your idea, if there is no soul there is no story. Sometimes a story with a soul loses it in the making, but at least it started as a live, warm-blooded thing, no matter what an incompetent director or amateur cutter did to it afterward.

Giving your story a soul means making your people real and interesting. It means offering something beyond a mere routine of action. It means breathing the spirit of genius into the clay of detail, and without soul you cannot hope to succeed. Stand beside an editor and watch him read and you will note the stories go back into their envelopes one after another with never a flicker or the emotions or an expression of regret. There may be action there. The narrative may be fluent and plausible, but the people are puppets doing certain things because the man who works the wires thinks that these things will give the semblance of life.

Don't send out a story that does not seem real to you and you'll not get so many back.

A Wink in the Dark.

Frank A. Kramer writes: "I suppose that all beginners are like the man winking at a girl in the dark. The man knows what he is doing, but no one else does."

The allusion is old, but it is peculiarly applicable to writing photoplays. Lots of beginners' scripts come in that might be good if the idea were only gotten over clearly, but the author fails to get it all down on paper and so no one but himself ever knows what the story is all about.

Train yourself to be explicit. Make every point register with the reader. Leave nothing real to the imagination, but get it both in the synopsis and the plot of action. It is not enough that the synopsis gives the explanation. Plan the action so that the spectator can get every point either from the situation or the leader. No part of the synopsis is put on the screen; only the action and the leader and inserts get to the man who pays his money, and he is the person who is entitled to know. You may know that Jack is Mabel's brother, but if you do not make that fact plain no one else will and they will wonder what sort of a girl Mabel is to let Jack kiss her and then go straight to George for more caresses.

Don't wink in the dark. Turn on the light and turn on as much light as possible, and remember that the plot of action is the place where all the explanation should appear, not merely in the synopsis. That is just read by the editor and producer. The action is seen by millions.

Values.

Do you study the values of your story? Can you tell what it is worth in the way of extension?

We saw a script the other day that was an excellent piece of work, technically, but it was hurt because the author had written a 300-foot idea into a full thousand feet. It was a little comedy in which rapidity of action should have been its chiefest charm. There was barely enough real action to warrant the 300 feet, but it was solemnly worked out with all the elaborateness of a big drama. There were flash scenes by the dozen, all motives and inspirations were painstakingly accounted for, but only now and then did the comedy show through this mass of detail.

The script was by a beginner, who in time will weigh his ideas more accurately, since a man who can take hold so rapidly must have the ability in him, but we've seen a lot of scripts that never went to a producer for final approval solely because they were over or under developed. The author could not value his ideas.

There is a lot of difference between comedy and drama. In comedy the idea must be told in humorous action. In drama the action may be deliberate at the start, quickening toward the close, and motives must be accounted for. To plan the comedy with the same elaborateness is to spoil the comedy, just as to slur the drama is to hurt the clarity of the scenes.

When you get an idea size it up. If it will not make a full script keep it down. Don't figure out that if you write in another 500 feet of padding you can get an extra ten dollars for it. Figure that if you string it out you won't sell it at all, and you'll be more nearly right.

Words and Vision.

The other day just before dinner we started to read a cheering little comedy hinging on the death of a prize pig in a mix-up with an automobile—so we saved the price of a dinner and didn't feel hungry until breakfast time.

The author wrote merely that the pig ran in front of the farmer's auto and was run down. He merely wrote some words on a piece of paper. Could he have conjured up the vision of a country road with a once prize pig smeared all over the foreground he probably would not have written the story, but he didn't see his picture, he merely wrote words.

That's the difference between the short story and the photoplay. In words, the death of the porker could have been made a merry bit of reading, but in a photoplay it would have been necessary to drive the pig under the wheels of the car that it might be ground to death and its fragments left bleeding and, to say the least, unpleasant.

Of course no producer would dream of making such a story, but why not write what producers will make? Weigh the visual value of every scene. No matter how clever the scene may sound, if it doesn't look right it will not do.

It is not enough that you have a story. It must be a story that can be shown. Frequently the ruling of the censorship that scenes of violence may not be made is attacked on the plea that many short stories carry these without offense, and the objector does not realize that the description of a fight does not affect as forcefully as does the sight of the struggle, and so the censors bar the unpleasant because it looks unpleasant.

In the case of the pig butchery there is the additional point that the S. P. C. A. would very properly have intervened, since needless cruelty was practiced, but the main point is that the author was writing a comedy that was nauseating and never realized that it was.

It is scarcely possible that you can write an effective story if you cannot see the action, and it is a faculty most assiduously to be cultivated, but if you can write a story and yet cannot see the action, at least think over how the action will look. Keep out the gruesome, the unpleasant, the morbid, the unwholesome, whether your story be comedy or drama, but comedy most particularly should be clean and bright and pleasant to look upon. Don't trust to words. Think how it will look. It may not look as it sounds.

Leaders.

You've been told that the best stories carry no leaders and if you are like the rest of the photoplaywrights, you've probably aimed more or less successfully at that desired end. Also, if you are like the average, you have not done so.

Please remember that a story is not without leader unless it is absolutely without the need of leader. It makes no difference in the final result whether you write in the leader or the editor does it for you. If there is leader in the finished product there is leader in your story. The other day a script was passed around proudly that should have carried fully one hundred feet of leader, but because the proud author had not written any in he declared that he had the leaderless script.

It is better to write in leader to make your action clear than to produce the leaderless script that is vague and uncertain. It is better to use five words of leader than ten, but if your script needs the ten words and you cannot get the idea over in less, use the ten. Aim not at the leaderless script but aim to write so clearly that little or no leader is needed, and one of the last things you should do before you clean copy your script is to go over it carefully and see if it is fully explained.

But much may be done in the way of condensation. Do not say "John, who is Mary's brother, lately discharged from prison, comes to her husband's house." That is clear and explicit, but too long. You know that Mary is married and so she is living in her husband's home. "Mary's convict brother visits her," is all you need. The fact that he is out of jail shows that he is an ex-convict but a convict still. If he were a refugee, an escaped convict, the fact should be made apparent in the action by the display of the convict coat under his other garments or in some other equally simple fashion.

When you see a photoplay and an unusually long leader, see if you cannot better it by cutting it down. Sometimes you can spend a half-hour with considerable profit working over a single leader. That is what is meant by studying the picture on the screen.

In the same way plan imaginary leaders and cut these down. Make up a situation that requires a long leader and then see how short you can make it. Then, as a post graduate course, plan the action to see if you cannot get the same explanation over in a short scene instead of a long leader, but in doing the same thing with the produced picture remember that there may have been such a scene that was cut out and bridged with leader to get the subject within the thousand-foot length.

Poetical Advice.

It may interest the baseball fans to know that George J. Moriarty, the first baseman of the Detroit American team, is a photoplaywright when he is out of the ballyard. He has sold some stuff to Lubin and in the words of Lawrence S. McCloskey "he is pretty clever and is going to be some playwright."

The other day he sent in a script and beneath the signature this couplet:

> You may send them back but I won't sigh.
> I'll get you yet, for I'm the guy.

That led McCloskey from the paths of prose rectitude and he tore his hair and rolled his eyes until he evolved this reply:

> We're glad to know you'll stick and fight.
> The game's half won—you've started right.

As an Alfredaustin this may not be much, but the four lines cover columns of advice. Stick and fight and the game is half won. Nothing is to be attained without hard work, confidence and perseverance.

Vitagraph Prices.

Inquiry has been made as to the method of deciding prices in the Vitagraph studio. Script likely to be accepted are turned over to J. Stuart Blackton and A. E. Smith, the pile being equally divided. Such as they accept are returned to the script room with the price marked on. The others are returned. Mr. Blackton is secretary and Mr. Smith the treasurer of the company. The average of payment to unknown writers is small, but no company is more liberal in its payments to those whose work it likes.

The Near Good Idea.

Do you write the near-good idea? Do you grind out anything that comes to you in the belief that you have a story? Lots of writers do and wonder why they make such slow progress.

Write the near-good idea to get it down on paper, but work over it until it becomes really good before you send it to the long suffering editor. Take the commonplace idea and twist it around. An idea is like that folded paper arrangement that can be tortured into a hundred different shapes in the hands of a clever magician. You can start with some ideas and make them comedies or tragedies according to the idea that pleases you best, but there is one really best work out and that is the one form you should strive for. Don't think that because you have an idea that runs pretty straight from start to finish that you have done the best you could. It may be—and very probably is—that you can do infinitely better if you keep at it, so twist it around and keep working over it until you have found the very best possible form; until you have lifted it from the commonplace into the unique. Then if you send it out you'll stand ten times the chance of making a sale. Don't be in a hurry to get the check for you won't get the check if you are in too much of a hurry. Get it right first and then you'll get the check, but if your idea is merely near-good the best you'll get will be rejection slips and good advice.

Do Your Own Work.

If you want to stick to the writing game learn to type your own manuscripts. You can hire almost any standard make from the large hiring companies for $5 for three months and have this apply on the purchase price if you decide to buy. The outlay is small; the price of having half a dozen scripts done, and there is nothing particularly difficult in learning to write on the machine, the one important essential being that you do not form bad habits that will stick to you through your entire career.

The pen written script stands absolutely no chance in the studio, no matter how legibly you may write, and at the start the copyist will eat up all your profit. If you move about from place to place you can get a portable machine for less than twenty dollars, but you need a machine of some sort and if you yet one you'll soon learn to write on it.

And write your own stories. Don't send them off to be "revised." Do the work yourself. If you can't don't call yourself a photoplaywright. You are not.

Inquiries.

M. P. M.—The Photoplay magazine, Chicago, gives Independent stories only.

P. H.—Which sister do you mean in "In the Aisles of the Wilds?" The sister who eloped was Miss Clair McDowell. The other is not known to our Biograph identifier—yet. In "The Long Road," Miss Sweet's mother was Mrs. Grace Henderson, now playing in "The Man Higher Up." Miss Roland is not Miss Pickford's sister. You are probably thinking of Miss Lottie Pickford, who was with Kalem for a time.

ORIENT—In "The Musketeers of Pig Alley," Elmer Booth was the Snapper Kid. "A Warrior's Faith" was released February 28th, 1911. "The Cowboys' Vacation" June 30th, 1911. The last title we do not find.

M. Q.—Miss Edna Payne had the leads in both "The Moonshiner's Daughter" and "A Half-Breed's Treachery." Burton King was the heavy in "Parson James." The color of a player's hair is something we do not keep tabs on.

S. B. B.—Charles West was the successful suitor in "A Disappointed Mamma." We do not know if he is still with the company.

A. W. M.—We believe that the Great Eastern has a studio in Boston, but lack positive knowledge.

ANXIOUS PEARL—Miss Florence Lawrence is no longer with Victor, and at this writing has not signed with any other company. Your second and third questions are wholly matters of personal opinion. Miss Rea does not appear in recent casts.

GEORGE—If Miss Lillian Walker was killed in an automobile accident she has not been officially informed of the fact. Kick the usher that handed out this cheerful gossip, and then give him another good one for us.

A. K.—Are you trying to "kid" us? No. We do not think that "a nervous, impulsive, thick-headed person who has to force himself to work" will score much success as a photoplaywright. Seems to be the wrong combination, though a lot of thick-headed persons are trying to write photoplays. This writer's past life is a thing sacred to himself. Doesn't come under the head of matters of general interest, anyhow. There has been no club of photoplaywrights, so we can't tell if one would be a success. You'll have to play a lot of small time before you get the big time. We don't think, from your description, that you'll do much with the small time, for that matter.

H. M. S.—There isn't "so much breeze in all the pictures." Some of the western companies work in open air studios and if there is a breeze the draperies fly, but there are scores of interiors in which no breeze is apparent. This question died a natural death about a year ago. What did you want to go and dig it up for? We do not know what James Young of the Vitagraph, was doing ten years ago. He might have been playing in New Orleans. We positively—most positively—refuse, decline and refuse again to discuss the matter of a lady's age and weight. Haven't we enough trouble without that? We feel much as you do, but nix on age and weight for us.

J. O. L.—The sample you send is almost too heavy for script paper. Get a lighter paper that is not so loaded with clay that it cracks, and your scripts will come back in better shape and you'll save four cents on each round trip as well.

M. D.—Solax does a cute imitation of the Biograph when it comes to giving out the names of its players and we didn't see the film. It is probable, though, that Billy Quirk and Miss Blanche Cornwall had the leads.

R. M.—Can't locate the scene of a photoplay as a rule, but "Monte Cristo" was made on the Pacific Coast, in the vicinity of Los Angeles, and Arthur D. Hotaling made "Won at High Tide" at York Beach, Maine. We do not know what company made pictures at Rockaway Beach last summer.

ADMIRER—We do not regard your question as within the province of this department. It is more or less a matter of personal opinion.

P. G.—Carlyle Blackwell had the lead in "The Peril of the Cliffs."

A. W. P.—Had to query Los Angeles for your question. Ford Sterling played both of the parts you mention.

MARBLEHEAD—Sorry, but we cannot place the kiddies for you, at least under that name. Do not know where the picture mentioned was made and the Atlas "Quo Vadis" has not been announced yet. Watch the advertisements.

R. C. M.—Tom Moore was Jack in "The Strange Story of Elsie Mason." We have not the casts for the other two.

J. H.—As nearly as we can figure out the beautifully explicit question, Alfred Paget is the person you mean.

R. E. J.—It's a waste of postage for us to query Pathe for casts. Sorry.

F. M. F.—"In Blind Love" the wicked husband was Harry Hyde. We do not know the second character. We've answered the last question only about three times lately. Read the back numbers.

C. B.—Miss Guyon was the Chemist's daughter in the "Power of Destruction" and a leading player for the Paris Eclair company but that's as far as we can go with her history. We do not tab up the French players as it is not possible to get more than an occasional name. You might write the American office about the photograph. We do not find an Eclair title that corresponds to the one you give. See reply to R. E. J.

J. E. S.—We do not know why Pathe wants the name and address on a separate sheet. There are some things that even an Answers Man cannot fathom. The practise of advising the author as to release date is a courtesy. Where it is not practiced we do not think it would do much good to ask that the information be supplied. The best way is to watch the stories of the films each week. Stick to the dictionary.

G. S. C.—It is foolish to try and work over photoplays from published stories and books, but if you want to waste your time address the publisher of the story desired. If he has not purchased all rights he will put you in touch with the author if your inquiry carries a reply envelope.

G. K.—Pathe sometimes accepts synopses without the plot of action. We do not know of any other company following this practice. Why send scripts to the Imp when you've been told that the Universal office reads for that brand? Read this paper regularly and keep posted. The best thing to do is to send both Imp and the Universal formal notification by registered letter that you withdraw the script. Then copy your carbon and submit elsewhere. Imp, like the other Universal companies, has its tame author.

M. H.—We do not know where Miss Bernard went. We cannot publish a picture of Miss Pickford now that she is no longer a photoplayer. We lack the full cast for "A Ten Karat Hero."

E. W. S.—Hold your stories until spring and then try them on Edison or

M. S.—Francis X. Bushman was Jack in "The Warning Hand." Vitagraph.

Comments on the Films

Licensed

"SPECIMENS OF LIZARDS AND FROGS" (Eclipse), Nov. 13.—Extremely clear photography in this picture shows even minute markings on many interesting lizards and 'gators. The frogs also are worth seeing.

"THE TOWN OF COGNAC, FRANCE, AND ITS BRANDY INDUSTRY" (Eclipse), Nov. 13.—Lovely views of a city both old and new. Glimpses of the brandy industry are included. A good item.

"REVIEWING FRENCH TROOPS BY AIRSHIP" (Eclipse), Nov. 13.—Gives the spectator an impression that he, too, is floating above the earth. The three on this reel are all excellent entertainment, and make a worth while offering.

"CUTTING CALIFORNIA REDWOODS" (Essanay), Nov. 14.—This is the first picture showing how the big California trees are handled that we have seen. Lumber business pictures we have had, but nothing, so far as we know, like this. It held the attention of a large Broadway audience in a way that leads us to prophesy a big success for it. It is a sure feature; a treat for any audience.

"VALUE RECEIVED" (Melies), Nov. 14.—A ranch life picture set in interesting backgrounds. A sheriff grubstakes a prospector. The sheriff dies, and gives the record of the grubstake to his son, who grows up a dashing cowboy. The prospector makes a strike, ignores the contract, and buys the next ranch. His daughter and the puncher fall in love, and the outcome makes the picture.

"THE BRANDED ARM" (Pathe), Nov. 14.—The opening scenes of this picture are unusually strong, but they promise what the picture fails to provide. The Pathe Company has a fine little player in that girl; the boy, too, is good. In this picture's early scenes both, but especially the girl, do delightful work. One is sorry to see them grow up. It is only by comparison that the latter part of the picture seems weak. It is all well acted, and the photography is fair, but the story is not very much above commonplace. Geo. Gebhart is always good as an Indian, and the girl's part, opposite to him, is well filled as its business permits. Compared with other pictures, it is a good offering.

"THE YOUNG MILLIONAIRE" (Kalem), Nov. 13.—Good photography is worth much in any picture. Recently, for some reason not known, many pictures, including every make we see, have been very poorly taken. The photographs in this Kalem offering are perfect. The story is commonplace but clear, and has Alice Joyce in the leading role. It makes a fair commercial offering.

"LORD BROWNING AND CINDERELLA" (Vitagraph), Nov. 13.—Cinderella pictures have from the start an advantage over others in one of the best situations possible. But in comparison with others of its kind, this very improbable and not very carefully made story of an English nobleman and an American mamma with two daughters and a stepdaughter suffers. One scene seems quite carelessly made. It shows the Cinderella (Clara K. Young), slipshodly dressed, coming into a room where her mother and sisters, in stylish clothes, are seated. We haven't been prepared by any insight into her state of mind regarding her short skirt, and for a moment she seems slovenly and is cheapened. Lord Browning's attitude toward the girls (he had merely heard about them as Americans) is super-romantic, and Cinderella is also cheapened by her attitude toward him, whom she has also only heard of. The authoress is Josephine W. Crawford, and the producer, Van Dyke Brooke. Maurice Costello is Lord Browning, Julia S. Gordon is the American mamma, Flora Finch the oldest, and Leah Baird the middle daughter. Van Dyke Brooke is the fisherman.

"OLD SONGS AND MEMORIES" (Selig), Nov. 14.—Nothing whatever is so close to the heart strings of any people as its "good" old songs. The first chapter of the best history of the United States is "Yankee Doodle," and the Civil War songs tells more about us than all the books in the Congressional Library. Several motion pictures have presented the same idyllic story as this Selig offering does, and some have also given it as memory visions that look back from the present to days before the war and war times. Several have made skillful use of old songs to help out some picture story, but, so far as we know, no one before has got as much American experience in one picture as Hettie Gray Baker has in "Old Songs and Memories." It is tremendously effective to such as remember war times. The present reviewer does only through his kin, but he, too, was deeply moved. There were people in front of us who frankly dried their eyes. Few Americans of the generation it pictures will fail to see their own story in it. But it might have been much more effective if more carefully done. The soldier pictures might have been much more natural, and the photography is poor. The producer is Colin Campbell, and the two principal parts are played by Eugenie Resserer, as the old lady who dreams on the porch, and Thomas Santschi, the old G. A. R. man.

"HOPE" (Edison), Nov. 16.—This is the annual Red Cross Seal picture that the Edison Company produces in co-operation with the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. As philanthropists we feel that we ought to further the picture as much as we can, but as critics we cannot report that the audience liked it; too many showed that they didn't. It is not good entertainment, as was the first Seal picture, two years ago. The trouble is that from first to last it has too obviously been forced into the pattern of the committee's purpose; it was too plainly made to teach. The lesson is valuable, and is worth putting before every audience.

"MR. UP'S TRIP TRIPPED UP" (Essanay), Nov. 15.—This farce was unfortunate in following a good Essanay picture, and suffered somewhat; but, compared with all the pictures we have seen today, it gives acceptable entertainment. It has a fresh situation, but was drawn out to a full-length reel, and parts of it are thin. Mr. Up, played by Howard Missimer, is an absent-minded man who gets up late and packs his trunk with all his clothes. The expressman takes it away before he comes to enough to find that he has only pajamas to wear. E. H. Calvert plays the friend who sends him the invitation, with Dolores Cassinelli as his wife, and Master Billy Calvert as his child. Wm. Bailey plays the butler, and Lily Branscombe the maid.

"BATTLE IN THE VIRGINIA HILLS" (Kalem), Nov. 16.—In its settings and backgrounds this picture of a mountain feud achieves a remarkably realistic impression. But all these pictures of family duels have much brutality in them, and this one makes its heroine go out gunning for a man. The situation develops into a love story, but not convincingly. The heroine is very pretty and acceptable, and the photography is fine.

"MAX GETS THE REWARD" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 15.—An amusing picture that got many laughs. Max is well known and has a host of admirers. He is not at his inimitable best here, but very acceptable none the less.

"THE SLATE INDUSTRY" (Lubin), Nov. 15.—Shows children's slates cut from the rock and split into size. Very interesting and instructive.

"SUITORS AND SUIT CASES" (Lubin), Nov. 15.—A light but brisk farce of a queer character and a man with the wrong suit case and only a girl's clothes to wear. It made a good deal of laughter.

"THE PINEAPPLE" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 13.—This educational picture contains many fine views of the planting, cultivating and gathering of the fruit.

"A TRIP TO MOUNT RAINIER" (Pathe), Nov. 13.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this splendid scenic of the "Seeing America First" series. Standing out above all the others is the panoramic picture of Mirror Lake. It would be difficult to exaggerate the beauties of this view. The camera work and the photography fully match the marvelous natural scenery. And this particular picture was one of many.

"A THRILLING RESCUE BY UNCLE MUN" (Edison), Nov. 13.—It is difficult to conceive a reason for the release of this film. It may be the half dozen feet of camera trick work which enabled Uncle Mun to get the better of the stymie in the game of golf. This did make a laugh.

"BETWEEN LOVE AND THE LAW" (Selig), Nov. 12.—William Duncan and Myrtle Stedman have the leads in a story which is notable perhaps for the fine natural scenery. A game warden who has arrested the father and brother of his sweetheart through information unwittingly furnished by the girl herself, afterward fining the culprits $500, settles the whole trouble by himself paying the fine.

"THE COUNTRY SCHOOL TEACHER" (Lubin), Nov. 14.—A picture which will go a long way to prove that if boys are savages, men are grown boys. When pupils threw things at the teacher whenever his back was turned, a Broadway audience laughed broadly. It seemed as if there must have been many in the house who had attended school in the little red affair at some crossroads. There was a "punch" when the teacher (Arthur Johnson) lost his temper and punched one of his unruly pupils (Howard Mitchell). It was a strong situation. There were other situations equally good. Lottie Briscoe was at her best. It's a picture worth seeing.

"AT THE RAINBOW'S END" (Lubin), Nov. 12.—Another of the August-Hawley pictures, the predecessors of which have been so popular. The story is not a pleasant one (those plays which most faithfully portray life as it is are not apt to be), but it can be said that this is an interesting one, nevertheless—made so by the excellent work of the principals. The drama as it unfolds points out the domestic tragedy that may engulf two lives—or even four lives—by the interference in a daughter's love affairs of an ambitious mother. The chief situation is when the wealthy widow clandestinely meets her old sweetheart, the one she has really loved through all her miserable married life, just outside his home. John, the grocer, of poetic temperament, who likewise has been harassed throughout his wedded life by an unresponsive, heckling slattern, forgetting himself in the presence of the woman he loves, has embraced her. His little son, empty milk bottle in hand, ready for bed and waiting for his father to prepare his nightly sustenance, breaks in on the scene. The father, on the brink, picks up the child and rushes into the house. The widow enters her car, goes to her home and falls across a couch. John, sobbing, is oblivious to the reproaches of his wife. It is the rainbow's end.

"THE LIGHT THAT FAILED" (Pathe), Nov. 16.—The chief feature of this picture, and one that is all-sufficient to make it an unusual release, is a thrilling rescue from a wreck by means of the basket and lifeline. There is a bounding surf rolling over a rocky shore, and is all marvelously realistic.

"ALKALI IKE'S CLOSE SHAVE" (Essanay), Nov. 16.—Somehow when one sees Alkali Ike in a title he is prepared for a laugh. There is measurable justification for this. In the present case, however, there may be disappointment. The attempts at humor are forced, artificial.

"SHANGHAIED" (Selig), Nov. 15.—A picture with beautiful settings on a beach flanked by great rocks and shown by splendid photography. The story depicts the transformation of a ne'er-do-well by means of harsh treatment on shipboard. In a fist fight the shanghaied one whips the mate and then several of the crew. It is rough, but it is healthy. There are some strong situations, especially those between Mr. Santschi and Miss Eyton, and they are competently handled. The picture is well put on.

"MY BABY" (Biograph), Nov. 14.—A strong story. William Christie Miller, as father and grandfather, shares with Little Mary the honors of the play. It is possible this may be the last of the plays in which this deservedly popular artiste will appear. The stage's gain is the screen's loss.

"I SAW HIM FIRST" (Kalem), Nov. 15.—The story of a young man alleged to be anxious to escape female admirers. There is a little comedy when two girls jump out of a canoe into shallow water in order to see which one of them the aforesaid young man will rescue. The indifference to their fate displayed by the man was explained by his attachment to the third member of the party of girls.

"THE BACHELOR'S BRIDE" (Kalem), Nov. 15.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this rather slender comedy.

"THE OLD REPORTER" (Edison), Nov. 15.—In this fine newspaper drama William West does excellent work, as do all of his associates. The writer is strongly under the impression that the story in its most striking phase—the reporter, under the excitement of a great scoop, absent-mindedly going to the office of his former employment and there writing out his stuff, forgetting his new assignment—has been told in a magazine, but that does not detract in any way from its interest.

"THE MODEL FOR ST. JOHN" (Vitagraph), Nov. 16.—A picture giving something more than a mere temperance story; but one that, as a sermon, is pretty effective. Its strength comes from the vividness with which it contrasts the man in his youth when his father, the artist, paints him as St. John and in later years when the father, not knowing him, picks him out from other benchers as a good model for a typical sot. Mrs. Breuil, the authoress, provided something fresh. James Young, the producer, plays the model and Roger Lytton, the artist. Messrs. Eldridge, Wilson and many others have less important parts.

"LIFE AND INDUSTRIES IN ARDEN CAMPO" (Cines), Nov. 16.—An interesting and fairly well photographed series of views of Arden, just East of Suez.

"THE OLD ACTOR'S VISION" (Cines), Nov. 16.—A picture of sentiment contrasting, by means of double exposure memory visions, an actor's glorious past with his poor house present. It is well acted and well photographed. The two on this film make an interesting number.

"THE UNUSUAL HONEYMOON" (Vitagraph), Nov. 18.—Miss Rose Tapley, the writer of this jovial farce, has, with James Young, the picture's producer, provided good, fresh fun. Of course, Flora Finch and Chas. Edwards, who play it, must not be left out. It begins at a Scotch fair where Mary MacGregor and Tamas Mac, her spouse, are beginning their honeymoon. There was plenty of fun at the fair, but Tam and Mary had had several glasses of red lemonade and the balloon was anchored nearby. They take a sky excursion and land among savages in the South Sea Islands. The offering is good entertainment, made much jolly laughter and seemed to be popular.

"THEIR IDOLS" (Biograph), Nov. 18.—A farce of American life. The German and the Frenchman are good friends and the daughter of one is engaged to the son of the other. The two dads get into an argument about their idols, Bismark and Napoleon, and it nearly breaks up the love match. The action is full of freshness although the primary situation isn't. The facial expression of the Biograph players is very amusing and this alone would make the picture go.

"HOIST ON HIS OWN PETARD" (Biograph), Nov. 18.—This farce is not so clear as the other on this reel and is not so good. It gets across on its facial expression and a large audience found it amusing.

"STRONG ARMED NELLIE" (Kalem), Nov. 18.—That Nellie is played by Ruth Roland is perhaps the picture's best point when considered as entertainment. It doesn't give much chance for comedy but it is kept from being dull. John E. Brennan plays Nellie's dad.

"THE LANDLUBBER" (Kalem), Nov. 18.—It is John E. Brennan, who, as a sailor playing photographer, makes the best laughs in this farce, but Rob. Grey, as the landlubber, the photographer playing sailor in order to win his sweetheart, Ruth Roland, also is amusing. Aside from these two sketches, the picture lacks freshness; but these are good and make the offering go.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, No. 47" (Nov. 18).—A number of good items, including a long and intimate view of the Russian royal family and a good view of Emperor William of Germany reviewing his grenadiers.

"CHIEF WHITE EAGLE" (Lubin), Nov. 16.—The center of every good drama is some situation created by human beings, characters. Certainly that is true of this picture in which the two leading characters (at bottom, just man and woman) are clearly blocked out and deeply interesting. It is an offering with much distinction and human value. Its producer shows individuality in a remarkable degree. There is room for growth and improvement. Art always has been long and only achieved by painstaking thought and honest self-criticism. It seems to us, just now, that his worst fault gives the brightest promise of better work than any one has given us yet. The fault is over-boldness. The audience also has imagination and the spectators most worth while like more subtility. They are most pleased when they feel that the producer has left something, not too much, for them to do.

The situation chosen in the first place is dramatic and full of possible tragedy. The Indians around a frontier fort are dissatisfied and ready to go on the war path. The head chief's son and heir is in the East at college. The chief dies and the United States government recalls the son to rule over his tribe. He comes to the fort. The sinues of hell are in the situation and it must be handled by the soldiers delicately, but the major's daughter finding life dull at the post is like Satan looking for trouble. She sees the college bred chief arrive and sees her chance. The way she makes use of it is strong as pictured. It is true and gets over, is more effective than the result of her foolish work which seems soft, at least in comparison, because the struggle in the heart of the chief that brings it about is not suggested. The man's face, solemnly earnest and his training make it possible; but we didn't expect it. Yet it is so strong that few will feel any dissatisfaction with it. Romaine Fielding is author and producer and plays the redman. Mary E. Ryan plays the girl; Rob. Adair, the lieutenant; Richard Wangemann, the major; Mrs. Nellie Cytron, the girl's mother, and Geo. Clancy the ranchman. The soldier on guard deserves mention.

"THE GOOD FOR NOTHING" (Lubin), Nov. 18.—We had been told this was to be a drama. It is more. There is running through this story by William H. Kitchell a fine vein of refined comedy. Edwin August has abundant opportunity here to show his versatility. He more than makes good as Dick Evans, the good-for-nothing, the failure in the city, who comes back to his little home town on money surreptitiously sent him by his mother, only to meet with indifference on the part of his father. His old sweetheart, Rosabel Jordan, is still a believer in Dick, but her father, the postmaster, will have none of him.

A few days in town, Dick sees an announcement that the Pocono Citizen is for sale, cheap—the entire printing and newspaper plant—for $500. Dick applies to the Rev. John Brower, who lends him the money to buy the little sheet. The editor now becomes the biggest man in town. The postmaster buys a paper and reads an editorial blast to the effect that it is time there was a live postmaster in the town and advising all readers to write the Congressman to that effect.

The father of the editor is a candidate for Congress. Dick comes out as a rival. "Vote for a man who will bring the trolley to Pocono," he advises. The two fathers are in consternation. On his own initiative Dick induces the trolley magnates to build the line into town. Then he announces that he will retire from the contest for Congress. The two fathers take back all they have ever said. Dick gets Rosabel. It is an August picture, all the way, and a delightful one. Miss Hawley as Rosabel is charmingly natural. Arthur Matthew as the clergyman looks and acts the part. The entire support is first-class.

"A NOBLE PROFESSION" (Edison), Nov. 19.—A story showing the steps in the making of a trained nurse, produced in conjunction with the Metropolitan and City Hospitals of Blackwell's Island, New York City. There are many views of different departments in these institutions, including among others the operating room. It will make a most interesting release.

"WHIFFLE'S NIGHTMARE" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 19.—In this comedy of trick work and most exact and craftsmanlike double exposure, M. Prince takes the double role of the brothers. There are many laughs, especially when the well-to-do brother crammed into his throat the "hallucination pills" in the effort to dissipate the "apparition" in front of him.

"THE BEAUTIES OF PORTUGAL" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 19.—On the same reel as the foregoing are these beautiful hand-colored pictures.

"THE KERRY GOW" (Kalem), Nov. 18.—The O'Kalems in this story of Joe Murphy will renew to the memory of the playgoers of a generation ago a famous old Irish drama set amid the beauties of the Emerald Isle. The World has already reviewed this three-reel feature. It only remains to say that it will make high-class entertainment, especially to older picture followers. Jack Clark as Dan O'Hara, the blacksmith, will appeal to the Irish heart. His interpretation of the role will recall his speaking predecessor whose "Misther Hay—Sor!" always brought down a house. Sidney Olcott, who produced the picture, takes a double role. His opportunity was in that of Keirnan, the man who "planted" the pikes; he was excellent as in fact was the work of the entire company.

Independent

"ZIGOTO HAS A GOOD HEART" (Gaumont).—The eccentric French detective here rescues a stolen dog from drowning, punishes two men who had carried the animal away, and brings back some flowers to his waiting sweetheart. There is plenty of action in the film, and it is good pictorially.

"CALINO AS A STATION MASTER" (Gaumont).—This comedy of a French station master is on the same reel. It is very good indeed, showing all sorts of amusing mishaps around the depot presided over by the busy Calino. The picture closes as a train runs through the depot building.

"A HAZARD FOR A HEART" (Gaumont).—Nordiska is a beautiful Frenchwoman who informs her three lovers that she admires courage more than anything else in a man. One of them disguises himself as a burglar, enters her room and robs her of her jewels. The denouement comes as a surprise. The idea could well have been carried further, but it is interesting as it is.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY NO. 36."—A good number. One of the features is a view of President-elect Wilson with his hand on the shoulder of his chief of staff, Chairman McCombs. Another is a fine picture of a British naval review—one of the big fellows carrying an aeroplane on its deck. There is also a good photograph of the newest Zeppelin aircraft.

"JACK'S WORD" (American), Nov. 25.—A story written around a promise extorted from a sheriff by the girl he loved that he would never shoot or injure any man. It seemed to the writer that she did not want a sheriff for a husband; she ought to marry a missionary.

"FRANKFURTERS AND QUAIL" (Thanhouser), Nov. 17.—There is some mild amusement in this story of the new-rich young couple who found more pleasure in a trip to Coney Island and in a luncheon on frankfurters than they had been able to extract from the lobster palaces and on a quail diet.

"THE WOULD-BE HEIR" (American), Nov. 21.—If an heiress does not marry within the year her cousin comes into possession of certain property. The cousin conspires to make the lover of the heiress believe the latter is fickle. There is temporary success, but later the villain is uncovered and the two lovers are reunited.

"AN IDYL OF HAWAII" (American), Nov. 23.—Candor compels the statement that the title is unfortunate. The picture was not taken in Hawaii; that will be patent to any human being above the age of ten years.

"TWO OF A KIND" (Majestic), Nov. 19.—Very good settings and excellent photography mark this picture. It is a story of two bashful lovers, but the handicap does not prevail in the last scene, in which lost time is made up by the two backward lovers, who indulge in a most fervid osculatory session.

"THE DESTRUCTIVE DUELIST" (Gaumont), Nov. 26.—A skillful clown takes the farcical role of Simple Simon and fights a comic duel, a running fight and fire at will. It is very destructive to mirrors, bric-a-brac, windows, furniture, etc., but no one is killed. Eccentric camera work makes it amusing.

"WAS MABEL CURED?" (Victor), Nov. 22.—If there is a point at which improbability mixed with probability makes a good farce, we feel that it was found—if not exactly, nearly—by this picture. The story concerns two young people, both would-be authors and both interested in the underworld. A facetious police sergeant—the girl's father, by the way—hoodwinks both into thinking the other the kind of crook that would be interesting in a story. Through their studying of each other, much that is very amusing develops, and they land in a cell together. It makes good entertainment for passing time.

"IN THE LONG RUN" (Nestor), Nov. 20.—All makes of film have their own peculiarities and special excellencies. One quality is noticeable in Nestor pictures of the present kind, dealing with the chase of a bad man by a posse, and that is the stress laid on character drawing, not only in the leads, where it is expected and looked for, but even to least important players. Of course, in the business of a posse there is little chance for acting of an individual kind, but what little chance there is is well used. The result is a very convincing picture. In "In the Long Run" the leading players, Dorothy Davenport, Jack Conway, and especially the bad man, name not known, do remarkably. The action is very dramatic and gives them an unusually good opportunity. It is a tense and thrilling but human picture, good entertainment even for the critical, if they be normal in their views of life, and makes a desirable release.

"BONAFACIO AS A BLACKAMOOR" (Milano), Nov. 23.—The quality of these rough-and-tumble farces is well known. As entertainment, as far as we know by our observations, they do not displease audiences. There is nothing truly vulgar in this one. There is no dramatic action, but it is full of movement. The photography is good.

"CASTLES AND LANDMARKS IN ITALY" (Milano), Nov. 23.—An exceptionally interesting series of views, well photographed and well chosen. The two on one reel make a good number.

"CRANBERRY INDUSTRY ON CAPE COD" (Imp), Nov. 23.—As a Thanksgiving film this has merit, but it will go at all seasons as a good picture of one of our national institutions, the cranberry—tart, but pleasing decoration to a plate of turkey.

"ONE OF THE BRAVEST" (Imp), Nov. 23.—A farce on the same film. The caricatured policeman, who is afraid of the very name of burglar, but who hires a friend to impersonate one, in order to give him a chance to scare him off and win fame. He gets up against the real thing and knocks him out before he knows who it is. He gets promotion. Charles de Forest is the copper. Rolinda Bainbridge has a part. It is amusing surely, and the two on one reel make an excellent offering.

"THE GOAT GIRL FROM BEAR CANYON" (Frontier).—The Frontier Company makes its debut with an interesting picture taken in New Mexico. We can see plainly that these new films are going to bring fresh atmosphere in stories with a new taste. As to the quality of the story in this case, we can say very little. The offering is good, in spite of its stale story—that of the married man who falls in the hills and is hurt, is cared for by the—in this case goat girl—and, viper-like, wins her affections. The interest of the picture comes from the herd of goats, billies and nannies, which is seen from many different angles and is very amusing. The players promise good things if they are given a chance. The leading lady is pleasing and will make a popular heroine.

"THE INVISIBLE" (Eclair, Paris), Nov. 24.—A farcical love story of rural characters. The swain buys a powder that will surely make him invisible, for did not the man with the helmet and plumes who sold it to him show how it worked? He had one of the crowd put on some of it, and held a cloth up for a moment, and when the cloth was drawn aside the man was gone. The swain puts it on and goes boldly to elope with the girl. Her dad doesn't see him, so he is safe enough. But though he is invisible, he finds he can feel the prongs of a pitchfork, and can feel the handle of it, too. His cronies find out about the powder and make more fun. It is very light, but it is amusing.

"SEVILLE AND ITS GARDENS" (Eclair, Paris), Nov. 24.—An excellent offering, well photographed and interesting.

"THE TONGUELESS MAN" (Gem), Nov. 19.—The character of the tongueless man in this picture is new and very well played, indeed. Aside from this character there is little that can be said for the story, which is artificial and gives little chance for acting, but it is worth while to see the tongueless man.

"HIS DETERMINATION REWARDED" (Eclair), Nov. 19.—A story of the difficulties of an ex-prisoner who claims to be innocent. He has an "evil genius," a man who wants to make a burglar of him, and who sees that he loses every decent job he gets. It is an artificial, unconvincing story, but deals with a subject with which it is easy to sympathize, and as an offering to the public is fair. There is some quality to the acting which now and then is excellent.

"THE CANDY GIRL" (Imp), Nov. 21.—A little cream puff of comedy concerning the arrival of a new girl in a college town confectionery store. The elderly girl, who must have been a "college widow," has to content herself with marrying one of the professors.

"THE RIVALS" (Keystone), Nov. 18.—Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand are seen to the best possible advantage in this brisk, clean little comedy. The rival man is also good. The manner in which Henry surmounts his own cowardice and wins back the girl he loves is very entertaining.

"MR. FIXER" (Keystone), Nov. 18.—In this picture, on the same reel with above, Fred Mace adds his talents to the group. He pretends to fix up a love affair for Sennett, but in reality tries to capture the girl himself. The plot is a little obscure till toward the end. More sub-titles could have been used to advantage. A good offering.

"THE POWER OF MONEY" (Solax), Nov. 22.—Stock market scenes on the New York curb lend color to this picture. The ups and downs of Bonanza V keep the hero in financial hot water. A lottery ticket he had given to a flower girl proves winner of the capital prize, and she saves the day for him. There is a counter love story, with a scheming rival that is of interest. A good film.

"DON CAESAR DE BAZAN" (Reliance), Nov. 20.—You can almost hear the clash of swords and the gallants crying "Gadzooks!" and "Odds bodkins!" in this film. The Victor Hugo romance is admirably set in motion in this production. There is a commendable care taken in the costuming, and the court scenes, gambling tables, dancing girls, duel, etc., all lend atmosphere in keeping with the story, which is shown in two reels. In the second reel the action is somewhat complicated, and one or two sub-titles would help to a fuller understanding of the plot. It is a dashing performance throughout, and will make its way wherever offered.

"GIVING THE BLIND THE LIGHT OF KNOWLEDGE" (Gaumont), Nov. 22.—This short educational feature will interest most audiences. It gives a clear insight into the marvelous arts employed to teach the blind of Paris reading, arithmetic, geography, physiology, music, gymnastics, etc. One of the good usages to which the motion picture may be put.

"A FOUR-CORNERED WEDDING" (Comet), Nov. 18.—Other pictures have preceded this in which the parents and children were married at the same time. But this picture is well acted and tells a good story, with the usual complications. Gus Mansfield and Mabel Miller play the younger couple. The older couple do some very good character work.

"WILLIE'S TICKER" (Lux), Nov. 22.—A French knockabout picture with some new antics and scenic environment. Willie, proud of the new clock his uncle has given him, sets out to regulate all the timepieces in Paris by it. The subsequent chase winds up in the famous sewers of Paris.

"THE WRONG FLAT" (Lux), Nov. 22.—On same reel with above. On moving day the effects of Prof. Dryasdust and the lady with the lorgnette become badly mixed up. The lady finds herself in a room with the professor's pet rats, snakes and monkey. As a farcical offering this is certain to please.

"THE BLACK HAND" (Eclair), Nov. 21.—A bare outline of the plot is hardly fair to this picture, as it is better than the plot sounds. A careless painter leaves the imprint of his black hand in various parts of a rich merchant's house, much to the latter's alarm. But when the merchant finally discovers the same black hand imprinted on his servant girl's back his relief is very great.

"MOTHER'S BANK ROLL" (Eclair), Nov. 21.—This ingenious little comedy, centering about the bank roll mother put in the stove for safe keeping, is the best thing we have seen of the kind for a long time. A new idea is well worked out. It is on the same reel with the above.

"THE SHANGHAIED COWBOYS" (Nestor), Nov. 22.—One of those absurd concoctions which make us laugh because of its utter impossibility. Imagine half a dozen cowboys going to sleep in a box car, after a night's revelry, and waking up in a seaport next morning, where they are given knockout drops and smuggled aboard a ship wanting a crew! Then imagine them swabbing decks and climbing into the ship's rigging! And imagine their glee when they got safely back to the ranch again and found the old cook back on the job. Owen Wister and Robert Louis Stevenson combined could not beat this imaginative creation. Certain to please.

"A CRIMINAL IN SPITE OF HIMSELF" (Eclair), Nov. 17.—Louis Moriot, who happens to bear the name of a notorious French burglar, has a great deal of trouble as a result. This all goes to make a good French comedy, winding up with abject apologies from those who had unjustly suspected him. Amusing and interesting.

"OPORTO, PORTUGAL, AND ITS HARBOR" (Eclair), Nov. 17.—On same reel as above. Good views of this picturesque locality, with glimpses of its folk life and varied industries.

"A FIGHT FOR FRIENDSHIP" (Nestor), Nov. 18.—One of those live, modern picture stories which show us the West as it is today. The tunnel project is well portrayed, and the details of the story handled in an absorbing manner. A good offering.

"TRAPPED BY FIRE" (Bison), Nov. 19.—This picture gives a good sample of the evil effects wrought upon the Indians by "fire water" in the early days. They set fire to a cabin, which is consumed by flames in a most realistic manner. The manner in which the elder brother holds back the redskins to help the lovers and other people escape is graphically shown. The rescue from the cellar under the cabin ruins is also effective.

"A LEG AND A LEGACY" (Powers), Nov. 20.—There is good acting and some interesting photography in this picture, but it suffers from its plot, which is not up to the Powers' standard. The rescue of the girl from drowning is ridiculous, because the girl had merely waded out in the surf and was to all appearances in no real danger.

"THE OPEN ROAD" (Imp), Nov. 18.—This film is a veritable triumph from an artistic standpoint. It will convince any skeptic that the moving picture can tell a strong, appealing story, and at the same time carry with it an atmosphere of rare beauty. The country scenes in this are alone sufficient to make it a big success, and the story is so simply and naturally worked out that it will linger in the memory a long time. The leading characters did their work excellently. An exceptional film in every way.

"BLUE RIDGE FOLKS" (Champion), Nov. 18.—This picture abounds in action of the stirring sort. A combat between two men over a revolver, a burning house, a man who loses his reason and regains it, and the holdup of an entire courtroom and other scenes of like order convey the strong atmosphere of the Southern mountain districts. The story, which concerns the foreclosing of a mortgage, is considerably involved in places, but holds the attention throughout.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

Exhibiting Pictures at Balls.

ON the evening of November 14th the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York gave their second annual ball, which has been described elsewhere in the paper. It was more than a howling success. It was a scream, from start to finish, and would have required another building equally as large as the immense "Palm Garden" to have held the overflow. But it is not my design to enlarge upon these matters, which properly belong to another section of the paper. There is, however, something in connection with this ball and other similar affairs which of right must be dealt with in the Projection Department, and that is the exhibiting of films by the different machine manufacturers. This is usually done at affairs of this kind, and seldom, indeed, is the performance creditable either to the machine or film manufacturers.

As a general proposition both the booth (booth is the correct term here) and the projectors are hastily installed, while the electric wiring and installation is more or less imperfect. The machine is usually a brand new mechanism, which has been carefully tested out at the factory, and is supposed to be practically perfect; and it is, too, or would be after having been run a day or two to get limbered up, and the various little adjustments made which always must be made after a new machine is placed in actual operation. The film itself is, as a rule, new film, fresh from the hands of the manufacturer, with the emulsion about as soft as emulsion ever is, and the net result ordinarily spells just one thing, and that one thing is trouble. But this is not all, for the whole plant is unfamiliar to the operator, and he is therefore not in a position to do the best possible work.

At the ball in question there were four machines, viz.: The Motiograph, Standard, Simplex and Power's "Six-A." Not a single one of them gave a high class performance, due, beyond the question of a doubt, in greater or less degree, to the above named causes. Justice was not done to the films simply because in the very nature of things, there being so many reels to project, it had to be put through at horse-race speed. We therefore had a sort of jumping-jack spectacle, instead of real projection.

The editor of this department strenuously objects to any such performance. Exhibitors, machine men and manufacturers understand, or most of them do. The outside public, expecting that the projection at an exhibitors' ball certainly will be the acme of everything that is good, are both puzzled and amazed at what they see.

Let the manufacturers display their machines if they so desire. That part of it is all right. But cut out the projection of films under such conditions.

Poor Patches.

Mr. Blaine Day, Sherman, Tex., writes:

> Enclosed find $2.50 for the new Handbook, which please mail as soon as it is off the press. Will you kindly publish the following, for the benefit of Texas managers and operators? Of late many patches have been pulling loose. Upon examination I found them apparently to have been patched with "new-skin," and that the emulsion has never been scraped. The film was just cut and stuck together. Of course, the cement might not have been real "new-skin," but it certainly was a very cheap cement. It is high time some operators used a little judgment and horse sense in making patches. You can bet your last dollar that when a reel of film leaves the Jewel Theater there is not a bad patch or a misframe in it.

Yes, friend Day, I have seen patches myself that I think must have been put together with liquid courtplaster, or else the operator merely used a little tobacco juice. I thoroughly agree with you that better patches should be made, but sometimes this is not altogether the fault of the operator, as he is not always allowed sufficient time to make a good patch. We have a certain type of manager still in evidence who would expect the operator to be running again in 15 seconds if the entire floor dropped out of the operating room. The manager who has two machines and one operator, and who expects the operator to rewind the film, make patches and thread one machine while he is running the other is responsible for much of this kind of raw work. I should be glad to attend the last sad rites of this type of manager at any time. By this we do not mean his actual physical burial, but merely his theatrical finish.

Bartlesville Still Kicking.

Bartlesville, Okla., arises to remark:

> I have a little suggestion for users of Edison machines: Cut the small casting bar off the top of the gate. This allows the top half of the tension springs to bow as much as the bottom half, and gives a much more even pressure on the film. Cutting out the bar doesn't weaken the gate to any noticeable extent. And now I have a few remarks to make about film service. The house where I work has dealt with a certain exchange for four years, taking ten-day service, yet if we ask for any particular film, although it be a regular release, we invariably have to wait from 30 to 90 days for it. The films are all in miserable condition—in fact, in nearly two months we have received only two programs in which there was not at least one film almost completely covered with oil. In the last three months we have only received seven reels in which I did not have to make at least half a dozen patches, and not one reel in which none were necessary. In one reel we had some days ago I made 64 patches before it was in condition to run. The films are so exceedingly dirty that I have to clean my sprockets, aperture, etc., after every reel, and even then have weeds as big as trees all around my picture before the end of each reel. This exchange gives us advance notice of our programs, and on a number of occasions we have paid for lithos and advertised our coming program, only to have part of it changed at the last minute. This same exchange is the one where we ordered a second intermediate gear for an Edison machine three times, and then never got it. Mr. Stewart, in the September 21st issue, says that if operators would make patches properly the exchange would not need to do so much inspecting. Very well what about "Jimmy, the usher," who doesn't know enough to scrape the emulsion off his film when making a patch; also what about the tight-wad managers (?) who employ an operator (?) at $8, $10 and $12 a week? No operator can make a patch right when he has to crank the machine with one hand, and has no splicing machine or block; yet this is asked by many managers. So it is still up to the exchange to make good on their inspection. I know I am taking up a lot of space lately with these kicks, but, as Grant said, "I am going to fight it out along this line," etc., and I only wish a few more operators and managers would help me, in order to get some of these annoying things remedied. These exchanges get paid in cash for these films, and get their own price for them, too, and then they hand you a mess of dirty oily, torn-up junk and expect you to put on a show with it. Many operators put in from two to three hours every morning repairing films. Skilled laborers get from 40 cents per hour up. Two hours per day, at 40 cents per hour, seven days a week, amounts to $5.60, of which the exchange gets the benefit. Well, to pass on to a more cheerful subject, should there be any flow of current between one wire of the primary and one wire of the secondary in a Ft. Wayne compensarc? Should there be any circuit through these two wires? Another trouble I have is that I cannot get the flanges on my Edison Exhibition Model machine to turn steadily. They work easily with the finger, and do not bind, yet the film fails to turn them. Can you suggest a remedy?

I pass your Edison gate suggestion along to our readers for consideration. Personally, I don't see that the bar interferes in any way with the springs bowing—at least on the machine I have here. As to the service, I thoroughly agree with you that too many exchange managers seem to be obsessed with one idea and one idea only, viz., get the money. Returning value for the money seems to be about the last thing some of them think of. If you are paying them for ten-day service, and are getting the kind of junk you described, you certainly have a legitimate kick coming. You are, in fact, being swindled. The change of programs cannot always be avoided, since it may be due to the fact that some exhibitor has kept the film longer than he was entitled to it. As to your criticism of the patches made by the operators, I agree with you, and brother Stewart will have to stand hitched for a while, I guess. As to your making kicks, why, I regard the kicker as being of very distinct value. It is only by putting up a kick that we call pointed attention to grievances and get them remedied. As to the compensarc, when the switch is closed, without striking the arc, there is a slight flow of current between the primary and secondary wires, but it is what is termed a wattless current—that is to say, it doesn't register on the meter, though I presume it would affect a very finely adjusted ammeter. There is no flow between the primary and secondary. What flanges do you mean?

Fire Proofing.

Illinois writes:

> Am running a picture show here. My operating room is lined with galvanized iron. In case of fire is this sufficient to protect the building? I operate Power's machine, with the regular magazines. In case of fire would these magazines stand the test, or would they blow up if the film got on fire inside? An old operator told me recently that in case the fire got inside the magazine there would be an explosion which would tear things up for keeps.

On pages 66 to 81 inclusive, of the new Handbook (to be had from the Moving Picture World office, price $2.50—ready for delivery soon) you will find directions for properly and efficiently fireproofing your operating room. Galvanized iron alone for lining the operating room would offer very slight protection to the building and none whatever to the audience. It should be backed by sheet asbestos not less than one-fourth of an inch thick. There should be a flue to the open air, of sufficient size to carry off all smoke when a fire occurs, and shutters which will close within three seconds of the starting of a fire. The "old operator" evidently has not profited by his lengthy experience. In the first place the magazine rollers are supposed to prevent the fire from entering the magazine. But if, from any cause, they did not do so, there would not be any explosion, or anything in the nature of an explosion, except that gases might be generated so rapidly from the burning film that it would bend the door slightly in, forcing its escape. This talk of explosion is pure imagination, and the old operator who spun that yarn either had an ulterior motive or else he knows nothing whatever about such matters.

Threading in Frame.

Milwaukee, Wis., contributes the following information to Langdon, N. D.:

To thread your picture in frame, without having to look through the aperture, provided you have Power's "Six" or a Motiograph, first finish threading and close the gate. Next grasp the upper loop with the thumb and finger of the left hand, with right hand on framing lever, and pull upwards on the film gently with the left hand, moving framing lever until center of title frame is just over the shaft of the idler on top of the gate, and your picture will be in frame. The time required to perform this operation is a half a second, or less. By this plan there are no extra brackets or lights required. Your intermittent must, of course, be in the position it has when film is at rest (locked, ed.). If the sprocket revolves when you pull up on the film you will not have the picture framed correctly. The method is illustrated in the sketch. Try it with a Selig title first and have the point of the diamonds (their trade mark) at the center of the gate idler, as as shown.

Milwaukee also sends in solution of the rheostat problem, but we do not publish it, as the answer has already been set forth. We are indebted to Milwaukee for the framing directions. This stunt will undoubtedly prove of value to thousands of operators. It would be very easy to select some similar mark on the Edison and other machines, so that the same thing would apply; though possibly their gate rollers could not be used as the guide. Such things as this are very helpful indeed, and go a long way toward improving a performance. I would regard this one suggestion as worth the entire subscription of the Moving Picture World for a year. It is strange that none of us thought of so simple a thing before.

From the Iron Ore Country.

Ely, Minn., answers roll call once more with the following:

(1) Why is it the screws in my carbon holders melt at the end against the carbon? If I file them flat they melt on the edges, and if I file them round they melt in the center. Current is 110 volt, 60 cycle, a. c., through a F. W. compensarc; Edison lamp. (2) How long should a steel bushing last? In other words, how long do you think it should last, using the machine, say, three hours a day? (3) What is the first thing to do if your condenser should break during a show? Am having a hard time, waiting for my new Handbook. I ordered it about three weeks ago. Our manager gets the World, but I have not yet seen my first question answered in the department.

(1) By looking through three or four back numbers of the department you will find your question answered fully and completely. Clean out the inside of your carbon arms thoroughly, so that the carbon will make good contact. That type of carbon arm is not good, where you are using 60 amperes of current. It was all right in the days when low amperage was the rule. I would advise you to get carbon arms of the latest improved type. (2) I presume you refer to the intermittent bushing, or to the cam shaft bushing, but I could not answer your question with any degree of accuracy. It would depend largely on the kind of oil you use, and whether or not the bearing had adequate lubrication. If you use very thin, light oils, they will not last long, unless you keep flooding the bearings with oil. These lubricants are largely composed of kerosene and possess very little real lubricating quality. Get a good grade of light dynamo oil and give your cam shaft and cam shaft bearings one drop of it once an hour, and the bushing should last for a long time. (3) The breaking of a condenser during a show will have no effect whatever on the moving picture, though it would show in the stereopticon; therefore "the first thing to do" is keep right on projecting your picture.

Lubrication.

Mr. Everett J. Brown, La Fayette, Ind., contributes the collowing excellent letter on lubrication:

Being in the act of sending an order for the new bandbook, I will, if you have no objection, say a word on the subject of lubricants. I derive a great deal of benefit through the Projection Department, though I have never yet had to call on it for assistance. I have, nevertheless, taken from its columns several valuable tips, one being a receipt for cleaning lenses—1 ounce alcohol, 2 ounces distilled water and 3 drops of nitric acid—the best I ever saw. Another, though, beeswax as a lubricant for the gears, I cannot say so much for. I found it an absolute failure. Surely you did not try it, and as you said, only gave it as being sent in by another operator. I cleaned my Power's "Six" thoroughly with gasoline—I do that often—then applied the beeswax, but it cuts right off, and, besides, there is no lubricating quality to beeswax. And now, I want to tell you what I use on the gears. Mix vaseline to a good stiff paste with sifted flour (did you laugh then?)—I mean stiff, not "nearly so," but stiff. I have used vaseline and graphite and ready prepared graphite in tubes and stick form, but flour-vaseline paste is the best I have yet found. Have been using it for a year now, and the difference in the wear and noise of the gear is very noticeable. Another important feature is that it is much cleaner than mixtures of graphite. I know of no other operator using this formula, but am sure they would like it. I am using one drop oil and have always considered it first class. I hope Mr. Chambless sends you a sample of his motor attachment. I consider it the best to date. It applies the power to the crank shaft where it should be. When I hear from this, if I ever do, I may come again.

You need have no fear about hearing from as excellent a letter as this, Lafayette. No, I did not try out the beeswax proposition, nor did I say I did. If I actually tried out everything submitted I would not have time to do much of anything else. I pick out those things which seem to look reasonable and submit them, but I cannot possibly try them all out, much as I would like to. As to the oil; I do not approve of any of the advertised patent oils. They are too thin and too light. The Power Company's oil, which you call their "intermittent oil," is suitable for use on all parts of the machine and is, in my judgment, far superior to the oil you are using. The Motiograph people supply an excellent lubricating oil, and I believe the Edison and the American Moving Picture Machine Companies do also. Whether the manufacturers of the Simplex supply an oil, I do not know. But the buying of these oils is unnecessary. Get a light dynamo oil, or go to the superintendent of your electric light plant taking a pint bottle along, and have him fill it with his dynamo oil, which will probably cost you about ten cents for the bottle full, and you will have a real lubricant; enough to oil one machine for quite a while—so why pay high prices for "lubricants" which happen to possess a catchy name? As to the vaseline-flour mixture, I pass it along to our readers for experiment. It

Ground Detector.

Mr. L. C. Stewart, Akron, Colo., submits an excellent sketch explaining the ground detector. Akron suggests that the cut is self-explanatory, which is true. The dotted line shows an accidental ground on a negative wire, which would make lamp 1 burn up to c p, and lamp 2 either go out or burn very dimly. Under normal conditions both lamps would burn at half voltage.

Correct Solution of Problem.

Mr. Joe S. Perry, New Comedy Theater, New York, sends in a correct solution of the resistance problem. Quite a number have sent in correct solutions within the last few days—that is to say, correct except for the fact that they have not considered the resistance of the arc itself. One brother said the problem was not fully stated, since the resistance of the arc was not mentioned. If the brother will look at the sketch, accompanying the problem, he will see that while the arc was not mentioned, it was shown, and the operator is presumed to know that the arc itself offers a certain given resistance, according to the voltage across the arc, which may be taken at an average of 48 volts.

A Devoted Admirer.

Wichita, Kan., writes:

The writer is an operator of seven years' experience and is a devoted lover of "our" M. P. World. He is glad to say that he has thoroughly read every copy issued for the past five years, particularly the Projection Department. He honestly believes he has learned more from reading and studying than from experience, and he has most of the books on cinematography worth while, your hand-bood included. And now, let us come down to the personal pronoun. Although I claim to be a "professional" operator, I did succeed in completely burning up a reel of film for the "Maple" Theater, in this city, some time ago, but it was outside of the operating room. It caught from a very hot 16 c. p. incandescent lamp. It was purely accidental, and I think I can fairly say was not my fault at all, though I had to put up half the cost of the film or resign, even though I burned up a whole suit and overcoat with it. I write this experience for the information of brother operators and managers who heard of the fire and know me. Most of the managers in this neck of the woods, seem to take the operator to be some kind of an iron mechanism run with a spring. I know of one operator who enters upon his duties at 9:30 A. M., two machines operated by motor, works straight through till 5:30 P. M. without relief, or even dinner. If he happens to be hungry, they send up the usher with a bean sandwich for lunch. Then at 5:30 he has 45 minutes intermission for supper, and is then on duty again until 10:45 P. M., after which he carries a heavy box of film to the depot (almost a mile walk). As they change daily he gets this healthful and invigorating exercise seven days in the week (nothing to do until tomorrow, Ed.) and for this trifling service he receives the munificent salary of eighteen whole great big dollars every week. This gentleman asked for a relief operator. Mr. "Manager" says: "Certainly, that is right, old boy—but you must pay for him out of your salary." Naturally, under such conditions good projection is rather scarce hereabouts. Now Brother Richardson, I am sure you will excuse me, I did not intend to bother you with my "grouch" but I am very much interested in the business, and would like to see every picture a perfect picture, and those operators who try to make them so, given a square deal; other operators I would prefer to see in jail. My real reason for writing this letter is to tell you of what I think is the best one yet. During the past few years I have been making the different local towns, fixing up machines—"shooting trouble" I term it. On a recent visit to a certain little city where the operator (?) was extra green, the machine, Edison type B, was a total wreck. He had the eccentric bushings on the cam shaft and the other bushings on the intermittent, and had been running for something like fifteen days without a shutter. He had an outside shutter, and when I asked him why he removed it he said: "Well, we put in an aluminum screen and cut down the amperage to 40, therefore we did not think the lens would get hot enough to break, so I took the fan off. Isn't that a hot one? Can you match it?

I have never yet condemned an operator simply through the fact that he has had a fire. Accidents will happen in the best regulated families. The cause of your misfortune is unique, but it is not the first case of that kind by any manner of means. As to the eighteen-dollar-a-week, thirteen-hour-a-day and then some errand-boy operator, it is almost useless to comment on the utter foolishness of such a proposition. The "operator," who will do such a stunt as that is a very poor imitation of the real article, while the manager who will require it is, if possible, even worse. As to the small-town operator, he is perhaps as shining an example as would be met with. Let us hope that the removal of his "fan" really did not overheat the lens and do it serious damage.

Rapid Changing.

Mr. A. S. Martini, Dixie Theater, Galveston, Tex., writes:

> I have been a constant reader of the WORLD for years. I just noticed, page 457, November 2nd issue, Mr. E. E. Pearce, Proprietor and Manager of the Amuzee in Wiston, Salem, N. C., says he holds the record for changing films in nineteen seconds. Let me say that I can go him three better, as I have changed in sixteen seconds, and can prove it by News and Tribune reporters. I will be glad to hear from anyone who can beat this; also I will buy him a nice big glass of liquid joy, and put up a little money on the side.

Brother Martini, I have given your letter space through courtesy, but I would not care to enter into an extended discussion of rapid reel changing in the department, since I do not regard this as of particular interest or value to the business in general. Rapid reel changing might or might not be evidence of a man's proficiency as an operator. He may have practiced that one particular thing. The department, my brother, is designed to improve projection, and I do not mind giving a little space to such a subject as this, but the trouble is, if I allow such a discussion to start, we are likely to have several weeks of the department filled up with reel changing letters, without any material gain to anybody. Do you see the point?

Condenser Problem.

Stonington, Me., writes:

> Will you please explain to me why it is that the condensers in our Power's Five have the thinner or longer focal length lens next the lamp and the thick (stronger) one next the slide (stereo). By using the stronger one next the arc I am taught that it will allow less rays to escape at its edges, so that the front lens of the pair will collect more circumferential rays, thus making the picture brighter at the margins, and in better balance with the center. Am I right in inferring that these edge rays are sacrificed rather than assume the risk of breaking the heavier lens by placing it next the arc? Did you ever describe Power's "Five" in detail, the same as you did several other makes last spring?

At first I was inclined to smile at your way of setting things forth, Stonington, but a more careful reading convinced me that your ideas were sound, even though your method of expressing them was a little ambiguous. By the term "strong" I presume you mean a lens that will bend the rays of light more sharply, and if you thus use the term, it is properly applied. Placing the longer focal length lens next the light would, I believe, act in the way you suggest. There would, I think, unquestionably be some marginal loss of light, but, unless I am in error, the loss would be comparatively insignificant, and it would be light rays which would contain a great deal of spherical aberration anyhow; however, the most common practice, and I believe the best practice, is to place the thicker lens next the light.

Let me say in this connection that there are certain optical problems, relating to condensing lenses, which are not as yet thoroughly understood. Even the Scientific Department of the Bausch and Lomb Co. has not been able to set all these matters forth, as yet, in understandable form. I am trying to solve these various condenser problems—that is to say, the optical end, and as soon as that is accomplished, it will be set forth in this department. You can, of course, switch the lenses in your condenser mount, placing the thicker lens next the arc, but, in my opinion, the danger of breakage will be somewhat increased. No, I have not described Power's Five machine. The descriptive matter, such as was set forth in the department, and which is a part of the new hand-book, is very costly, both in time and money. It would not be expedient to thus describe a machine which is out-of-date, the use of which is being rapidly discontinued. Power's Five was a good machine in its day, but its day has passed.

Queer Proposition.

Los Angeles, Calif., sets forth the following queer proposition:

> Have had trouble with alternating current, and, after trying everything I know, am compelled to give it up and appeal to you for aid. I have a 130 foot throw and a 15 foot picture. Use 60 amperes of 60 cycle, 110 volt current; 9 and 9½ condensers; half size lens. When I run at the rate of 55 a minute, the flicker is all right, but when I go above that, it is awful. Use an Edison outside shutter machine. Have tried two wing, also three wing shutter. I know it is the current and would like to know if there is any way of overcoming this trouble.

The problem, as you have stated it, Los Angeles, seems incredible. You say when you run at 55 the flicker is "all right." I presume you mean by this that there isn't any, since a flicker cannot possibly be all right as long as it exists. Now, if your current is 60 cycle, then you should not encounter anything but a diminution or total elimination of flicker until you reach speed up to about 80 feet per minute, after which you would probably encounter a flashing of the light when using a three-wing shutter, though not with a two-wing shutter. However, you would have flicker with the two-wing shutter all the time until you passed the 65 mark. With 25 cycle current you would have a flicker regardless of what the speed might be since it would be in the light itself. I am afraid, Los Angeles, I can do nothing for you. If any of our correspondents can suggest the answer to this riddle, I should be glad to hear from them.

Langdon Explains.

Langdon, N. D., writes as follows:

> Your comments on my last letter (page 454, Nov. 2nd issue) were justifiable. On reading the letter in print, it is plain that I had not made myself clear. Referring to the questions in the last letter in their order: (1) The 8 c. p. lamp is on a wall bracket and swings into position in front of the lens and out of the way between the projection and stereopticon lens when through threading the film. (2) The lines scratched on the machine head are parallel with the upper and lower edge of the aperture, and show the position of the aperture when holding the film over it when threading up. I meant that the manufacturers could easily stripe the enamel with gold at this place, and thus add a real convenience at the cost of but very little trouble. (3) The battery lamp in the interior is a third way of using lamp when threading. A set of three dry cells, operated by a small switch under the table lights the lamp. It is also very handy in oiling the interior of the machine. Cost only $1.50 for lamp sockets, cord and cells. (4) The shutter mentioned will be sent to you for examination. I fully realize that perhaps thousands of different shutters have been tried, but still I claim that I have a great improvement over any shutter on the market. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. I will therefore send you a slice of the pudding and you can see for yourself. (5) I run the films through a machine to inspect them for several reasons. If a film is full of patches, an inspection by hand means that you have to stop to examine every one of them to see if it is in frame. Constantly starting and stopping the reels makes a slow job. Patches may feel tight to your fingers when winding the film, and still be out of frame and need attention. When run through the machine first, with the lens out and aperture towards a window, it only takes about fifteen minutes to discover every misframe; also, any torn sprocket holes also have a chance to give way. Then if misframes and other spots are marked by paper, thrown into the take-up reel, the places can be quickly found and patched when rewinding the film, and in this rewinding the film can also be watched, as you suggest, by holding between thumb and finger. If a film is in poor condition, the inspection is more thorough and quicker than by hand. Enclosed find draft for copy of the new handbook.

I am more than pleased to see that you took my criticisms in the right spirit, Langdon, and acknowledged their justice. As regards the threading schemes, I would call your attention to the one just published, which I think you will find to be perhaps more easily applied, and with less bother than any other so far suggested. The battery lamp certainly is of value, since, as you suggest, it also lights up the interior of the machine for oiling. As to running film through machine, I will freely concede that it is the quicker way of discovering misframes. Possibly one could combine the two operations by holding the edges of the film between the thumb and forefinger as it goes into the lower magazine. This would be entirely practical if the machine was run by a motor, or if you have a boy do the cranking while you are inspecting. In this connection you will find, probably in next week's department, a description of a method of lighting the interior of the lamp-house which I think you will conclude to be of much value.

From China.

From the Arcade Amusement Co., Tiensin, China, comes an order for the new hand-book. It was a matter of some surprise to receive an advance order from the Orient. Mr. Nicholas Power, who recently returned from an extended tour to Europe, informs me that he observed copies of the old hand-book in various places over there.

Wiring Diagram.

Fort Worth, Texas, contributes the following:

> When does the new hand-book come out? I see you call it your second edition, but I have one of your first edition yet—a little 3 x 6 inch vest pocket book, which I got in 1904; so you see > this is really your third edition. Enclosed find sketch for an easy connection for a. c. and d. c. lines and a Mercury Arc Rectifier or transformer to be used on the former and a rheostat on the latter.

The hand-book will be out at the very earliest possible moment. We are rushing all we possibly can. Yes, it is called the second edition, and it is that too. The little vest-pocket book you mention was too crude an effort and altogether too brief a work to be classed as a first edition. The wiring diagram is all right, and we pass it on along for the benefit of our readers. The hand-book is going to be fully 425 pages, hence it is no small task.

In Error.

Omaha, Neb., has received some erroneous information, which he sets forth as follows:

> Have been watching the department closely for answers to the resistance problem, volume 14, No. 1, page 47. I see the first two answers have been printed this week. Although I have been on the crank of a projection machine for twelve and a half years, I have never studied the electrical problems, presented by resistance. The ready made resistance devices have always proven satisfactory and I simply buy the kind I think best. Years ago, one who was up in the moving picture business of that day, although not an electrician, told me to test direct current by placing the bare ends of the two wires in a glass of water. The wire which caused the water to bubble was to be connected to the rheostat and run to the lower carbon arm. This is a rule which I have always followed and have never, since 1899, found myself burning an arc up-side-down. This is a round-about way to get to the resistance problem, but all I can say is that I see in the diagram an arc burning up-side-down; therefore a poor result on the screen. Condemn this "Old Foggies' Answer" to the waste basket if I am not right, for the handling of an arc lamp is second nature to me, and I have not had any light trouble for so long that I would probably be lost if I did. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is as welcome as my daily meals, and the Projection Department is looked forward to with as much expectancy as is my weekly salary. I see many light trouble questions in the department, and would like to comment on some of them, but, lacking ability to express myself in electrical terms, have kept quiet.

The method of testing direct current through the medium of a glass of water is correct, and, as given, would be a perfectly safe guide, so far as getting the arc burning right side up is concerned. The trouble is that you have lugged the rheostat in on that particular proposition, and lugged it in backwards at that. If your informant had told you to make this test and connect the wire which caused the water to bubble to the lower carbon arm, and the other to the rheostat, and then from the rheostat to the upper carbon arm, he would have been correct. Now, please do not misunderstand me. The rheostat will work all right when connected on the negative wire, but for several reasons it is better to connect it to the positive. In this opinion I am supported by the inspectors of the New York Department. The information you received simply indicated the method of finding the positive and negative wire, and the positive wire must be connected to the upper carbon and the negative wire to the lower carbon, when using d. c. The rheostat may be connected in on either wire, but should be on the positive; whereas you have it negative. It is quite possible, Omaha, that you get along very well without the technical information you would secure through study of the various electrical problems. It is, however, a certainty that you would be better equipped for your work if you were to study these things, and I would advise you to get a copy of the new hand-book, in which such matters are dealt with. Supposing something happened that you were obliged to leave Omaha, and, for instance, take a position with a traveling show where you would meet all kinds of conditions, be confronted with voltage ranging from 75 to 500. Without technical knowledge you would be lost. With it these conditions would present no difficulty whatever. In the problem, the rheostat is connected in the positive wire, which runs to the top carbon. That is what has confused you. I have not complied with your request and put the letter in the waste basket for the very simple reason that the pointing out of your mistake will be of benefit to others who may possibly be making a similar error. Do not fear to comment on things merely because you cannot express yourself in electrical terms. If you make your meaning clear to me, I will do the rest, and supply the necessary technical terms.

Resistance Problem.

In nearly all of the replies to the resistance problem, a very large number of which have been received within the past few days, the brothers have worked it out by using reciprocals. This is correct, but is unnecessary. As I pointed out in replying to the problem, it is only necessary to multiply the separate resistances of the multiple together and divide that product by the sum of their separate resistances. This really amounts to the same thing as using reciprocals, but it is a much less complicated way. Only a very few of the replies have been strictly correct. There has usually been an error somewhere. Some have failed to consider the resistance of the arc itself. That was by far the most common error. One brother in Brooklyn included the arc resistance, but said the resistance of the arc is supposed to be 2 17/19 ohms. He worked out the rheostat resistance correctly, but the arc resistance is where he fell down. The average drop across the arc may be taken at 48 volts, therefore the correct way to handle the arc resistance would be to subtract 48 from the line voltage. If the amperage is known, the arc resistance can be calculated by dividing the arc voltage by the amperage, thus: Supposing we are pulling 30 amperes on a 50 volt arc, $50 \div 30 = 1\frac{2}{3}$ ohms resistance.

Ground Detector.

Mr. Earl J. Gibson, Los Angeles, Calif., sends in a most excellent explanation of the two lamp ground detector. It arrived, however, after another explanation had been given, and its publication would be largely a repetition. However, we thank Brother Gibson for the trouble he has taken. He also writes:

> I am a member of Local 150 and would like to tell you of the conditions here, but, as another brother has written a long letter, explaining matters fully, I will only say we are all on the job, and if the Los Angeles operators who are not members of Local 150 would join and give us a lift, instead of industriously swinging a hammer, there would soon be a different story to tell.

With the closing sentence of Brother Gibson's letter we heartily concur. My advice to the Los Angeles boys who do not belong to 150 is to get inside, and if things in the union are not according to your liking, do your hammering from the inside instead of the outside. In union, brothers, there is strength. The exhibitor is rapidly organizing, and he is going to organize strongly this time too, I believe. It therefore, behooves the operator to do likewise, if he expects to materially improve his condition.

Light Trouble.

Dawson Bros., owners and managers of The Palace Theater, Maseca, Minn., order a copy of the new hand-book, and contribute the following:

> We are very much interested in the letter from Langdon, N. D., regarding the shutter he has invented, and which he claims will eliminate the flicker. A short time ago we purchased a Simplex machine and the lens which came with the same did not seem to give a clear picture. We disposed of that lens, getting another of different make. Now, as you are aware, the shutter on this machine is set in such manner that it cannot be moved in or out in relation to the lens. The new lens does not project out as close to the old shutter as the old one and we found we had a travel ghost, both up and down, at the same time—evidence of the shutter blade being too narrow. This we overcame by widening the shutter blade, which, in its turn, gave a very bad flicker, as described by Langdon, N. D. We are using a. c. through a Ft. Wayne compensarc, and while we have three contacts, we find we are obliged to use 60 amperes to get a good clear picture. This would be O. K. but for the flicker. The Precision Machine Co., has promised to help us all they can, but we are more than willing to help ourselves if we only knew what to do. We have been advised by the local electrician to install a Mercury Arc Rectifier, thus changing a. c. to d. c., and install a three-wing shutter in place of the two-wing shutter we now have. He says the flicker will then be absent. Would you give us your opinion as to this? We would like to hear directly from the Langdon party as to whether or not the shutter, or its pattern is for sale. When we find a remedy for the above we will be glad to pass it along. Our throw is 80 feet, with a 14½ foot picture. We wish yourself and the department abundant success.

At first glance, the explanation seemed obvious. It looked as though you had changed to a shorter focal length of lens, so that the shutter is now cutting the light after the ray has begun to spread considerably. After I considered your 14½ foot picture and 80 foot throw, however, it did not look so simple. That means about a five inch e. f. lens, and that lens ought not to spread the rays fast enough to produce the double travel ghost on account of added light ray spread. You might (or might not) help matters by adding an equal amount to the other blade of the shutter. Yes, you will need 60 amperes a. c. to project a really good 14½ foot picture. Transforming a. c. into direct current would allow you to use a three-wing shutter, and eliminate the flicker, at least to a very large extent. You have not said what kind of a screen you are using, but if it is one of the semi-reflecting screens, the two-wing shutter is very likely to produce a considerable flicker, regardless of whether you disturb its proportions or not.

"The Unlucky Horseshoe"

(Kinograph Company of America).

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THE second release of the Kinograph Company is a craftsmanlike piece of work. In the first place, it is straight, clean drama. Secondly, it is portrayed by competent actors. Thirdly, it is well executed—the direction is good; the settings are carefully chosen where the views are of outdoors and the interiors are skillfully arranged, always keeping before the eye the fact that the participants are military men. For this is a military story. It is not, to be sure, a tale of war and of war's carnage; it is of the times of peace—and carries out the centuries-old truth that when a soldier is not fighting he is apt to be giving much of his thought to affairs of the heart. The photography is uniformly good.

Einar Zangenberg adapted and produced the drama. Mrs.

Scene from "The Unlucky Horseshoe" (Kinograph).

Edith Buemann-Psilander has the role of Harriet Thompson, the woman at first in love with two men, and discovering after she had pledged her word that really she loved but one; Mr. Zangenberg plays the part of Lieutenant Falck, the man who lost, and Aage Garde that of Lieutenant Harder, the faithless friend of Falck. The rule of compulsory military service in Denmark, where the pictures were made, bears evidence in the military carriage of the participants in the drama and in the lavish and tasteful decorations of the quarters of the lieutenants.

Lieutenant Falck is the solicitor to the royal army—that is, the judge advocate. Lieutenant Harder is his friend and companion. Likewise, is he, like Falck, in love with Harriet. Harder forges his friend's name to a note. Falck, on account of friendship, settles the account. Later, at a party given by Harriet, the two men, with Miss Thompson between them, stroll through the spacious grounds and from a balcony rail look out over a charming landscape. Harriet tells the two officers that to the winner of the steeplechase, to be run on the following day, she will give her hand. Later Falck proposes to Harder that they exchange horses, evening up their chances. Harder agrees. Also he instructs his servant to remove a shoe from the horse Falck is to ride.

In the race the animal Falck is riding falls at the last hurdle. Its rider is dragged from under the horse and hurried to the hospital. Harriet, who has, in deep distress, witnessed the accident, goes to see him. The doctors tell her the injured man will be crippled for life. Harder, who has won the race, demands of Harriet that she fulfill her promise. Harriet complies. When Falck, after a stay of three months in the hospital, emerges on crutches, Harriet is Mrs. Harder. When he calls on her she tells him she had to keep her word.

The married life of Harriet is very unhappy. Harder is not only addicted to liquor; he gambles heavily. In a quarrel with his servant the man attempts to strike his superior and is court-martialed. Falck is the judge advocate still. To the court the servant, stricken with remorse as well as animated by a desire for revenge, tells the story of the removed horseshoe. Falck begs the members of the court to let the matter rest. The commander of Harder, however, practically orders him to resign. The offending officer, after a heavy loss at the gaming table, comes home and, in a drunken frenzy, shoots into a portrait of Falck. He suffers a heart attack and expires.

Ten years later Falck and Harriet lean over the same balcony rail where Harriet entered into the compact so disastrous to all. Time has left its marks on the two. Falck kisses Harriet. A new story is begun.

POPE PIUS X AND THE VATICAN (Union Features).

THIS film contains the first photograph ever taken of Pope Pius X by a motion camera—the first for public purposes, at any rate. The fact that the rights for the entire United States have already been disposed of is sufficient indication of the public interest in this picture. Three thousand feet of film have been condensed into a single reel. Of the views of the Twenty-first International Eucharistic Congress at Montreal, 1,500 feet were cut to 400, leaving 600 feet for pictues of the Vatican and of Pope Pius X.

The views of the procession in Montreal and of the various related ceremonies are notable for their unusually good camera work and photography. There are several scenes of the Blessed Sacrament procession—of the priests and dignitaries of the church and of the many societies with their banners. Views are shown of the papal legate, Cardinal Vannutelli, receiving the delegations; of the children, all in white and marshaled by black-robed sisters, on their way to the reception of the papal legate, and of Cardinal Vannutelli addressing cheering throngs of people.

The pictures taken in the Eternal City are introduced by a front view of St. Peter's. Succeeding this is a view of the terrace of St. Peter's, showing the great figures that adorn it. One striking scene is of the view from the terrace of the great plaza and of the monument in the center. Also there are pictures of a pontifical gendarme; of a Swiss guard, carrying his long halberd, a relic of earlier centuries; the gardens of the Vatican, with the great building in the background, the foreground dotted with luxuriant trees, indicative of the mild climate; of the replica of the Basilica of Lourdes; of the Court of Pigna, upon which open the windows of the Pope's rooms; of the enormous pine cone originally made for the Chateau of St. Ange, and of the Casino of Paul IV.

The final views are of Pope Pius X stepping with brisk walk through the gardens. He is accompanied by a papal dignitary, followed at a distance of several yards by the papal chamberlain. A Swiss guard keeps pace with the chief church dignitary on the opposite side of the hedge. The Pope is garbed in white. The film will be of interest to any audience; it will be of especial interest to all Catholics.

NEW ECLAIR ARTIST.

The Eclair Film Company has been most fortunate in securing the services of the well-known French artist, Benjamin Carre, a student of the celebrated painter, Adelur.

M. Carre hails from the Studio Amable, where the principal scenes for the Grand Opera and Comedie Francaise of Paris, and the Century Theater, of New York, were devised and executed. He has also been the designer and artist in all the large cinematograph studios of Paris, arranging such productions as "Robert le Diable," "Christian Martyrs," "The Huguenots," "Death of Mozart," "Chopin," "Thais," and "Belshazzar's Feast," and his advent, therefore, means a valuable acquisition to the already extensive production department of the Eclair, and will thus enable the company to present even greater and more finished productions than have heretofore been put out.

M. Carre arrived on Saturday, the 9th inst., accompanied by Etienne Arnaud, the Eclair head director, who has just returned from a brief visit to Paris.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs.

By George Blaisdell.

DID you go to the Ball? If you did not you are the loser. To be sure, there were people for several times the capacity of the building. It was a real occasion, nevertheless. Eleven o'clock was the earliest hour at which the writer could reach the Palm Garden, and it was in the neighborhood of 4 o'clock when he was dragged—the word is used in cold blood—away. How he envied King Baggot, who without a shade of contrition admitted it was 9:30 when he took off his dress coat!

Of the entertainment the writer saw or heard not a line. The stage variety is here referred to. Undoubtedly it was excellent; the names of the stars are certainly sufficient to guarantee that. But entertainment was everywhere that night. It was on the packed and jammed stairways, in the boxes, in the subsidiary hall, in the side rooms—in fact, all over.

What better than to meet face to face Little Mary, who, if charming on the screen, is difficult adequately to describe when one sees her in the life? Little Mary was a center of a group of admirers all the night. And superb Florence Turner, one of the first of the screen girls to be a popular idol, and who now through straight ability easily holds her old rank; bonnie Ormi Hawley, who came all the way from Philadelphia to join the throng—simple, unaffected, absolutely untheatrical and looking for all the world like a girl just stepped out of a class in boarding school; talented, brainy Gene Gauntier, the around-the-world girl, who has stood before the camera in the swamps of Florida, in the hills of Ireland, in the Garden of Gethsemane and under the shadow of the grave old Sphinx—vivacious and always interesting; Barbara Tennant, the charming girl from the other side of the North River; piquant Pearl White, who radiated camaraderie and good fellowship? But why enumerate? The list is endless.

And the screen boys? They were legion. One of the pleasures of a most pleasurable night was "meeting up" with Jack Clark. There is a fine chap. If there were any of the Screen Club boys missing it must have been because they were out of town. It looked as if a call of the roll would have received a unanimous response.

Just wait for the Screen Club ball! Somehow February seems a long way off.

On the night following the ball there was a good-sized gathering at the Screen Club. The night was notable for the construction—or rather the composition—of the Screen Club March. "Bob" Daly at the piano worked hard. "Billy" Quirk was first assistant. He now has the original and is to have it framed. When completed with the help of many willing aids there was a tryout right there. The result was inspiring. With sixteen (!) trombones boom-booming down Broadway in front of the marching Screen Club on its way to its first annual ball the blase highway ought to take notice.

J. Parker Read, Jr., of the Garden of Allah Film Company, started for Washington three weeks ago to take up some picture matters with government authorities. He was seized with a severe illness while en route, and at Philadelphia was removed to a hospital. As the only means of saving Mr. Read's life, the surgeons decided on an immediate operation. It was a most serious one. Mr. Reed, however, is now out of danger and expects to be away from the hospital in a week or so. It was a serious blow to the young film man from an immediate business standpoint, as he was preparing to put out many pictures, but the doctors tell him he will now be better than ever.

The office of President Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is a marvel of simple elegance. The great desk in the center of the room, the chairs, the couch and the cabinet are all in paneled San Domingo mahogany. The upholstery is in black leather. One of the features of the equipment is the great electrolier, which contains five shaded lamps. The officers of the company take justifiable pride in this room.

Charles T. Kent, the veteran actor so popular in Vitagraph pictures and who also directs many plays, while in Canada recently was taken seriously ill with pneumonia. Although his life was at one time despaired of, he is now at home and his many friends will be glad to hear that he is well on the road to recovery.

Dropped in Sunday evening to see Proprietor Machat in the latest house he has added to his string in Brooklyn. This one is at Gates and Reid avenues. Mr. Machat has just installed a "fotoplayer," 8.9 feet high, 8.10 feet wide and 3.10 feet deep. In the ocean-side storm in "Captain Barnacle, Reformer," there was an excellent opportunity to show the possibilities of sound effects in this ingenious instrument. The operator by her work did much to heighten the stage effects of the director of the picture. The "fotoplayer" is a combination of high grade piano and specially constructed organ. The latter for church and similar scenes in pictures is especially effective. There are nearly forty controls for the player to manipulate. By the way, an unusual occurrence of the evening was the appearance of the same player in two pictures of different make. Ed August was shown as the artist in Biograph's "Sands of Dee," and he also had the lead in Lubin's "His Life."

A letter from Richard V. Spencer, editor of scenarios for Broncho films, says everything out his way is running smoothly. "We are securing bigger and better productions than ever," he says. "We are working on a series of beautiful spectacular Civil War productions, among them being the 'Battle of Gettysburg' and 'Sheridan's Ride.' These ought to be worth seeing There are no better North and South pictures put out than is the product of this company. Mr. Ince is a past master in staging a battle spectacle.

Director Matthews up to the time of his injury in the automobile mishap was giving his special attention to the production of "Snow White." Elsie Albert was assisting him. The little folks Matty and Early and Fay Brierley are more than delighted to portray the parts allotted them. This fairy story is going to be one of the finest Western pictures Matthews has turned out.

Director Thomas Ricketts has joined the new Universal Automobile Club. He has just bought a new car. Among the other members of the club, and who own their own cars, are Frank Montgomery, L. E. Christy, Milton H. Fahrney and Otis Turner.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"DICK'S WIFE" (Eclair).

"Dick's Wife" brings forth Eclair's Big Four—Barbara Tennant, Alec Francis, Julia Stewart and Lamar Johnstone. There isn't a stronger quartette in the photoplay. Given any sort of scenario and the opportunity, it is certain they will bring out a finished production and a most enjoyable one, greatly enhanced by artistic backgrounds, so noticeable in recent Eclair pictures. As for the story, what would you do if, on returning from a six months' trip abroad, you discovered that in order to save a fortune you had to be married within three days? Look up some of your old sweethearts and try to get one of them to marry you, wouldn't you? Well, that is just what Dick Graham did in this Eclair picture, but, unfortunately, he found that all his old sweethearts were married and that their husbands objected to being shoved to one side.

Scene from "Dick's Wife" (Eclair).

As a last resort, he advertised, and, as luck would have it, his "ad" was read by pretty Grace Lenox, whose mother (Julia Stewart) was very ill; in fact, so ill that the doctor had said that only a change of climate would save her life. Dick's "ad" offered five hundred dollars to any young lady who would marry him, with the further stipulation that they separate immediately after the wedding ceremony.

Grace, in desperation, answered this "ad" under the assumed name of Mary Smith, and in due time the marriage took place. She got the five hundred dollars, was enabled to take her mother away and Dick saved his fortune.

At their wedding, however, Grace wore a heavy veil and Dick had a six months' growth of hair on his face, so that when they met some time afterward they failed to recognize eich other, and it was not until they had fallen in love and were in despair over the fact that they were married that they discovered they were married to each other.

How did they make this discovery? Why, it was very simple. The ring used at the marriage had been Dick's mother's, and when Grace lost it Dick found it, and by the inscription in it he understood.

"A SOLDIER'S FURLOUGH" (Lubin).

Romaine Fielding, who is directing the Lubin plant in Arizona, has just completed one of his favorite type of pictures which he calls "A Soldier's Furlough." Private Robert Adair gets a ten days' furlough to visit his sick young brother Tom in care of Reco, an old friend. The same day Reco is accosted by a squaw-man who wants money, which is refused. The squaw-man gets the assistance of two Indians to rob the home. He tries to get the Indians to shoot Tom and Reco, but they refuse, whereupon the squaw-man shoots and kills Tom. Reco finds Robert before he gets back to the fort, and he returns and tracks the squaw-man. After a fearful fight on the side of a mountain, Robert chokes the assassin to death and then being half insane with grief carries the body to the fort and confesses the deed to his commanding officer. The picture is pregnant with the Indian atmosphere and the types true to the wild Southwest.

THE LIFE OF ST. PATRICK (Historic Photoplay Co.).

The Life of St. Patrick offered great opportunities to a film producer. There was the wonderful Irish landscape to begin with. The producers of this film have availed themselves to the utmost of the advantages, which a correct portrayal of these scenes placed in their power. The views of The Giant's Causeway, The Seven Churches and the Lakes of Killarney shown in the course of these four reels deserve unstinted praise. The producers do not claim any artistic finish in the acting of their characters. They chose a number of Irish peasants without any artistic training, but full of the natural talents for pantomime, which is the heritage of every son and daughter of Erin. While we may miss the fine finish of other productions, there is a decided and charming novelty in the use of this unlettered, but not ungifted peasantry. In the main the essential facts of the life of Ireland's great patron saint have been filmed with a due regard for history. There is at least a good historical background, if not absolute historical accuracy. In all cinematographic productions dealing with history we cannot expect unfailing historical accuracy; if the producer succeeds in creating what be called a historical atmosphere he has satisfied all reasonable demands. In this respect the historic moving picture is much like the historic novel. We are satisfied with probabilities and expect nothing more. Some of the work, which we understand was done under some difficulties, shows traces of crudeness and here and there the standard is not as high as in some other historic portrayals, which could be named. It would be unfair to compare this first work of the company with the pictures made by companies that have been in the business for ten years or more. The choice of the subject alone entitles the maker to some consideration and encouragement. Such a picture means a step in the right direction. This subject is in four parts.

"SHENANDOAH" COPYRIGHTED.

The Kalem Company Advises Picture Manufacturers That It Has the Sole Right to the Howard Play.

Following the announcement of the Atlas Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis, that they intended to make a motion picture entitled, "Shenandoah," the Kalem Company has through its attorneys addressed the following communication to that company and request the publication of the same as notice to all other picture manufacturers that it owns the sole rights to make pictures of Bronson Howard's famous play, "Shenandoah."

Atlas Manufacturing Company,
414 Century Bldg.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sirs—We are advised that you have announced your intention of giving a motion picture exhibition of "Shenandoah," under the said title. As attorneys for the Kalem Company, we beg to notify you that they own, by purchase from Mrs. Alice M. Howard, widow and executrix of the late Bronson Howard, the exclusive motion picture rights of the play "Shenandoah," written by Bronson Howard, for the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

We beg further to notify you that the said play has been duly copyrighted, and that if you undertake to give any performance or exhibition, by means of motion pictures, of the said play "Shenandoah," or of any play under the said title, it will be an infringement of the rights of the Kalem Company, which they will protect under Section 25 of the "Act to Amend and Consolidate the Laws Respecting Copyrights," approved March 4, 1909, as amended August 24, 1912, and also under Section 28 of the said Act.

We give you this direct notice, in order that you may not claim that you were not aware that you were infringing a copyrighted work, or that such infringement could not have been reasonably foreseen; and in any suit, action or prosecution, we shall use this letter as evidence of express notice.

Very respectfully yours,
(Signed) DITTENHOEFER, GERBER & JAMES,
Attorneys for Kalem Company.

INTERNATIONAL HAS BIG PROGRAM.

A new factor in the feature game to be reckoned with, is the International Feature Film Company, which has been quietly opening exchanges all over the United States, until at the present time it has over twenty established exchanges throughout the United States, and two branches in the Old World—one in London and the other in Germany. The International is different from other feature manufacturers, in that it will not sell its features to any individuals or exchanges. Its features will be handled only through its own exchanges.

Up to the present time each office has seven three-reel features, viz: "Kid McCoy," "Black Sheep's Wool," "The Bohemian Girl," "The Vagabond," "Memory's Tragic Leap," "Life's Gamble" and "The Moth and the Flame." A three-reel feature every two weeks is the present policy, with the intention of changing to one every week.

Knowing the value of a "Front" the International Company has gone in extensively for posters, and each of their features are advertised by artistic 1, 3 and 6 sheet 5 color lithographs depicting the most interesting scenes of the productions. In addition to this there are profusely illustrated descriptive booklets, enlarged photos and artistic frames.

Offices are still being established in other parts of the United States, and before long the Company will have 40 exchanges.

HALLBERG'S NEW RECTIFIER-ECONOMIZER.

Recognizing the necessity of a rectifier for the control of projector arc lamps, that while giving the required light would do away with the bad features of mercury transformers. Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," has for the past two years been experimenting with his rectifier-economizer. He now announces that the same is perfected and he is prepared to deliver the same to change alternating single phase current to direct current at the arc, and that his rectifier-economizer is adjustable to deliver from 30 to 60 ampere direct current to arc. It gives a brilliant white, flat field—just what is wanted by the moving picture man. Has no mercury bulbs to break or burn out, no movable parts, no relays or tripping coils, and is practically indestructible. The device must be seen to be appreciated, and Mr. Hallberg will be glad to demonstrate his rectifier-economizer to interested parties at his office.

MISS MILLIE BRIGHT, ECLAIR.

Both by stage and by proper name the subject of this sketch is Millie Bright. She was a much-sought, always-engaged young woman with those Broadway shows that demand much prettiness and lots of chic. She is a very level-headed person. Adulation, which accrues to all those fit to adorn the Great White Way, did not feaze her, for she has always lived within whisper-hearing of all that happens on Long Acre Square. She has lived at home with real old-fashioned parents, who, though given to the strict and true, were not narrow. Yet they never quite altogether indorsed the idea of their little girl working far into the night. They tried to dissuade her ladyship, but she wanted to do what her talent best suited her for.

One day the desire for a particular gown brought her face to face with the need of a greater income. She had grown out of the habit of requesting aid at home, when it came to the matter of dollars. She thought of posing for the pictures on days when there were no matinees. She applied, and because her ability bubbled out all over, she was accepted. In perfect elation she hastened to tell her tale at home—told them, too, that she had been offered a stock engagement in the photoplay, with Eclair. Then there came the solution of her parents' objection to stage life. Here was the chance to have their little girl at home with them during the hours they felt were for rest. And she had her Sundays, too! There would be no more road tours—no more one-night stands with their physical hazards to health.

Their little girl had talent—they were willing she should realize upon it. The photoplay offered everything that fitted to their ideas. It meant daylight hours—Sundays—and always at home.

A BUSY GERMAN FIRM.

One of the leading film exchanges in the German empire is that of George Kleinke, in Berlin. His establishment, which is located at No. 225 Friedrichs Strasse, is the mecca of all the moving picture men in the German city. The firm of George Kleinke deals in films and supplies of all kinds. A very fine and complete catalog has been compiled and is printed in different languages. It may be had absolutely free of charge for the asking. It would take up many pages to enumerate all the supplies and films on hand, suffice it to say, that here may be found the most modern improvements. Exhibitors who are anxious to improve their show will find valuable information in the catalog, which lists the most recent inventions in supplies and machines. The firm of Kleinke is in a position to fit out the most pretentious electric theater in the world and do it at a moment's notice. Send for their catalog, it is sure to help you. Prices are extremely moderate.

POWERS CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6A IN THE SCHOOLS.

Through the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, Power's Cameragraphs No. 6A have been installed in the following institutions: State Reformatory, St. Cloud, Minn.; School for the Deaf, Faribault, Minn.; School for Feeble-Minded Children, Faribault, Minn.

PARK THEATER, SCHENECTADY, N. Y., SOON TO OPEN.

J. H. Hallberg reports that Mr. D. Bergen and Mr. M. Shafer, forming the Park Theater Company of Schenectady, N. Y., will shortly open their new Park Theater. They have purchased from him a complete equipment, consisting of Powers No. 6A, Hallberg A. C. Economizer, 348 steel frame opera chairs and full line of supplies.

SOME UNIVERSAL COMMUNICATIONS.

The facts as we get them on the automobile mishap are as follows: Director Matthews and some of the actors tried to pass a wagon at a bad turn in the road and tipped over a small embankment. The bank and a barbed wired fence was all that prevented fatalities. Director Matthews broke two ribs and was imprisoned under the car for some time. Lee Moran of the Nestor Company, broke his collarbone and little Matty and Miss Elsie Albert suffered from wounds in the head. Most of the company returned to work.

At the request of a majority of the exchanges throughout the country the Universal Film Company has decided to change the order of the appearance of the Bisons. Beginning with the releases of the week of December 3, the Two-Reel Bison will be released on Tuesday, and the one-reel will be released on Saturday. Thus, the release of Tuesday, December 3, will be "Big Rock's Last Stand," two reels, and one of the best Indian Western pictures that has ever been produced anywhere. On Saturday the Bison release will be the one-reel subject, "The Rights of a Savage," an Indian play with a punch.

Beginning with Thursday, December 13, the Frontier brand of pictures will form part of the Universal program. These are, as the name indicated, Western pictures which are so much in demand at the present time. The photography is perfect, and the scenery is something different. The first release will be "The Goat Girl of Bear Canon."

The Milano release of December 7, will be one of the best Milano films we have ever released. "Diamond Cut Diamond," a thrilling two-reel detective drama. It is novel and sensational, and one that the exhibitor can bill big.

Aubrey Kennedy is making a hit around the regions of Los Angeles with his big blue motor car. Aubrey is about as busy as a one-armed paper hanger, papering a wall while he is suffering from the hives. Joe Brandt says so, anyway. Maybe he knows.

NEWMAN OUTFITS THE WELLS CIRCUIT.

The Newman Mfg. Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and 101-103 Fourth Avenue, New York City, have contracted to furnish all of Jake Wells' circuit of theaters with all their brasswork, which contract represents quite a tidy sum. Business is so very good with this firm, who are the largest manufacturers of this kind of goods, making a specialty of brass goods of every description, such as brass poster and photo frames, brass push plates, brass rails, and brass program signs, that they are of necessity compelled to operate their plant till 9 p. m. daily. Their New York plant, in charge of Messrs. S. & E. C. Newman, at 101-103 Fourth Avenue, has lined up quite a number of theaters during the past month in the Eastern and New England States. This firm furnished all brass rail work and all brass lobby display frames and easels for the New Colonial Theater in Dayton, Ohio, one of the prettiest theaters in the country. The Newman Mfg. Company were selected to do this work on account of the high class of work they turn out and the excellent reputation they bear, having been established since 1882, thirty years.

MOVE INTO LARGER QUARTERS.

The New York Film Company, which handles the American rights of "The Miracle" as produced by the Continental Art Film Co., of Germany, has removed from its old quarters in No. 12 Union Square and is now occupying Rooms 1107 and 1108 in the Exchange Building, 145 W. 45th St. The growth of its business has necessitated this change. Demands for "The Miracle" continue to pour in from all parts of the country.

STATE RIGHTS ON PETROSINO PICTURE.

Warner's Features have secured the rights for Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois on the Feature Photoplay Company's production, "The Adventures of Lieutenant Petrosino." Ohio bookings will be handled from their Cleveland branch, in Indiana and Kentucky from the Indianapolis office and in Illinois from the Chicago office.

POWERS WESTERN PLAYERS.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND NOTES.

BOSTON'S Board of Street Commissioners, which already has supervision over so many of the public activities of municipal life, will soon have another duty to perform, in connection with the licensing and supervision of the rapidly growing number of moving picture houses in the city of Boston. In accordance with the terms of the new regulations, made by the detective and fire inspection department of the district police, photoplay houses in Boston will be brought under the scope of the acts relating to the keeping, storing, manufacture and sale of explosives and inflammable compounds on December 5. On and after that date all central supply houses and exchanges which carry more than eight reels of film will be obliged to apply to the Board of Street Commissioners for the license for the building in which the films are kept. This license must be approved by the Mayor, and upon its issuance, and the payment of the statutory fee of $1, is taken to the office of the district police at the State House, for a permit to be issued by the district police for the keeping of the films. This notice is official, and should be carefully digested by those affected by it.

The following will be read with much interest by exhibitors who use the "Country Store" to promote trade: Because of police intervention, it is probable that residents of Mattapan, Mass., will not get any more necessaries of life for nothing (plus an admission ticket to the Mattapan Theater, operated by Messrs. Myron Hirsch and Mark Damm. It seems that the police claim that the country store idea is merely another way of promoting a lottery, and accordingly fined the proprietors $25 each, and held them in $200 bail for the Superior Court on appeal. It is a most interesting case, and should the exhibitors lose their case on the appeal, many Massachusetts exhibitors may have to find other methods of pushing business than the giving away of eatables on certain evenings.

Readers of these columns have been advised of the different developments with regard to the million-dollar theater scheduled for Tremont Row, Boston. For many months the deal was held up, due to the persistent way in which one of the tenants held out for a big bonus for his lease. The writer has it on authority that is positively reliable, that the big house is now assured, and that the last lease has been secured by the promoters. The price paid to the restaurant-keeper, who held out for the fat bonus, was between ten and eleven thousand dollars. A similar amount was paid to the man who held the blanket lease over a portion of the property now owned by the promoters. On January 1, 1913, work will be rushed, as all tenants will be out by that time. About one year is the time the theater will require for completion. Mr. Nathan Gordon, Frank Howard and several others "floated" this deal.

The S. Z. Poli Theater, Worcester, Mass., will not continue to offer stock company attractions, but will return to its former policy of vaudeville and pictures. This gives Mr. Poli two theaters in Worcester, both of which are playing on a similar policy, and, of course, in competition to one another.

The Empire Theater, Rockland, Me., has a mighty good five-piece orchestra, in addition to the big shows of Independent pictures it offers. The result is that the Empire does a big business from Monday to Saturday.

Mr. Geoffrey L. Whalen, the well-known New England dramatic lecturer, was sent from the Olympia Theater, Lynn, Mass., to the Boston Olympia, to lecture on the Bernhardt reels of "Queen Elizabeth."

Mr. H. I. Dillenback, who has retired as manager of the Nelson Theater, Springfield, Mass., since that house was taken over by William Fox, was presented by the employees of the Nelson with a gold watch and a Knight Templar's watch charm. Mr. Dillenback was a favorite with all who knew him.

Mrs. A. J. Pickett, an employee of the Lawrence, Mass., Opera House, was run over and killed by an automobile on November 5.

The Premier Theater, Lowell, Mass., reports that business is not all it should be—because the seating capacity of 600 is not large enough to accommodate the crowds. On this account, extensive alterations and improvements are now under way. A seating capacity of 1,000 is scheduled.

The Boylen Theatre, Taunton, Mass., is nearly ready to open, and the final work is being rushed to the limit.

Manager Fred Shaw, of the Alhambra Theater, Lowell, Mass., has decided to use Universal films, which seem to please his patrons. Mr. Fred Shaw has just taken over the management of the Alhambra and intends to make many improvements and alterations before very long.

Mr. John M. Casey of the Mayor's office, Boston, states that he is more than glad to be rid of the job of supervising and licensing local picture houses, as is related above. Mr. Casey has always been very fair and square in all his dealings and it is safe to say that the trade is hoping that they are to receive similar treatment under the new law.

The Star Theater is soon to be on the job at Lawrence, Mass., and it is located at Broadway and Holly Streets.

The Gem Theater, Bangor, Me., is doing very well since its recent opening, and Proprietor P. J. Powers is more than satisfied with the outlook.

Mr. J. Philip Lappin gave out an interview recently at Worcester, Mass., in which he stated that it was his opinion that the intricate points of football will soon be taught by aid of moving pictures. Moving pictures will be taken of all the important football games and then exhibited for the players' benefit. In this way each man will review his plays, good, bad and indifferent, and will be in a position to more readily strengthen and generally improve his work.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

THE Central Film Service Company has added two Great Northern features to its program, according to a recent announcement by A. F. Mayer. The first of these to appear on the Central's program was shown at the Columbia Theater recently. The name of the picture was "The Call of a Woman." It was well received.

B. S. Schrader, manager of the Central Film Exchange, with headquarters in Indianapolis, has been taken ill with diphtheria, and Charles Olson, secretary-treasurer of the company, is in charge, pending Mr. Schrader's recovery.

The Child Welfare Exhibit, which was held at the Armory in Louisville recently, was featured by a moving picture show, operated by the Central Film Service Company. Fifteen reels of film were shown during the week, the majority being scenic and educational pictures. W. H. Lippold, who is connected with the Young Men's Christian Association, had charge of the Child Welfare Exhibit, and it was at his instance that the moving pictures were employed.

Michael Switow, who was contemplating the erection of a big moving picture house in Indianapolis, Ind., has decided to devote all of his attention to his interests in Louisville and vicinity. The moving picture magnate found that the Indianapolis venture would usurp too much of his personal attention, and therefore will not invade the new field. In lieu of erecting the Indianapolis house, however, Mr. Switow is having plans made for the razing of the Grand Theater in New Albany, and will spend about $20,000 in putting up an altogether new theater, with a seating capacity of 1,200. Work will begin early in 1913, according to present plans.

The Advance Film Manufacturing Company has exhibited in Franklin, Ind., the moving picture recently made in that town. Films showing the main points of interest in Franklin were shown, as well as others giving views of the Indiana State Guards on the march. The Advance is now making pictures of the sights of New Albany, Ind., and will shortly exhibit them in photo-houses of that city.

Col. A. C. Steuver, of St. Louis, is having some trouble in completing plans for the opening of the Hopkins Theater, and the date on which that Market Street house will be opened to the public is problematical. Col. Steuver will be unable to secure first-run pictures, the Louisville Photoplay Association having taken a hand in the matter and protested against the manufacturers and film exchanges giving preference to the St. Louis magnate. It is said that the Sullivan-Considine vaudeville folk also are opposed to Col. Steuver, and he will probably use Pantages vaudeville in his Louisville house. Harry Bilger, who has managed Fontaine Ferry during the past couple of years for Col. Steuver, also will have charge of the Hopkins Theater, it is understood.

Alf V. Oldham, of Louisville, is now showing still pictures of Mammoth Cave, on which he has been given exclusive photographic rights, and will in the near future make an effort to incorporate the features of the Kentucky wonder in animated pictures. The lighting arrangements for the cave are now being made, this phase of the work presenting almost insuperable obstacles.

R. L. Brown, of Big Stone Gap, Va., and his son, Otto Brown, of Middlesboro, Ky., have purchased the Manring Theater, of Middlesboro, and will operate it in conjunction with the Amuzu, which they have controlled for some time. The change has already gone into effect, Hess & Dugan, the former owners, having retired from the moving picture field. The new owners of the Manring recently opened a new moving picture house at Corbin, Ky., and are planning the erection of others in the western section of the state.

Mrs. B. C. Boyd, one of the most talented pianists of Central City, Ky., has joined the musical staff of the Empress Theater, the new house of the Consolidated Theaters Company, in that city. The Empress, which was only recently opened, is in an ideal location, adjoining the First National Bank. T. W. Murphy is the manager of the Empress.

Exhibitors of Nashville, Tenn., have banded together for the purpose of exploiting moving pictures through the columns of the daily newspapers of that city. The first attempt in this line was a long reading notice of "The Odyssey." The legend on which the film was based was explained, the story occupying about half a column in the Nashville Tennessean. The Nashville exhibitors will, it is said, continue to boost moving pictures in this manner, exploiting no single theater, however. The reading notices, while costly, will prove a good advertising plan in the end, it is believed.

The Majestic Company has been incorporated at South Bend, Ind., with a capital stock of $15,000. George W. Sands, J. Elmer Peak and William P. Furery are interested in the new venture, which consists of the erection of a new moving picture theater.

The Lyric Theater Amusement Company is the style of a new corporation in Evansville, Ind. The company is capitalized at $2,000, and will conduct an animated picture theater. The incorporators include Atwel Haynes, E. S. Musgrave and A. Scott Haynes. A building has been leased and will be remodeled at once for the new purpose.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

INDIANAPOLIS.

JUDGE Charles Remster of the Marion County Circuit Court has held valid the ordinance forbidding a child under fourteen years of age attending a motion picture, burlesque or vaudeville theater unless accompanied by a parent or guardian or person over twenty-one years of age having the written consent of a parent or guardian. The decision was based on a test case in which John M. Rhodes, treasurer of Indianapolis Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was arrested. Mr. Rhodes was fined $5 and costs, amounting in all to $15.

D. P. Roberts has dropped his appeal to the Marion County Circuit Court of the case in which he was fined in police court for presenting vaudeville attractions in a motion picture theater without a regular theatrical license. In doing so, he decided to accept the decision of the police court that vaudeville attractions may not be presented without a regular theatrical license and that such license cannot be issued unless the building in which the performance is to be given complies in every respect with the theatrical building code. This makes it practically impossible for the ordinary motion picture theater to give vaudeville, because a theater must have exits on at least two thoroughfares.

The opening of the new Lyric in North Illinois street recently was an auspicious occasion. Mayor Samuel Lewis Shank delivered a short address at the beginning of the opening performance in which he congratulated the owners, Charles Olson and H. B. Barton for their enterprise. The new theater has a seating capacity of fourteen hundred, and the mural decorations and draperies, as well as other appointments, are of the highest order. The new theater is giving motion pictures and vaudeville attractions.

Local motion picture theater proprietors have rejected the proposition made by a tobacco company for the redemption of cigarette coupons presented to them for admission into picture theaters.

Motion picture theatres will be conducted at Evansville by the Lyric Theater Amusement Company, which has been organized and incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $2,000. Those interested in the company are E. S. Musgrove, A. E. Haynes and Alice Haynes.

J. T. Reinicke has let a contract for a motion picture theater to be erected at Virginia avenue and Stephens street in this city. This will be a one story brick structure, 59 by 110 feet and will have steam heat and all modern conveniences. The theater will have a seating capacity of about eight hundred. When completed, the theatre will be leased by the Continental Amusement Co. which has just been organized and incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $2,000. Those interested in the company are: E. S. Musgrove, A. S. Haynes and Alice Haynes.

J. T. Reinicke has let a contract for a motion picture theater to be erected at Virginia Avenue and Stephens Street in this city. This will be a one-story brick structure, 59 x 110 feet and will have steam heat and all modern conveniences. The theater will be leased by the Continental Amusement Company, which has just been organized and incorporated with a capitalization of $10,000. Those interested in the company are: Reinhold A. Miller, Albert F. Eiteljorg and Wilber W. Harrison.

George W. Sands, J. Elmer Peak and William P. Furey have organized the Majestic Company at South Bend, to conduct a motion picture and vaudeville theater. The company has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $15,000.

D. P. Roberts has leased the lower floor of the building at 430 and 432 Massachusetts Avenue, which is being remodeled for a motion picture theater. The new theater will have a seating capacity of about four hundred.

CLARENCE L. CUMMINS.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

DICK Dickson, who has been leader in the orchestra at the Bijou Theater in Decatur, Illinois, has accepted a similar position at the Majestic theatre in Bloomington, Illinois.

Evangelist, G. K. Little of Freeport, Illinois has used moving pictures at a rival meeting at Decatur, Illinois.

A moving picture theatre will be opened in the building of Galesburg, Illinois, now occupied by the New York store.

George Holcomb of Streator, Illinois, has leased the Plumb opera house in that city for the last four days of each week and will give vaudeville shows, including two reels of pictures. He was foreman of the Gayety in Ottawa.

Upon the recommendation of the fire chief and the city engineer, Dreamland, a moving picture theatre on Main, between Fifth and Sixth Streets, Dubusque, Iowa, was ordered closed by the city council November 7, this action being taken after an investigation which found the place in an unsafe condition. Following repairs the place will be reopened.

C. T. Metcalf and H. M. Kincaid have purchased the opera house at Greenfield, Ill.

G. H. Reed has been appointed manager of the Casino theatre at Flora, Ill., owned by H. R. Slocum. The house will furnish licensed pictures with a two or three-reel special once a week.

L. A. Miller of Jerseyville, Ill., has leased the opera house at Waverly, Ill.

The Park Amusement Company of St. Louis, Mo. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000 to own and operate moving picture shows. The incorporators are George W. Peter, I. W. Shantz, George W. Wadlow Rodney, Peter and Mary Wildberger.

The Casino theatre, Springfield, Ill. has installed a five-piece orchestra.

Elmer Ewing has resigned his position at the Star Photoplay theatre in Lincoln, Ill. to accept a similar position at the Empire in the same city.

The Bijou theatre at Waukegan, Ill., which has been a picture house has installed a stock company but will continue with one reel of pictures.

The Lyric Theatre Amusement Company of Evansville, Ind. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,000 to operate theatres, etc. The incorporators are A. S. Hayes, A. Haynes and E. S. Musgrave.

W. W. Watts, owner of the Vaudette theatre, Springfield, Ill. is mourning the losss of a Hudson automobile which was destroyed when fire swept the Capitol garage in that city November 15.

F. H. MADISON.

ST. LOUIS.

DELEGATE Nathan H. Hall of the St. Louis House of Delegates will shortly introduce a bill providing for a board of censorship for local vaudeville and motion picture houses to pass upon moving pictures and vaudeville acts before the said vaudeville acts or pictures can be presented on local stages. The bill will provide for three censors, one to be elected from the House of Delegates, one from the City Council and the third, the Chairman, to be appointed by the Mayor. The censors will visit the vaudeville and picture houses and pass upon the acts and pictures before they are presented to the public. It is purposed to install offices of the board either in the City Hall or the new Municipal Courts Building. The fact that films have been passed upon favorably by decisions of the National Board of Moving Picture Censorship will have no bearing upon their standing as far as St. Louis is concerned if the bill passes the house. According to Delegate Hall, father of the bill, films now passed upon favorably by the National Board of Censorship could not be allowed under the intended new board of censorship, as he says there are films now being shown in St. Louis bearing the approval of the National Board of Censorship which are not fit to be shown.

The bill is said to meet with the approval of the Mayor. R. H. Kreism, an owner of moving pictre houses, consulted regarding the purposed bill, did not seem to take the matter very seriously as it was the consensus of opinion that this bill, like a good many others, would fail to pass, as with the present very efficient National Board of Censorship very few if any films are allowed to get through which would in any manner reflect upon the welfare of the industry, as it was with that very purpose the National Board of Censorship was established.

E. J. FEGAN.

OREGON.

THE Peoples' Amusement Company has inaugurated a plan to be courteous to its employees by entertaining them two Mondays of each month with a banquet. Prizes will be given for the best suggestions offered to the management by any manager of the company's theaters or ushers that will serve toward the betterment of the system that is used at the present time. This will mean a feasting of some 200 employees every two weeks.

The Board of Directors have approved of the plans for the improving of the Star Theater in Portland, which will begin in December. The total amount to be expended is $25,000.

Joe Wertheimer has been made special representative of the Oregon Film Supply Company, to secure the business of the state of Washington. The Film Supply Company of Oregon has secured the sole franchise for the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho of both the Film Supply and the Mutual programs.

Leo Conlin has been appointed manager of the Sunnyside Theater, Frank Gunn at the Crystal, and Arthur Elwell at the Tivoli. J. S. Nelson has been appointed house manager of the new Arcade Theater. The Peoples' Amusement has taken great pains in getting such good managers.

The Star Theater in Portland has been booked with special features and has announced their coming up to February.

The public of the city of Portland has been notified of a new policy to be shortly inaugurated by the People's Amusement Company that will be carried out in all their suburban theaters. Young and active management has devised the plan of distinguishing every night with some special form of entertainment or attraction of local character that will induce the public to make the theater the center of life and action in that part of the locality. There will be an amateur night, a souvenir night, a prize night, a musical night and a feature night.

E. M. WEINBAUM.

GRAND RAPIDS.

THE Grand Rapids Anti-Tuberculosis Society has sent out many announcements regarding the film "A Curable Disease," to be shown at the Idle Hour this week. Much interest in the film is manifested and the co-operation of the best class of citizens in forwarding the interests of this work is helpful in the extreme.

The Michigan National Guard pictures will be shown in the near future. Arrangements are being made to exhibit the pictures taken at the last encampment at Ludington. They will show the biggest encampment Michigan has ever had. Major M. J. Phillips of Owosso, will lecture the films, which will cover every detail of camp life, target practice and other interesting features.

Mr. Canine, of the Anti-Trust Film Exchange's local office, states the business in the two suburban theaters here is fine, and the various western Michigan houses booked by the office are all reporting good business. The Anti-Trust service is now covering a very extensive territory in splendid shape.

The Broncho and Keystone films shown so far at the Appolo have all received the most favorable sort of comment. Manager Nichols is getting the brand new ones as soon as they are ready and his advertising backs up the service in nice shape.

"Romance of the Rails" was shown recently at the Ideal and received good comment. Edison railroad stories are not frequent, but always welcome.

Rumors of a new theater on an elaborate scale are rife, but cannot be confirmed at this time. Harry Sommers & Co., of the Powers are said to be behind the deal.

Lyman Howes picture which made good here this season at the Powers, are scheduled to come back. They will be assured a good crowd, for Howe has always pleased folks here.

Mr. Clayton, the pleasing baritone at the Original, is making a deserved hit. He uses many of the old-time ballads and folks seem to like them.

H. K. HARRIS.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

JACOB MOELKE, who recently purchased the Erickson block in Stoughton, Wis., for a moving picture show, attempted to give Sunday performances, but at the request of a local minister the place was closed.

A moving picture machine and two reels of film were stolen recently from the theater of Mrs. Mary McNamara, 648 Third Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

Let's Be Honest About

"RIP VAN WINKLE"

IN TWO PARTS

From Washington Irving's American Classic

Our Production Is Not the Only Only, But We Claim It Is the Very Best!

It is best in point of story construction—it is incomparably better photography. In selection of backgrounds and settings the difference is overwhelmingly in its favor. It is enacted by the greatest Cinema Artists in the world.

It Is Best Upon Every Count

It is a subject which will always have the most favorable booking possibilities. It hasn't the momentary appeal—it has the eternal —You will always find bookings for it.

Sit down with your business judgment and common sense and figure out what scores of millions have not yet seen this greatest of all American stories. Think of the hundreds of theatres where it may be booked.

"Rip Van Winkle" is being sold at the very lowest figure ever quoted on a genuine feature. Its price is our vital clinching argument. It is the probable reason why you'll buy.

We have cut off our profit that you may make yours, for while profit is desirable to us, we realize that it is essential to you, the buyer.

This feature, like every Union Feature, is perfectly surrounded by advertising material. Three sheets and two ones, slides, heralds, booklets, cuts, photos, lobby display frames—in fact, everything any feature can profitably use.

ASK THE PRICE!

Write and inquire the price—that won't cost nor lose much of your time, and it will bring you an astonishing offer in return.

THE AWAKENING AND BIRTH OF THE UNITED STATES

IN THREE REELS

THE HISTORICAL FILM OF 1912

WHAT can possibly be of more interest to all true Americans than this film which is a living history of our country?

"DREAM OF THE DAYS THAT WERE,
HOPE FOR THE DAYS TO COME,
LAND OF A THOUSAND HILLS,
DEAR LAND OF LIBERTY."

State right buyers, we have received thousands of requests from exhibitors among which are many schools and churches. The demand for this film is there. Will you be the one in your state to fill it and reap the big profits?

We cannot print here all we would like to, so have made up a beautiful fifty-four page illustrated booklet. Send twenty-five cents and get one while they last. An elaborate variety of lithographs, photos, and heralds have been made. Also a 70 page book of Music.

BOOM!!

The explosion that shook the earth for miles around, broke windows in the New York skyscrapers and covered the front pages of the daily papers with across-the-page "screamers," was the STARTLING AND DARING DIP OF DEATH performed by DARE DEVIL LAW for the acknowledged by the press as the most daring "stunt" ever attempted.

Newspapers all over the United States devoted columns describing the "Big Punch" of our three reel feature production

AT THE RISK OF HIS LIFE

Can you imagine the value of such splendid publicity? Remember, every man, woman and child who can read English, German, Yiddish and Italian has read the description of this DEATH DEFYING performance.

The amount of publicity given this film HAS NEVER BEFORE BEEN EQUALLED.

Think of it! A man rising to a height of 1000 feet in a 90 foot balloon, exploding 120 pounds of dynamite and then come shooting through this mass of flame and smoke, hanging on to an 18-foot parachute! Do you wonder at the fact that the exhibitors demand INTERNATIONAL FEATURES, when we pull off thrillers of this kind?

AND THIS IS ONLY ONE OF MANY.

BY THE SEA (Dec. 2).—Harry Harvey, a fisher lad, is in love with Marie Forrest, a shepherdess. One night he proposes and is accepted. Several days before the wedding, Marie and her girl friends are busily at work on the intended bride's simple trousseau. Marie suddenly falls ill. Harry returning from a fishing trip, rushes to Marie's home. He looks through the window of her room and sees her dying form on the bed. He rushes to her side just in time to witness her pathetic death. At his request, she is buried on the rocky shore where she had promised to wed him. After a few weeks, heartbroken and miserable, he falls across her grave. As he lies prostrate over the rocky mound, clinging to her tombstone, the tide creeps over his body and he dies. The heartbroken mother buries him alongside of Marie.

STRUGGLE OF HEARTS (Dec. 3).—John Carnes escaped from prison after serving several years. His wife died while he was in prison. Chance brought him to Rodney Ford, a minister, who helped him. Carnes obtained work on a farm. Ethel Rand, a niece of his employer, paid a visit to the farm. Ethel and Carnes fell in love. His conscience troubled him; he did not know which was the right thing to do—tell her of his past life or keep silent. Then he thought of his benefactor, Ford. He hastened to him for advice. Ford told him to tell. Not until he had seen the photograph of the young lady did the minister realize that it was his fiancee whom Carnes loved, but he remained silent. Ford decided to visit her and learn the truth. His suspense was shortlived, for her actions plainly told him he must renounce her. Accidentally Carnes happens to witness the meeting of his benefactor and Ethel and believing himself an impostor he leaves a message for her and goes away. He had not proceeded far when Ford overtook him, but a struggle between love and honor takes place, before the sacrificing minister succeeded in convincing Carnes that the only hope of making him and the girl he loved happy was for him to return to her. Carnes returned to the girl, who waited for him with outstretched arms.

TWIXT LOVE AND AMBITION (Dec. 5).—Marie Wayne sings one evening in a concert and attracts the attention of a manager, who offers her a position on the stage. Her lover, John Sterne, pleads with her to decline and urges her to marry. Love and ambition struggle desperately. Ambition conquers, and the two take separate paths. Finally the widowed sister of John Sterne dies, leaving her little boy, a child of four or five. For the sake of the boy's health, John buys a little home in the country. Entrusting him to the care of an old Irish woman whom he believes to be reliable, he goes to the city every morning to business, returning in the evening. Meanwhile Marie has scored a triumph in foreign lands, but unable to forget John. At length she returns and rents for the summer a country place bordering upon the same mountain village near which John and the child are living. One day when driving in her motor car she is attracted by a boy who is playing by the roadside. Marie makes the acquaintance of Dan. Marie and John are each entirely ignorant of the proximity of the other, but the climax comes when Dan is rescued from drowning by Marie, who takes him to her home, and sends an anonymous note with her chauffeur to Sterne's home. John springs into the motor car, and unsuspecting is driven to Marie's home. When John enters, Marie is bending over Dan, telling him a fairy tale. At the sight of Marie, he starts violently. Marie springs to her feet. Dan catches sight of his uncle ,and claps his hands for joy. She and John kneel on either side of the lounge, and the two clasp hands across the little form.

LOCKED OUT (Dec. 6).—Mr. Jones having rented some rooms in his house, finds it difficult to collect rent from a young couple named Grim. One night Jones and his wife hear suspicious noises in the Grim apartment, and thinking they are moving, decide to keep an eye on them. He goes to the sidewalk dressed only in his night clothes, when the door slams and he is locked out. Someone passing causes him to hide in a large hamper belonging to the Grim's. The basket is put into a moving wagon, from which it has many rough falls and bumps before being captured and put on the wagon again. Finally it is landed at the new Grim's apartments. In the meantime Mrs. Jones, who has missed her husband from the room, telephones the police and an investigation ensues without avail. Grim and his wife become frightened at the noise in the hamper and takes a few shots at it. When the basket is at last opened, Jones pleads to be sent back home. The basket lands back home at an expense of seventeen dollars and twenty-nine cents expressage. The wife pays the bill and is happy to get back her husband, who is none the worse off for his rough experience.

HIS FATHER'S CHOICE (Dec. 6).—Jack Halsted is in love with Gertrude Terry a very fine but poor girl. When his father, Ravel Halsted, discovers this, he threatens to cut him off without a cent. Jack being dependent on his father, is in a fine predicament and goes to a Mrs. Robbins for advice. Her sympathies are all with Jack, and she asks him to bring the girl. Jack brings Gertrude, and Mrs. Robbins falls in love with her. The young people tell Mrs. Robbins their story and in each other's arms they weep. Then Jack decides that they will both commit suicide, and shows how he will first shoot himself and then Gertrude, and they will lay down in a nice position, and die in each other's arms. Presently the father comes in and staring at Gertrude remembers that he has met her at a society function. Papa Halsted and Mrs. Robbins give each other the wink and the scene ends with "God bless you, my children."

A SOLDIER'S FURLOUGH (Dec. 7).—Private Robert Adair gets a ten days' furlough to visit his mother who is very ill. She dies and we see Robert and Tom, his brother, burying their mother. Robert has to leave his brother and return to camp before his furlough is up, leaving Tom with Roco, an old friend. Roco, while en route to visit Tom, meets Jim, a squaw man, who asks him for money, which Roco refuses. Two of the squaw man's Indian associates come up and he gives them some whiskey and secures their assistance in his determination to rob Roco, but finding two men at the home he tries to coerce the Indians into shooting them both. They refuse, however, even when tempted by liquor, so the squaw man shoots, killing Robert's brother. Roco manages to get away and warns Robert, whom he finds in the village, where he has stopped for food. Robert, when he learns the sad news, forgets about his being a soldier and returns to the home, to find it ransacked and his brother dead. He swears vengeance and after securing the promise of his friends that they will bury his brother, he trails the squaw man, catches up with him on the top of a freight train; they struggle and fall from the train. The squaw man, getting away from him, holds up an auto, attempts to run it, and it goes over a bank. Robert comes up to him and they have a hand-to-hand fight down the side of a mountain, where Robert gets the best of him and chokes him to death. Being out of his mind from his intense mental agony, he puts him on his back and carries him all the way back to camp, where he reports to his commanding officer, telling him the reason why he committed the crime. He is placed under arrest to await his punishment. Thus we leave one who has suffered much.

EDISON.

THE NEW SQUIRE (Dec. 2).—To the great house of the village comes a new squire in the person of an attractive young man who has recently fallen heir to the great estates which Manor House overlooks. Among the tenants is a farmer who has a burly assistant and also a niece whom the assistant intends to marry. On a morning ride the new squire sees the maiden and loses his heart. Unseen by her he follows cautiously until he learns where she lives and half in love of adventure and half in love of her he returns to his house, dons a workman's attire and applies for a place among the harvesters in her uncle's fields.

Of course as the love affair progresses jealousy grows apace in the breast of the rival and when he chances to see a stolen kiss he plans a revenge. Breaking a portion of the harvesting machinery he throws the blame on the new hand and the squire is incontinently thrown from the place. Being a man of determination, he telegraphs his uncle, the bishop, for a special license and taking his canoe goes to get the girl. He succeeds in getting a ladder to her window, but is attacked by his rival, and the girl receives a blow meant for him, which renders her unconscious. Our hero, however, bests his adversary and taking the unconscious girl starts down the river in his canoe, the farmer and the other man in pursuit. To go through the lock means a loss of time and the young man dares to shoot the heir with his precious burden. He thus escapes and puts the girl in charge of his housekeeper. The farmer decides to lay his wrongs before the new squire, where, of course, he finds a most disconcerting surprise awaiting him. Under the circumstances one can imagine that the farmer's opposition to a wedding is shortlived.

A DOLLAR SAVED IS A DOLLAR EARNED (Dec. 3).—A youth of twenty starts his business career with hopes of advancement and increases in salary. He marries the stenographer of the office. Year after year the bookkeeper works in the same monotonous way. Marriage, children, illness, drain the small bank account. At the end of twenty years the former ambitious youth is now a premature, tottering, shriveled old man. A young clerk reproves the older man, whose latent manhood asserts itself. Crushing his pride, he recalls hasty action and offers apologies; but the following Saturday brings the "blue envelope."

Unknown to her husband the wife has saved the small sum of one dollar each week out of his salary. When she learns of her husband's discharge and suspects his discouragement over inability to find employment, she carefully counts her savings of the past years and shows it to him. In his travels while searching for work he sees pictures of farming land for sale and with part of his wealth the happy couple purchase a farm. A year later we see the old office man together with his little family healthy and happy.

THE LATEST ADDITION TO THE U. S. NAVY (Dec. 4).—"I christen thee New York," and a hundred thousand cheers of pride rent the air as she glided o'er the way. When fully equipped the Battleship New York will be a representation of more than six millions of dollars. In dimensions this great engine of war will measure five hundred and seventy-three feet over all, and her beam will be ninety-five feet two and five-eighth inches, with a net tonnage of twenty-seven thousand. She will draw twenty-eight feet six inches of water and move at a speed of twenty-one knots.

An aerial view taken from the crane shows the vessel as it glides from the dry dock. The President and other notable officials were photographed well up to the camera, not overlooking the feminine charm of flower girl and sponsor.

THE WINKING PARSON (Dec. 4).—The Rev. Anthony Gay is appointed to the pulpit of a church at Newtonville. Unfortunately, he suffers from a nervous affliction of the muscles of the right eye, causing an involuntary wink. Upon his arrival in Newtonville he is introduced to his new flock by the deacon, each individual interpreting the wink differently. Some are shocked, others pleased, girls giggle and two old women matrimonially inclined, take him seriously. One, an old spinster, the other a widow, are both under the impression that the parson is making advances to them. They quickly respond to his winks, overwhelm him with attention and become insanely jealous of each other, which nearly results in a hair-pulling match. Finally it gets too hot for the parson, who realizes he is misunderstood all around and there is but one thing to do and do quickly—resign. His "getaway" is discovered by the two females, who pursue him to the depot. He succeeds in eluding them by grasping the platform of the last coach just as the train is leaving the station.

A FOREST FIRE (Dec. 6).—The picture was taken in the Sierra National Forest in California and shows what a wonderful work the United States rangers are doing. We are first shown one of the principal causes of forest fires, that of careless campers failing to extinguish their camp fire. Next we see the lone lookout on top of the mountain peak overlooking the entire forest area. He spots the white haze crawling up over the distant ravine and sends the alarm to the forest headquarters over the 'phone. From headquarters the alarm is sent to the nearest ranger and we see him mounting his horse and starting for the fire. In turn each ranger is notified and all arrive at the burning forest, and then begins a fierce fight against the fire. Not by water, but by rake, hoe, brush and most of all by fire itself. The fire getting beyond control, a general alarm is sent in and help is called from the power house; but the fire continues to resist their endeavors and more help is needed. The heliograph is called into play and a message is sent miles across from one mountain peak to another. As a result farmers are called out who, getting on a high speed truck auto, dash to the burning forest.

We see a settler driven from his home and all his possessions lost in the flames. And when night closes around we see what a strong lesson has been taught to the few merry campers who left their fire burning by the roadside, never thinking of the future nor of the result. We are shown the pathos and the destruction caused by carelessness.

HIS MOTHER'S HOPE (Dec. 7).—Wandering in his childish gambols from the unwatchful eyes of his governess, a little boy mysteriously disappears. Then follows the anguish of parental devotion. Time goes on, lonesome days and weary nights come and go, the mother's anxious outstretched arms day by day fall closer to her side. Whispering hope into her husband's ear she expires.

There is a row in a gypsy camp. A scrawny youth still in his twenties is defending a wretched hag from the brutalities of her husband. For his white act he is turned from the camp, the only home he knows, where he wandered some years before. The hand of fate again marks his course and eventually he becomes the father of a happy home. Happiness and small prosperity are but momentary, for in the wayward flight of time reverses befall him and the merciless fangs of starvation have already begun to gnaw.

In desperation, he enters the home of a wealthy gentleman, seated by the fireside. Hearing a strange noise, he turns and, crouching on the floor in abject fear, is the despicable form of a thief. In a climatic situation, the apparition of his wife appears; the hand of justice is replaced by that of clemency and the intruder is turned free. A strong resemblance in his face, however, causes him to follow. As he does the dawn of hope begins to brighten and in a strong heart scene, the story terminates with the return of the loved to the lost and the gratification of "His Mother's Hope."

WESTERN GIRLS (Dec. 3).—Netty Parker and her sister, Mildred, two brave Western girls, are instrumental in capturing two notorious outlaws in the cleverest of ways. Returning from town early one evening, they discover two bandits who have held up the afternoon stage, laughing over the division of the loot. Dashing back to the ranch house the girls find that the cowboys have not returned, and daringly resolve to capture the bandits themselves. Donning cowboy costumes they ride back to the bandits' rendezvous, approach them unaware, hold them up at gun's point, bind their arms and start them off down the trail with a noose about their necks. Meanwhile the sheriff has been notified of the holdup, and is securing a description of the outlaws from the frightened passengers, when suddenly the girls appear driving the bandits before them. Explanations are made, the girls are warmly congratulated upon their daring bravery, and the sheriff takes the prisoners in charge while the girls start back to the ranch, followed by the cheering cowboys.

ALMOST A MAN (Dec. 4).—At the Spinsters' Rest the old maids gaze anxiously through the gate at each passing man, and sigh as they pass by unheeding. Meanwhile, three jovial tramps discover a newspaper and stating that all spinsters are welcome at Spinsters' Rest. Being in need of food and drink, the tramps plan to gain admittance to the home. Securing some female attire from a trunk in the rear of the theater, the tramps rig themselves up as old maids, gain admittance to Spinsters' Rest, and have the meal of their lives at dinner time. Everything would have passed off serenely if it had not been for the people from the theater, who are searching for the missing clothes with the help of the sheriff. Tracking the tramps to Spinsters' Rest the sheriff enters just as the poor fellows have been found out through one of their number losing his wig in leading a dance. The theater manager identifies the clothes and the sheriff drags the tramps off to the calaboose, while the old maids bemoan the sad fate that again loses them the chance of getting a man.

FOOTBALL DAYS AT CORNELL (Dec. 5).—In this subject, the camera conveys us to the beautiful Cayuga lake and valley at Ithaca, N. Y. Wonderful panoramic views of the valley, taken from Cornell University, are unfolded before us, and then is shown the University campus with its hurrying throngs of students. The football team is next seen at afternoon practice, including tackling, bucking the line and going through various intricate formations. Next we see a football aspirant tried out for a position on the team. He lasts until the entire team make mince-meat of him, then solemnly swears "never again." This, together with views of the students parading to the field, and going through their famous "snake-dance," terminate as interesting a subject on college life as can be imagined.

THE SUPREME TEST (Dec. 6).—Eva and Raymond are sweethearts in school, and their betrothal is sealed with a sun-bonnet kiss. In the years that pass Raymond graduates through college, marries Eva and they enter their beautiful new home, the gift of Raymond's father. A few months later, at a fashionable reception, Raymond meets Lois Whitehall, a siren, who fascinates him. In the days that pass he spends most of his time with Lois, and is coldly indifferent toward his pretty wife. Discovering his infidelity, Eva leaves a note, saying she is returning to her mother on the afternoon train, and starts for the railway station. Meanwhile, Raymond discovers that Lois is merely trifling with him, furiously upbraids her and hurries from the house. Arriving home he is handed Eva's note and a moment later reads in the paper that her train has been wrecked and her suitcase found. Crazed over her evident death, Raymond is about to end his life when Eva enters in time to prevent the suicide. Fortunately she had missed the doomed train. For a moment Raymond thinks her a phantom, then sinks on his knees before her, begs her forgiveness, and the compassion within her heart again restores happiness to the little household.

BONCHO BILLY'S LOVE AFFAIR (Dec. 7).—Winnie Allen, a pretty Western girl, is loved by Dan Wild, whose father owns the Circle C ranch. Broncho Billy, foreman of the Circle C, also loves Winnie and she favors his suit. Knowing this, and to make his way clear, Dan persuades his father to discharge Broncho. Broncho is unable to learn the cause of his dismissal from Wild. Dan now manages to secure Winnie's engagement ring from her room, forges a note in her writing, telling Broncho she is returning the ring, because he has been discharged for dissipation, then pins the note and ring to the door of Broncho's shack. Broncho finds it, and unsuspicious of the trickery employed, leaves the county. Years later young Wild, now a dissipated ruffian, is married to Winnie. Taking her meager earnings, he goes to the town gambling hall, becomes involved in an argument and kills one of the punchers. Broncho Billy, now sheriff, is advised of the shooting and immediately starts out to find Wild. Mortally wounded, Wild staggers back to his shack, and gasps out his story to Winnie, who does everything possible to alleviate his suffering. Tracking Wild to his shack, Broncho enters and recognizes Winnie. Realizing death is upon him, Wild now makes a full confession of the despicable way in which he won Winnie for his wife, secures Broncho's promise to care for her always, and dies.

THE HOBO'S REST CURE (Nov. 27).—Bill Grogan, a happy hobo, having successfully eluded all sorts of allurements to go to work and having discharged himself from several easy jobs after numerous attempts to get painlessly injured, frightens a chauffeur into believing that he had been injured by a baby carriage. Eventually he reaches the limit of his restful ambition by getting a cot in a hospital. This is much to his liking and sufficiently diverting, for he almost founders in eating the delicacies prepared for other patients. His first rude jar comes when the visiting interne orders that he is not to be fed for twenty-four hours. Bill thereupon concludes that life in a hospital is not a snap and the doctor, finding the nature of the hobo, announces he proposes to operate on him. Thereupon Bill's troubles commence to thicken when he is strapped to an iron table and thoroughly renovated with dog soap applied with steel brushes. Eventually he flees from his tormentors, a sadder but a cleaner man.

THE TRIANGLE (Nov. 28).—Young, inexperienced, and impressionable, and following the wishes of others, a good woman unfortunately marries a man that is equally void of honor and principal. Later she awakens to a realization that the man who has really loved her from her girlhood days is, in turn, the man that she loves above all else. She finds out that her husband, hidden behind a mask of so-called social respectability, is in reality a drunkard, a profligate and an associate of thieves. He later becomes a fugitive from justice. True, however, to her marriage vows, she smothers her own shame and is loyal to him until fate removes him from her life. Her faithfulness is eventually rewarded and the first sweetheart comes into his own.

FRIENDS IN SAN ROSARIO (Nov. 29).—Everybody in the world of finance understands the usual disturbance that ensues coincident with the coming of the bank examiner. Banking is a highly developed sort of housekeeping, and under the new federal laws it behooves a banker to be sure that his house is well in order on the day that the examiner calls around to either approve or disapprove of the job.

This comedy describes how one banker was enabled to help his friend, another banker, by detaining the examiner while his friend scraped around and collected enough cash to meet the necessary requirements of law. When the government official arrives at the first bank, the friend across the street is notified by a signal. After the examination is completed, Banker No. 1 detains the examiner with several vivid stories of his early western life. In the meantime, the clerks have carried enough money over to the second bank to carry Banker No. 2 over the impending examination.

RAISING BARLEY IN JAPAN (Nov. 29).—A most interesting perusal of the various methods employed in raising Japanese barley. An excellent educational subject.

THE FIRE COP (Dec. 2).—Andy Brannigan was a good-natured policeman, large of frame, but limited in nerve. He has, however, been very successful in posing as a hero, and deceives all but his wife, who laughs at him when he tells her that he has been awarded a medal for bravery. Eventually he brings this token home in triumph, and she throws it on her red-hot stove and dares him to demonstrate his fireproof bravery in taking it off. He does this with a pair of pincers; but the ribbon is burned away, and he is humiliated. Subsequently he becomes the true hero of a fire in a tenement and saves a number of lives. Having saved four lives, he finally drops from the roof of the flaming building and is caught in the safety-net held by the firemen in the street below. He is rushed off to the hospital, and his wife is informed of the perilous condition of her intrepid husband. She then realizes that he is a braver man than she dreamed of.

THE MANTLE OF RED EVANS (Dec. 3).—May Evans, an orphan girl, is advised by her uncle to leave a lonely ranch where she has been living, come to the settlement and take charge of a hotel. She concludes to take advantage of the offer and immediately demonstrates her fitness for the position, making the hotel one of the most popular in that section. Bob Evans, a young man from the East, who has gone West to pick up his fortune, happens to meet the young woman as she is going to the hotel. This begins an acquaintanceship, which ripens into affection on the part of both, he rescuing her from a very perilous situation, for which she feels duly grateful.

Bob Evans comes into hard luck, needs food and drink. He tries to work his face on the flinty hearted barkeeper, but as that does not work he thinks of a famous gun man named Red Evans and writes his name, passing it to the barkeeper, who immediately gives him all the food and drink he needs. He registers on the hotel book: Bob Evans, still being out of funds and hoping to perpetuate his popularity. When May sees this name she freezes up and orders him out of the house. Another notorious character turns up with the same name, but the terror is minimized when the servy woman declares that it was the name of her dead father. She subsequently forgives Bob and concludes to take his name for life.

WHEN HELEN WAS ELECTED (Dec. 4).—Beacher Summers is very happily married to Helen. Beacher's ambition is political and he succeeds in winning the Progressive party's nomination for Mayor. Helen's aunt, Frances, is a violent advocate of women's rights. She pulls her husband, Uncle Eben, around by the nose. Aunt Frances is disgusted with Helen's contentment with domestic affairs and finally prevails upon her to accept the nomination for mayor on the women's rights ticket. Thus she becomes a rival of her husband in the political field. Poor Helen knows nothing and cares less about politics and her campaign managers lead her into many ridiculous predicaments. Finally Election Day dawns and wanes, and when the ballots have been counted it is discovered that Helen has won the election. This is the last straw for the worn out little woman and she rushes home in an attempt to thrust the office off on her husband. He protests that he cannot receive the gift of office from her, but the dilemma is finally overcome when it is discovered that Helen is not yet of legal age.

A FREIGHT TRAIN DRAMA (Dec. 5).—Bill Mogroity, an ex-railroad employee, rebels at his wife's upbraidings and leaves his humble home to follow the life of a hobo. Mrs. Mogroity and her small daughter, Rosy, left alone, make a pitiful attempt to eke out a living by taking in washing.

Bill's wanderings throw him into the company of other hobos and one day he chances to overhear some of them plotting to wreck and rob the fast express. His tramp life has pretty well disgusted him and when he realizes what his companions are about to do he suddenly resolves to save the train. He sneaks away from the others and manages to flag the train and capture the would-be wreckers. The express train conductor persuades Bill to accompany him to the city.

In the meantime Rosy, the child, has been sent to gather firewood in the railroad yard. Seeing some shavings in an open box car, she climbs in. She is no sooner in the car than the train starts and Rosy, thoroughly frightened, is carried away. Bill is presented to the road superintendent, and for his bravery is given a substantial sum of money and a pass for himself. As they are passing out of the railroad yard their attention is suddenly arrested by the sight of a child, clinging to the open door of the swiftly moving freight train. The superintendent flags the train and when the child is rescued, Bill discovers that she is none other than his Rosy. That night there is a happy family reunion in the Mogroity home.

JOHN COLTER'S ESCAPE (Dec. 6).—John Colter, a backwoodsman of the Northwestern coast, earned a reputation for his speed as a runner and his resourcefulness in face of danger. Once when trapping he was captured by a marauding band of Black Feet, who gave him a chance for his life to run the gauntlet in a rather singular way. He was set loose and the Indians were ordered to pursue him until he was worn down, giving opportunity to prolong torture at their pleasure. The crafty Colter led them such a swift pace that when the strongest runner was so far ahead that his fellowmen were out of sight, he turned, tripped the Indian, and finished him with his own spear. Then he took to the water and by hiding like a beaver beneath driftwood raft, escaped.

A QUESTION OF HAIR (Dec. 6).—Baldy is refused by Miss Boggs, a hair demonstrator, who favors hair-rich Harry Subsequently he discovers that both Miss Boggs and Harry are well wigged. He gets Harry's goat or rather his wig, which ends one romance and begins another.

MELIES.

THE CASTAWAY (Dec. 12).—Mr. Mason adopts Robert, son of his former partner, and rears him as his son. Later Mason marries and has a daughter Stella. On Robert's twenty-first birthday Mr. and Mrs. Mason tell him that he is but an adopted son and that the little five-year-old Stella is the real heiress to their estate. Robert becomes furiously jealous. He wanders to the beach and little Stella follows him. Here an idea comes to him. He puts Stella in a boat and casts her adrift. All night long the anxious parents search for their dear one, but in vain, and Robert denies any knowledge as to her whereabouts.

Far, far from home, Stella is picked up by some kindly fishermen, who adopt her and rear her to girlhood. The only mark of identification on her is a birthmark on her neck. At her benefactor's death she goes forth to earn her living. Her father has died in the interval and Robert, as the prospective heir, is managing the estate for his mother. Through an advertisement Stella secures a position as a companion in her own mother's house. Arthur, the foreman of the estate, falls in love with Stella and she with him. Robert, too, is smitten with her beauty and tries to act the libertine, much to her annoyance.

It is while Stella is bathing in the surf that that Mrs. Mason recognizes the unmistakable birthmark and claims her joyfully as her long lost child. Robert is indeed discomfitted at this unexpected turn of affairs and tries to get Stella to marry him. But she declares her love for Arthur, whereupon Robert discharges the foreman. Mrs. Mason, however, on hearing the true facts of Robert's character from Stella, sternly orders him from the house and reinstates Arthur to his position. Even more, by a look and smile she signifies her comprehension of the amorous situation and graciously gives her consent.

ECLIPSE.

A MAN FOR A DAY (Nov. 27).—To own a watch, a silk hat, a cane, and, in fact, to be dressed as a grown-up man, is little Willie's ambition. He takes his savings from the bank, and, after visiting a tailor and several other shops, is soon arrayed as proud as any dandy.

He then goes to the race track, where he decides to stake all the money that he has left on "a long shot." Luck favors him, he wins a small pile, and immediately starts in to spend his gold in fair company.

At an early hour he finds himself in the streets, a little unsteady and unable to find his way home until a kind policeman takes pity upon the young rascal and escorts him to his alarmed parents. His father's greeting is somewhat stern, and, judging from the sounds which come through the open window, Willie will henceforth be a sadder but wiser boy.

TREBIZOND AND SURROUNDINGS (Nov. 27).—Depicting many interesting places in and about the town of Trebizond, such as the Constitution Square, Turkish Square, the Fortress of Comneni, and the military camp; also several scenes of quaint Turkish life and customs are shown.

WRONGLY ACCUSED (Dec. 4).—Horder, the head game-keeper, overtakes a peasant named Rowden, poaching upon the preserves. He is about to collar the fellow when the peasant's gun accidentally goes off, wounding the game-keeper in the face. When his assistants arrive upon the scene, Horder, because of a former grudge, declares that the poacher deliberately shot at him. The result is that Rowden is sent to jail for a long period.

In order to support herself and her little son, Martha, the unfortunate wife, is forced to take a position as lady's maid at the castle. Five years later, Rowden is liberated, and learning the whereabouts of his wife, enters the house through an open window. Hardly have husband and wife embraced, before the servants, who have heard queer noises, give the alarm.

Rowden escapes but later returns to the house where he finds Horder, the game-keeper, in the hall, taking instructions from the master of the house. Rowden confronts him and forces Horder to confess that he falsely accused him of the shooting.

The squire is highly indignant at the story of the injustice, and offers the peasant a position upon his estate; after which husband and wife are happily reunited with their little son.

CINES.

TWO AFFLICTED HEARTS (Nov. 23).—Fred and Grace are madly in love with each other and prefer to linger by themselves. One day they are discovered strolling through the garden and are immediately followed by a group of merry young people bent upon mischief.

Catching sight of their pursuers, Fred quickly conceals himself behind the shrubbery and Grace pretends to be merely picking flowers when the jolly throng appear upon the scene. The male portion of the crowd then decide to hold a shooting match and adjust the target immediately in line with Fred's hiding place.

Grace is terrified beyond measure, and no one knows what she would have done after the first shots are fired, did her lover not emerge from his place of concealment and dash toward the house.

The whole crowd set up the cry of "Thief!" and start in wild pursuit. Speedily overhauling the fugitive, they force him to apologize for his bashfulness, after which they promise never to molest the pair again.

MANFREDONIA (SOUTHERN ITALY) (Nov. 23).—Situated in the southern part of Italy, this picturesque seaport town is especially interesting to tourists. After witnessing several charming bird's-eye views of the town, we are shown many scenes of typical native life and customs.

ALL ON A SUMMER'S DAY (Nov. 26).—The two most popular guests at the house party are Edna and Bob. They are secretly engaged to each other, but for several rather trivial reasons have fallen out.

Edna is annoyed at the attentions Bob pays to other girls, while Bob resents any interference with his liberty. Heated words cause them to part in anger.

Privately Bob makes a bet with a number of his men friends, while Edna also makes a wager with some of her girl cronies. The next time the two meet, they are exceptionally polite, and stroll about the grounds in earnest conversation. In a secluded corner, Bob presuming upon Edna's favorable mood, sinks upon his knees and kisses her. Edna then triumphantly exclaims that she has won her bet; that she would make him kneel at her feet, at the same time pointing to the smiling girls who are witnesses. Bob, however, declares that he bet he would kis her, and in turn points to his male friends in the background.

The result of this drawn battle is that the two young people resume their former relations and an announcement of their marriage is soon made public.

THE BEAUTIFUL VALLEY OF THE TRONTO (Nov. 26).—Starting at the source of the river Tronto in the hills, we are taken on a trip down through the beautiful valley which contains so many picturesque old castles and other interesting ruins.

A COMEDY OF ERRORS (Nov. 30).—The two rawest recruits in the regiment are namesakes. To their friends they are known as Bidoni No. 1 and Bidoni No. 2.

One day, on parade, the captain notices that the breeches of Bidoni No. 1 are too long and orders the Lieutenant to see that they are made shorter. The Lieutenant passes the order on to the Sergeant, who, happening to be in the barrack room and finding Bidoni there (only it is Bidoni No. 2, this time) instructs him to take three inches off the offending garment.

The Sergeant follows directly afterwards and gives the recruit a similar order. As a result, private Bidoni No. 2 appears on parade next day with breeches which do not reach down to his knees.

The Colonel is scandalized, and as a resudt, both Bidonis are sent to the guardhouse, where they are left to commiserate with each other as best they may.

CORNETO TARQUINIA (Nov. 30).—Situated a short distance from Rome, Corneto Tarquinia contains many places of interest which are well preserved from medieval times. We are shown the Principal Gate, the beautiful Vitelleschi Palace, the National Square, St. Stephen's Square, the Great Tower, the Castle, and several remarkable views of the town.

AT NAPOLEON'S COMMAND (Dec. 2).—This two-reel special subject was reviewed by Mr. James S. McQuade on page 753 of the issue dated November 23rd.

"UP AGAINST IT" (Dec. 3).—Fred is a very susceptible young man who cannot resist the sight of a pretty face. One day, seeing a charming yound lady enter a handsom, he immediately jumps into a taxi, directing the driver to follow her. The lady's coachman gives him the slip, however, and his dismay is increased when he discovers that he has no money to pay his driver, forcing him to continue his journey in a series of attempts to raise funds.

He tries to borrow from his hall porter, various friends, and finally tackles his uncle, but the latter only makes the situation worse by insisting that Fred stay to lunch while the taximeter keeps mounting up the charges.

Finally the poor fellow calls upon his lawyer, who refuses to lend him any money, but, being on his way to court, agrees to have a ride in the taxi. At a convenient moment, however, Fred decides that he has ridden long enough and jumps out of the vehicle, leaving the astonished lawyer to settle the charges, which have amounted to a considerable sum.

THE ANCIENT TOWN OF NARNI (Dec. 3).—Situated a short distance from Rome, Narni, founded in the Thirteenth Century, possesses many interesting ruins. We are shown the historic rock of Alexander VI., the ancient market place, a view of Stifona and some delightful views of the Nera Falls.

BECAUSE OF A WIDOW (Dec. 7).—She is seated resplendent upon a sofa, when Charlie and Frank enter the parlor of the hotel. The two young fellows fall violently in love with her at first sight, and, upon being introduced, start a spirited contest for her favor.

As the days of the vacation pass, first one and then the other believes himself to be No. 1 in her affections, and the sly minx, by dividing her favor equally, keeps them both in a state of great suspense.

One day, to his dismay, Frank discovers the widow in the arms of Charlie, and, beliving that he has lost out, becomes extremely jealous. Later he accuses his brother of unfairness, and in the heat of the argument draws a pistol, threatening to shoot. But becoming horrified at what he has done, he apologizes and determines to leave the field to his brother and return to his work.

Charlie soon discovers the fickle nature of the widow, however, and makes up his mind to go in search of Frank, whom he finds at the studio. They are both ambitious young artists and conclude to make art their mistress for life.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 46 (Nov. 28).—NASHVILLE, TENN. The east basin of the Nashville City reservoir gives way and a deluge washes several small buildings away. No loss of life is reported.

PORTSMOUTH, ENGLAND. The Iron Duke, the largest dreadnought in the world, is launched before a great crowd.

WYANDOTTE, MICH. The Bee and Bee, the largest side wheeler afloat, is launched sidewways after being christened by Miss Eleanor Moodey. The vessel is 500 feet long and will have accommodations for 6500 passengers.

THE BALKAN WAR

SOFIA, BULGARIA. The troops receive the blessing of the Church in the presence of King Ferdinand and leave for the front immediately.

CONSTANTINOPLE, TURKEY. The troops leave for the frontier to oppose the invasion of the allied armies of the Balkan States.

PHILADELPHIA, PA. The U. S. S. Tennessee and Montana leave for Constantinople to protect Americans in the event of a massacre of Christians if the Bulgarians enter the Holy City.

PARIS, FRANCE. Ermine shawl collars and muffs are in especial favor with the well dressed woman of the capital.

KALEM.

THE FARM BULLY (Dec. 2).—Clark Russell, a prominent writer, concludes that he will visit the south in the capacity of a farm hand and thus secure atmosphere for a new story. He learns that laborers are needed on a certain farm and as he journeys into the country he rescues a young woman whose horse is running away.

When Clark applies for work he is treated lightly by Bud, the foreman, until the owner of the farm arrives with his daughter, Anna, who recognizes her hero of the afternoon. A few days later at the dinner table Clark defends Polly, a maid, when she is annoyed by Bud and after the hands have departed for the fields the two men settle their score in a fight, the bully receiving a severe lesson.

Polly overhears Bud declaring that he will be revenged but she is unable to warn Clark. Later in the day the bully tries to force Clark into the hopper of the threshing machine but Anna sees the struggle from a distance and stops the engine. Polly informs Anna's father of Bud's treachery and the bully is discharged.

Clark and Anna find that they are very much in love and all goes smoothly until the author receives a suspicious photograph. He returns to his home but memories of the southern girl cause him to again visit the farm where explanations are made.

A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE (Dec. 4). Old Tom Wells is a victim of drink and is unable to pay the rent when Steve, the young landlord, appears on the scene. Steve's stormy interview is broken by the appearance of Alice, Tom's daughter, whom the landlord has made many unsuccessful efforts to court. Alice, who has given her promise to Martin, an industrious young farmer, entreats with her father to overcome his weakness.

Wells knowing he will be dispossessed, becomes desperate and starts for the village to secure money. He is tempted to steal Steve's horse, but is discovered by the landlord, who declares that he will have the old man imprisoned if he does not force Alice to consent to the marriage.

The unhappy father therefore refuses to permit Martin to visit Alice to whom he explains that he is in the power of the landlord. Alice sacrifices her happiness and marries Steve.

Wells makes his home with the young couple but finds that he is in the way. Steve is harsh and oftentimes cruel and the old man is finally obliged to leave the farm.

Meanwhile, Martin, heartbroken, leaves for the village as he is unable to bear the sight of the old places where he has known so much happiness. Wells, in his journey, falls by the wayside and dispatches a note to Martin, beseeching him to look after the unhappy daughter.

Steve meets a young woman with whom he determines to elope and he returns home to secure his money. He discovers Alice weeping over an old photograph of Martin and he attacks her. Martin, fulfilling his trust, arrives on the scene and is confronted with Steve's revolver. In the struggle the pistol is accidentally discharged and the unfaithful husband is killed.

As the days pass, Alice forgets her unhappiness in the true love of Martin.

A CALIFORNIA SNIPE HUNT (Dec. 6).—Hattie, the village belle, has many admirers to whom she offers little encouragement. Rube, a country boy, arrives in town and secures a position in the grocery store, where his gallantry and salesmanship win Hattie's heart.

Consumed with jealousy the boys determine to humble Rube. They invite the gullible youth to accompany them on a snipe hunt. When they reach a lonely spot Rube is given a sack to hold and is informed by the boys that they will go out and drive in the snipes. The boys, however, go home and Rube waits all night in vain.

Next morning Hattie decides to invite Rube to a "picnic for two" and she prepares a fine lunch. As she approaches the village she discovers the plight of the grocery clerk. Hattie explains to Rube that he has been made the victim of a deep laid plot and they proceed to enjoy the lunch. When the boys return to have the laugh on Rube they find to their amazement that they have merely promoted his love affair.

SOMETHING WRONG WITH BESSIE (Dec. 6).—Bessie is extremely lazy. Uncle Josh pays her a visit and his eccentricities are interpreted as the signs of an unsound mind. The old farmer, in turn, cannot account for Bessie's strange actions. Bessie's husband arrives at an opportune moment and restores tranquility.

DRIVER OF THE DEADWOOD COACH (Dec. 7).—John Nelson, driver of the Deadwood Coach, is anxious to send his crippled child, Myrtle, east for treatment but he is unable to raise the necessary funds. One morning the stage carries a valuable consignment of gold bullion and Bad Bill, a desperado, learning of the shipment, determines to secure it. He prepares a large box with a double hinge, takes it to the stage house and gives instructions for its shipment. Unobserved, he secreates himself in the box, which is placed on top of the coach.

Nelson's little son, Harry, is presented with a camera and decides to take a picture of his father's coach as it approaches the village. When the stage arrives it is discovered that the gold is missing and Nelson, held responsible, is placed in jail. Harry develops the plate, which reveals Bill creeping from the box to secure the gold. The boy hastens to the sheriff, to whom he shows the negative. In the meantime Bill has had no opportunity to escape from the box which is taken into the warehouse and covered with heavy crates. When the desperado finally extricated by the officers it is found that he has been suffocated. The gold is recovered and Nelson is liberated. The Eldorado Mining Company pays Harry a handsome reward, with which he is able to send his sister to the eastern specialists.

VITAGRAPH.

THE ABSENT-MINDED VALET (Dec. 2).—With a "dome" of solid ivory, Jas Price is the acme of absent-mindedness. His mother tells him he must get a job. She sees an advertisement in the paper for a valet, goes with him to make an application for the position. He is employed by Mr. Fussly, who has no end of trouble with him. When he leaves for a summer resort, he forgets the keys to the trunk, mislays the railroad tickets, and mails the trunk checks instead of some letters intrusted to him, and when he discovers the mistake, he tries to extricate them from the box and is arrested for robbing the mail. Mr. Fussly is obliged to secure his release. To cap the climax, he lets the water overflow the bathtub, when preparing a bath for his employer. Mr. Fussly is aroused to such fury he grabs the valet and throws him bodily into the steaming tub of water, sousing him repeatedly into it whenever he attempts to get out.

THE SCOOP (Dec. 3).—All the newspapers in town have failed to get an interview with Cornelius J. Smith, the multi millionaire. Beulah Mead, a young society reporter on the "Sun," asks permission to try to get it. She arrives at the barricaded summer home of the millionaire, gets over the wall, and meets Cornelius J. Smith, Jr. He is working in the garden and dressed accordingly, and does not tell who he is. She cannot drop from the wall unassisted, and he agrees, for a kiss, to assist her and tell her where she can find his father. She finds him in swimming, without a bathing suit, and sitting on his clothes, demands an interview. He dare not come out and soon grants her the desired interview. She thanks him for his kindness and leaves the coast clear. She has to pay two kisses to Smith, Jr., to get out of the garden. She seems to be indignant, but finally laughs as she bids him good-bye. It is a big victory for her. She secures the interview for her paper, a "Scoop."

Cornelius J. Smith, Jr., calls on her at her home and she finally realizes when she sees his card who he is. He proposes, she accepts, and he makes a "scoop" for himself.

THE CURIO HUNTERS (Dec. 4).—In search of curios among the South Sea Islands Professor Hunter directs the captain of the vessel to stop at one of them. Landing with the sailors, the Professor makes his way to a village, which is deserted by the inhabitants. Among the sailors is one Bill, a little runt, who is given to generous libations from his inseparable black bottle. They all enter a large hut, used as a temple of worship to a Billiken like god, enthroned on its pedestal in the center of the room. The Professor extracts it as a rare specimen of barbaric art. In their anxiety to get away with it before the return of the natives, they forget all about their companion Bill.

When they reach the boats, the sailors miss Bill and two of them return to the hut for him. They find him reclining on the pedestal of the god. Recognizing Bills strong resemblance to the late occupant of the temple, they decide to fix him up a little more like the idol, await the return of the fishing party and see the fun. The cannibals come back and find their god full of animation and "booze." They are delighted and feast Bill on the fat of the land, attended by the choicest of colored maidens.

In the meantime, Bill's companions have been discovered and are brought to the temple to receive sentence from their most worshipful god. Bill directs his subjects to place them in position to receive the full weight and force of his cudgel-like sceptre upon the basements of their trousers. Then he commands his astonished worshipers to let them depart, while he remains to enjoy the "snap" which has fallen to his lot.

MRS. LIRRIPER'S LEGACY (Dec. 5).—The first part of the picture shows the bringing up of Mrs. Lirriper's adopted grandson, Jemmy Jackman Lirriper, by Mrs. Lirriper and the Major, their games and their affection for each other. They send him to a boarding school. Just before his vacation, Mrs. Lirriper receives a visit from a man from the French Consul telling her that an Englishman who is sick at Sens, France, has made her his sole heir. She is puzzled to know who it is, and makes up her mind that she, the Major and Jemmy will visit Sens and if possible see the dying man.

Arriving at Sens, Mrs. Lirriper is shown to the sick man's room. At first he is so changed that she does not recognize him, but when he looks at her, she knows it is Jemmy's father Edson, who deserted his wife. At first she upbraids him, but struck with pity at his miserable condition, she prays for him, and then when he asks to see Jemmy she brings the boy to him, though of course, without telling him who the sick man is. Jemmy kisses his father, whom he thinks a stranger and at his request, prays God to forgive him, and clasping his child's hand, Edson passes away.

TOO MANY CASEYS (Dec. 6).—In a row of tenements, right next door to each other, live two families by the name of Casey. Casey No. 1 and his family, who are old residents, look with some condescension upon the newly arrived Caseys, and refuse to mix with them. This arouses a sort of feud. Caseys No. 2 indulge in concerts on their house organ, which backs directly against the party wall of Caseys No. 1, who are almost driven frantic. To counteract this, Casey No. 1 hires a street band and overwhelms the noise next door. Matters are brought to a crisis when a burglar is discovered by the two Caseys loitering in their back yard. Both of them take their revolvers and together capture the burglar. Each one is ambitious to claim the credit. During the wrangle, the burglar escapes. Casey No. 1 accuses Casey No. 2 of interfering with his effort to protect his home and property. They flourish their revolvers and things wax hot, when a policeman appears and takes them in, charged with attempt to kill.

Fortunately, a policeman has seen the burglar in flight, arrests him and brings him into the station house and the presence of the Caseys. Explanations follow and both Caseys are discharged. So overjoyed are they and their families, that a truce is declared. Peace and happiness now reigns where discord once prevailed.

MR. EXHIBITOR Did It Ever Occur to You?

(Theatre equipped with ordinary Electric Piano or Orchestra)—Scene 1

Your audience is sitting in rapt attention, eyes gazing expectantly at the picture, waiting for the scene where the lover presents his sweetheart with a bunch of roses or violets—he hands her the flowers and she gazes at him with all her soul in her eyes and then!

THE AUTOMATIC INSTRUMENT STARTS PLAYING "COME ON AND HEAR, COME ON AND HEAR, ALEXANDER'S RAG TIME BAND." FINE!

Scene 2

THE AUTOMATIC INSTRUMENT STARTS PLAYING "EVERYBODY'S DOING IT."

Can you imagine how beautiful that DOES NOT sound?

(Theatre equipped with Fotoplayer)—Scene 1

As the lover is shown in the scene handing his sweetheart a bunch of violets, the Fotoplayer plays "Every Morn I Bring Thee Violets" on the sweet tones of the Organ.

We want to tell you, Mr. EXHIBITOR, that class of music will bring out the finest thoughts in your patrons.

Scene 2

The lover is shot by his hated rival, and with a look of pain his sweetheart stands over him with horror on her face. The Fotoplayer plays "Hearts and Flowers" as they tenderly pick him up and carry him into her home.

That's real music for the picture, Mr. EXHIBITOR. That's music that makes the audience say as they leave, "Was not that a grand scene? was it not beautiful? and how grand the music was!

MR. EXHIBITOR, that is what makes your people say to all their friends, "Let us go into the FOTOPLAYER Theatre, because there you not only see good pictures, but also have beautiful music to accompany them."

Drop us a line stating seating capacity of your House and we will advise you what particular style Instrument would be best suited for your needs.

FOTOPLAYERS COST MONEY—they are not a cheap Instrument, but—THE FOTOPLAYER WILL MAKE MONEY FOR YOU.

"THE MIRACLE"

We, the New York Film Company, have the only films of the "MIRACLE" that have thus far been made, and are ready to deliver the goods.

We are engaged in legitimate business, and do not wish to engage in mud slinging contests with our competitors, who have no films and no legitimate grievance against us.

We will guarantee absolute protection to all State right buyers, as well as to exhibitors of the "MIRACLE" against any infringement or interference.

The "MIRACLE" copyright registered Class LXXC, issued to A. J. Danziger of the New York Film Co.

We have the entire press unanimous in its praise. The New York Sunday Sun devoted a whole page in the issue of November 17th, narrating the merits of the "Miracle," and illustrating it profusely.

CORK, AND VICINITY (Dec. 6).—Here is a chance to see the city of Cork without going to Ireland. There is Queen's College, one of the most advanced educational centers of the world. Blarney Castle, known the world over. Some of the old ruins are included in this bewitching panorama. John Bunny at the Black Pool makes us feel quite at home. We pass through the streets of Cork, getting an idea of its commercial importance. Last but not least, are the stockyards, where its vast cattle interests are handled and inspected.

THE AWAKENING OF BIANCA (Dec. 7).—Nicola pays court to Bianca, the daughter of Angello, who runs a fruit store and for whom Nicola works. Guiseppe, who is somewhat of a dandy, wins the girl's affections. Nicola leaves Angello's employ and by hard work saves enough money to buy a fruit stand of his own.

Angello is stricken with a serious illness. Bianca is obliged to care for him and their fruit stand is closed, their income stops and they come to need. Bianca determines to sell her beautiful head of hair to secure means. Guiseppe, still declaring his love, sees an opportunity of making a commission on the sale of his sweetheart's hair and takes her to the hair merchant with a greedy desire to profit by its sale. As Bianca and Guiseppe are entering the merchant's shop, Nicola, on his way to close the transaction for his fruit stand, sees them enter. He watches through the window and just as the merchant takes the shears in his hand to remove the long raven tresses of Bianca, he rushes into the place and stops the merchant and denounces Guiseppe. He takes his savings from his pocket and places them in the hand of Bianca, telling her to take the money to her father to relieve their necessity. Hurriedly he leaves the shop, followed by Bianca, who overtakes him and insists that he should take back the money, that she is not deserving of his kindness or love, that she now realizes the difference between Nicola's true heart and the false pretensions of Guiseppe. Nicola declares his love and asks her to become his wife. She is only too happy to place her future in the care and protection of the man willing to make such unselfish sacrifices in her behalf.

THE DAWNING (Dec. 6).—A story of this two-reel special subject was published on page 783 of the issue dated November 23.

BRUTALITY (Dec. 2).—In every man struggles the two natures in conflict. Some, as in the case of the brute, pass through life dominated alone by the brute force, until there comes a regenerating influence arousing the latent good. Into his life first comes the instinctive attraction for the coquetry of the maid, but the strength she may have fancied she admired in him turns into gross brutality, subduing her hidden spirit. Then two tickets for the theater change the entire course of his life. The Bill Sikes in the play holds up the mirror to the Bill Sikes in life, and both man and wife are born anew.

THE NEW YORK HAT (Dec. 5).—The young village minister was not quite as discreet as he might have been in fulfilling the strange trust left by the dying mother, but it certainly worked for the common good. By the bequest the mother desired that her daughter possess some of the finery previously denied her. As a result the minister and Mary were linked in a scandal, with the church board in judgment. Gossip received the laugh, however, as it generally does, while the minister assumed a trust quite unexpected.

ECLAIR.

THE INVISIBLE (Nov. 24).—A wealthy farmer, Michu, refuses to allow Tom to call on his daughter Mabel. Tom notices a "quack" who is selling a powder which makes people invisible. He buys a box so he will be able to see Mabel without being seen by Michu. He takes the powder. On the way to Mabel's home, he meets two lovers who, being deeply interested in each other, do not see him. The school-master has dropped his glasses and when he passes does not see Tom either. Naturally he thinks he is invisible. He reaches her home and climbs up a ladder, when the father sees him and tries a pitchfork on his legs. He does not ask for permission to run away.

The two friends have seen everything and of course are laughing. They decide to carry the joke further. When he speaks to them they do not answer, making believe they cannot see him. Disgusted, Tom hopes to find consolation in a glass of wine, and while he is drinking, the good friends take the bottle and glass because they do not see him. Tom grows more nervous. The two jokers enter Tom's house and unload his gun, and take everything which can reflect his own image and wait. Tom arrives. His friends take his money. For a moment, taken aback, Tom jumps for his gun and fires, but of course without effect.

This time Tom becomes real frightened and tries to commit suicide. The two jokers explain everything to Old Michu, who laughs heartily at seeing Tom's bag of money. He decides to allow his daughter to marry Tom and they all go to Tom's house. On seeing them Tom runs away in order to jump into the river, but only falls into Mabel's arms.

A GIRL FROM THE COUNTRY (Nov. 26).—Teddy Airfield, has received a letter from his country friend to the effect that his sister is coming to the city, and asking Teddy to entertain the girl during the time she is in the city. This Teddy is not particularly inclined to do, for the last time he had seen the girl she was just an ordinary country girl. Then he writes to three of his friends, telling them of the girl's coming, and asks if they will entertain her, as he is too busy to do so. He promises to foot the bills.

The boys promise, and feeling quite a "wise guy," Teddy goes to meet the girl. He is amazed. She is beautiful! Now he is sorry he has made the engagements for the girl and tries to break them off, and phones the boys. But they refuse to be released. Teddy is very provoked, and gets up from the desk on which the phone is placed, leaving the diary in which he has written the engagements (and which he had finished with "And I take Alice to the train, Good Riddance"). Alice, wishing to phone, chances upon the diary and reads the entries. She is pleased, until she comes to the last entry, then she is provoked. Then she determines to punish Mr. Teddy. So on the first night, Jack calls to take her to the theater. She is stunningly dressed, and purposely parades her beauty before Teddy, and is especially sweet to Jack.

When the boys call to present their expense bills for entertaining her she overhears them, and after they leave upbraids the disconsolate Teddy for his behavior. However, after Teddy has been properly rebuked she * * * oh, well, whats the use of trying to describe the actions of two young people at such a time.

THE DARLING OF THE MOUNTED (Nov. 28).—Through the arrest of her father and only guardian a little girl is left upon the hands of a party of Royal Mounted Police, of the Northwest woods. The men draw lots for the possession of the child. She is awarded to Jimsey, a young Englishman, who proceeds with the assistance of a Chinese servant to rear her as his own. Some time after little Clara is rescued from a dangerous situation by Morgen, her own father, who having escaped the bands of the Mounted Police, is living as an outlaw in the woods. The child not remembering him, cries for her papa Jimsey. When the father cannot endure her cries of hunger and grief any longer, he voluntarily puts his head into the noose by taking her back to the fort.

There he finds Jimsey alone. The latter's gratitude at having his little darling restored to him is so great that he is willing to conceive at Morgen's second escape. The outlaw is apprehended in his attempt by the returning Mounted Police. Jimsey puts the proposition to them. If they send Morgen to the gallows they can never look their darling in the face again. Morgen is supplied with arms and ammunition and sent to shift for himself down the river.

AT THE FLAME, THE BUTTERFLY BURNT ITS WINGS (Dec. 1).—The dark wing of death is already brushing the pale face of Lelia and her family grieves. But a young doctor, a stranger, comes and soon the pretty flower comes back to life. Upon her rosy lips, her smile plays once more and again she is the joy of the house. The young stranger charms her by sending her rich gifts.

Little by little, love grows between the two young people and many pleasant hours pass. Lelia, coquettish and joyful, allows herself to be courted by a young man of her own country. A companion of the stranger passes and sees them together. He thinks his friend is being deceived and tells him what he has seen.

But poor Lelia has really given her heart to the young stranger, who refuses to listen to her explanation and leaves, and will never return. The smile has passed forever from the lips of the poor little woman.

"THE TOLL OF THE SEA" (Nov. 26).—The supervisor of a small fishing village offers a money prize for the biggest catch of fish on a certain expedition. The young wife of John is anxious that the husband win the prize, for there is shortly expected an addition to the family and the money is badly needed. The vixen of the village is in love with John but he repels her advances.

On the morning of the expedition the weather is very stormy and the old fishermen feel that to go out will be dangerous, but John urged by the wife goes even against the protests of the vixen. The big storm that follows breaks up the fishing expedition and many are drowned. Many bodies are washed up on the shore but John never returns. The vixen taunts the young wife with having urged her husband to go on the voyage against the better advice of the others, and eventually makes her believe that she alone is responsible for her husband's death. This drives the young wife insane and she wanders the beach day by day looking for the lost one. At last with the idea of still searching for her lost husband she walks into the sea and drowns. The vixen sees her and tries to prevent it, but it is too late, and then realizing follows the unfortunate to a watery grave.

"THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR." (Nov. 27.).—The odor of the pies like mother used to make tempted Happy Hollow and he fell. But he was captured. Seeing his opportunity he used the pies to effect his escape, leaving however part of his clothing in the hands of a policeman blinded with them.

Henry Hawkins, a life member of the original henpecks, is expected at the club, for a quiet game. To evade his wife he drops his clothes out the window, where they fall into the hands of Happy who retires to a quiet spot in the garden to dress. By a ruse Hawkins escapes, through a cellar window. Mrs. Hawkins supposes Happy to be her husband. Her voice starts Happy on a chase. Likewise Hawkins outside looking for his clothes. Her cry results in Happy's arrest by the officer whom he assaulted, Hawkins making his way to the club room is spotted by a watchful policeman. Coatless he is a suspect. The clubroom is raided and Hawkins caught. At the station Hawkins meets his wife face to face. To make the punishment fit the crime a wise judge delivers him to his wife for a life sentence. Happy, better off, gets sixty days without pie.

"HAWKINS MOVES." (Nov. 29).—The Hawkins family learn that they have to move. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins find and rent a suitable dwelling. Moving day arrives, the van is packed and Mrs. Hawkins goes ahead leaving Hawkins to follow the van and see to its safe arrival. It is a warm day. Bill and Jim, two typical moving men, suggest to Hawkins the advisability of quenching a concurring thirst. Hawkins though not a drinker thinks their request reasonable and agrees. They stop at the first saloon and Hawkins for the first time experiences the reviving effects of the foaming fluid.

The company of Bill and Jim is congenial, and they linger. Leaving with the wagon some time later several stops are made. The stops have had their effects. Hawkins loses his bearings and several hours are consumed hunting for the new home.

Now after hours of weary waiting Mrs. Hawkins found Hawkins with the furniture back in the house he originally moved from, and how she with masterly skill took charge of the situation contributes to the fun in this comedy.

"LOCKED OUT." (Dec. 1).—Pearl and her husband return home after having been to the theatre and to dinner. Pearl is suddenly taken very ill, and hubby rushes out to the drug store for some medicine. The drug store having closed, he returns, but finds that he has left his keys in his overcoat pocket and is compelled to ring the bell. Pearl is too sick to open the door for him, so he attempts to climb a window, but is seen and arrested as a burglar. Pearl meantime decides to come down and open the door for him. So slipping a coat over her nightdress, she goes downstairs, and the door slamming, she also is "locked out." Like hubby, she attempts to climb the window and is also arrested. Hubby is lodged in a cell, with a laborer and a negro as cell mates. Pearl protests against her arrest, but the police think

"A PICNIC IN DAKOTA." (Dec. 1).—Bob and Kate go out for a day's sport in the woods. Kate wanders away from Bob, and meets White Fawn, an Indian girl. Kate thinking to play a joke on Bob, proposes an exchange of clothes with White Fawn, and White Fawn being willing, the change is quickly effected. Bob comes upon Fawn and mistakes her for Kate. She runs away and he follows. He finally catches her and she turns upon him with a knife and chases him up the street. Meanwhile Kate has met Red Deer, Fawn's mate, and he mistakes Kate for Fawn. She also runs away and leads Red Deer a merry chase, and he is a very bewildered indian when he finds his Fawn's clothes adorning the form of a white girl. Finally matters are straightened out to the satisfaction of all and the girls resuming their own raiments prevent further misunderstandings.

FOR THE LOVE OF MIKE (Nov. 30).—Mary is the sole caretaker of her crippled brother, Tom. Mary falls in love with the hero in the book she so often reads to Tom and dreams of loving such a character in life. Her employer ardently admires Mary, and desires her for his wife. Tom one day visits the quarry owned by his sister's employer, and there meets Mike, a robust, kind Irishman, who invites the little cripple to share his lunch and opinions. A fast friendship springs up between the two. On another visit the boy ventures too near a dangerous point in the quarry, and is slightly injured and stunned by a flying piece of stone. Mike is the first to reach him. Mike takes him home, and for the first time learns of Mary in the boy's delirium. He stays by Tom until Mary returns from the office. At their meeting a mutual interest springs up between the two, which is fostered by a further acquaintance and soon develops into love. Shortly after the incident, Murray proposes to Mary, offering her wealth, luxury and ease if she will marry him. For the love of Mike she sacrifices all, and refuses. A little later Murray rides out to the quarry with Mary, where she meets Tom. The interest taken in each other by the two convinces Murray that Mike is the obstacle in his path. He discharges Mike. But for the love of Mike the men all quit, and refuse to return to work until he is reinstated. The superintendent telephones Murray, telling him of the occurrence. Murray refuses, but when he sees the contracts on his desk necessitating the work to be completed within a stated time, he consents to the reinstatement of Mike. Mike asks Tom whether he consents and Tom does for the love of Mike.

"A HEART RECLAIMED." (Dec. 1).—William Hartridge calls on his friend Jack Storm, and finds him proceeding to get drunk. Storm tells the story of how he loved the girl and won her love: how their troth was plighted: how her father went down in the crash in Wall Street: how a wealthy broker, in love with the girl, alone could save him. The father went to the girl, and told her she alone could save the family honor by marrying the broker. She promised her father that she would carry out his wish and marry the broker. Hartridge heard the story and told him to come to the club and forget his grief. He did so but with no success. He left the club. A few hours later his friends learned that the broker had been killed and that Storm had been found bending over his dead body with a revolver in his hand. He had walked to the girl's house, and had stood on the other side of the street looking across at the windows. He had heard a shot, had run toward the man who fell, saw it was the broker and the assassin escaping. He lifted up the body, picked up the revolver and had thus been found by the police. Everything pointed to his guilt. He was tried and condemned. Just as the Judge was about to read the sentence, a letter is handed to him. "He stole my wife and I followed him, found him, shot him. My task is done, and I am through with the world." By a greater jury than the twelve who judged only as weak men can judge, Jack Storm is acquitted.

"AN INDIAN OUTCAST." (Nov. 26).—Black Wolf, a brave, wants Whispering Water to be his squaw. Whispering Water is afraid of this taciturn Indian and refuses. He tries to carry her off, but is stopped by another Indian, Brave Heart, and there is a savage fight in which Black Wolf is worsted. He appeals to the chief to banish Brave Heart. The young brave has his arm bound, is blindfolded and cast out. He wanders about and falls into a deep hole.

Wally is visiting his sweetheart Milly. He rides away, and hearing the Indian's cries goes to him, releases him, attends to his wounds and, putting him on his horse, takes him back to camp. Sometime later Wally and Milly's father go hunting, and Black Pete calls at the cabin. He is a lawless man without respect for anyone. He kisses Milly and would pay her further unwilling attention when Brave Heart, fishing near at hand comes upon the scene and worsts the bad man. Black Pete goes to the Indians, presents the Chief with a rifle and interests him in his revengeful project. He leads a band of Indians to the cabin, seizes Milly and has Brave Heart thrown over a cliff. The Indians then set fire to the cabin and dance around it.

Brave Heart's fall is broken by some bushes. He climbs up the cliff and unseen runs off to the trapper's camp, where he finds Milly's father and Wally. The whole outfit mounts and rides to the rescue. They reach the charred cabin, find the trail of the fleeing maurauders and pursue them. They come up with them at nightfall, surround the camp, ambush the Indians and kill a number of them. Brave Heart hunts for Black Pete and in a hand to hand fight kills him and takes Milly in triumph to Wally, who folds her in his arms.

"THE MASSACRE OF THE FOURTH CAVALRY." (Nov. 30).—The Apache Chiefs and Sub-Chiefs, Naitche, Ketena, Tahchilsa and others, come to the reservation barracks and demand liquor. They are very angry at the refusal given, and Lieutenant Davis, in charge, is apprehensive of trouble. The Apaches return to camp and make the squaws brow tizwin, their native liquor. A scout sees the effects of the brew and notes the braves in full war paint dancing. The scout reports to Lieut. Davis, who sends Second Lieut. Clark, with a troop of cavalry, to stop the warlike preparations. The troopers go to the Indian camp and the chief is informed tthat his tribe will be punished if he is not careful. The Indians show their resentment plainly and Chief Mangus's squaw would shoot Clark but for the interference of Mangus. After their departure, the squaw fires the braves on to action, and they start out to exterminate the Pale Face upstarts. They fire a pioneer cabin, kill the man and take the woman off.

Clark reports to Davis, who leads a troop to the Indian camp and confiscates the tepees and takes the squaws prisoners. Mangus's squaw, Huera, being amongst the number. The Indians swear a terrible oath of vengeance. From their mountain retreat they descend cautiously to the reservation barracks and Chief Mangus climbs the brush stockade and rescues his squaw, Huera. An Indian climbs a telegraph pole and cuts the wires to destroy communication. Davis deems it advisable to call for reinforcements. He finds the wires are cut. He determines upon an immediate attack and rides after the Red Skins. The Indians see them and plan an mabush. They see the troopers enter a pass, which leads to a sandy plain. The Indians race across the mountain path, enter the plain and bury themselves in the sand. The Cavalry comes along and falls into the trap. The Indians rise from the sand on every side and annihilate them, and all that is left the next day are the naked bodies of the dead troopers.

IT HAPPENED THUS (Nov. 29).—The bank in which John Allen & Co. have their account deposited fails, and the company is compelled to shut down their factory. Allen manages to keep his anguish of mind from his sweetheart, Madge Dale, who persuades him to accompany her and her mother to their home in a suburban town, where Madge is preparing to give him a party that night. Their conversation is overheard by "Crafty Jim," a professional burglar, and he determines to rob Allen's house.

While the party is in progress Allen excuses himself and goes to his home, only to find "Crafty Jim" there. Not desiring to have anything to do with him, Allen tosses Jim his pocketbook and orders him to leave. "Crafty Jim" goes, but in looking through the window sees that Allen is about to drink some poison. Jim tries to make Allen see things in a different light, but Allen will not listen, and a terrible struggle ensues, in which "Crafty Jim" is the winner. He ties Allen to a chair and brings Madge to him. Madge learns of Allen's predicament and, being a wealthy girl, offers him some of her money, which starts business going again for him. Later Allen and Madge do a good turn to "Crafty Jim" by gaining his freedom from jail and starting him on the right path.

THE REGENERATION OF WORTHLESS DAN (Nov. 25).—John Allison sees the cowboys off on the roundup, and is left alone with his wife and baby. Faber and Stern, two horse rustlers, know this and attempt to steal two horses. They are frustrated by Allison, and in an exchange of shots Faber is badly wounded in the left arm, and Allison sustains a flesh wound in his right arm. The men escape. Mrs. Allison binds her husband's arm and rides away for the sheriff and a doctor, leaving the baby with Allison.

Faber insists upon returning. Stern accompanies him. Faber creeps up to the ranch house door and shoots Allison. Stern enters the house and sees the man is beyond help. He sees the baby and, thinking it may starve, takes it away with him. He has a long and cold ride to his mountain shack, and upon his arrival discovers that the child has died from exposure. Years pass, and Stern becomes a horse dealer. He has kept a pretty little brooch which he found upon the baby. He runs across Worthless Dan, a boy of eighteen. Stern gives him food and persuades Dan to accompany him. They call upon Mrs. Allison, and while refusing to buy a horse she is attracted to Dan, who reminds her strongly of what her boy would have been at his age. The next day Stern shows Dan the baby's brooch, and he tells Dan he can pass off as the widow's son if he (Dan) will do as he is told and help him (Stern) occasionally. Dan consents. Mrs. Allison is easily convinced and Dan goes to her, and soon learns to love this gracious lady. One night Stern enters the house and, seeing Dan alone, demands that he break open the safe and go with him. There is a fight, which Mrs. Allison witnesses, and Stern is ejected. Dan confesses the deception, but Mrs. Allison takes him to her heart.

A FRIEND INDEED (Nov. 27).—John Lloyd has an invalid wife whom the doctor orders to go to the mountains. John's daughter Dorothy calls at the office where her father is employed as a confidential clerk, to tell him of the doctor's decision. The junior partner makes advances to the girl, which she repulses. Angry at this, he refuses to give John an advance in salary so that he may take his wife away. John goes home and, after refusing to accept a loan from the senior partner's son, who is also in love with Dorothy, and who both father and daughter favor, John takes out an old painting and hastens to an art dealer. The son, Willard Dowlan, follows and hears the dealer tell John that it is only an imitation. John returns corrowfully home, but Willard goes to his father's office. He finds that the clerks have gone, but expecting Mr. Dowlan, Sr., back, as the combination book was left on his desk, Willard takes this and opens the safe and gets $500; then writes a note to his father, telling him of taking the money, that he is stopping with friends that night and leaving early in the morning. He then commissions a friend to buy the painting, not telling who it is for. This the friend does, and the next morning John is busy getting his wife's things ready to go to the station when a detective arrives to arrest him. The note was blown down, the money is not accounted for, so the junior partner at once sends an officer for John. John is brought to the office, but his tale of selling a painting at such a price, and being unable to give the purchaser's name, causes even the senior partner to doubt John. Fortunately Willard has left a part of the things he wanted to take at the office, so returns to get them in the morning and makes satisfactory explanation. In consequence the senior partner takes John and his family to the mountains as his guests.

THE MATRIMONIAL AGENCY OF ROARING GULCH (Nov. 29).—Bob, a cowboy, does not possess the saving grace of humor. He is therefore made the butt of the boys' jokes. Bob is in love with Lela, the daughter of the boss of the ranch. The boys wrap a photograph of a lovely person in pink tights and suitably inscribed, in a lady's stocking and put it into Bob's pocket. He pulls it out at the wrong moment, and there is trouble, of course.

Pa Gibson discovers an ad. in a newspaper, stating that matrimonial agents are in town and willing to provide mates for all. The boys visit the agency and find it is being run by two charming girls. They tell the girls that Bob is on the lookout for a wife. The Bachelors' Club downtown sees the ad. and put their heads together. Bob is about to patch up matters with Lela when a procession winds up the ranch road consisting of all sorts and conditions of women, who show Bob's advertisement. He flees, is pursued, and is joined by Lela, who is indignant at the joke played upon her boy. They meet Pa Gibson, commandeer his buggy, drive to a minister's and are married. They return to the ranch and find the determined husband seekers sitting down to await Bob's appearance. When they learn he is married they swoop down upon the matrimonial agency in a body. The Bachelors' Club is interested, and the minister has his hands full of couples demanding to be married.

Eleven Inch Outside Diameter, Five Inch Hub, Holds One Thousand Feet of Film

IT IS an established fact that the first two hundred and fifty and the last one hundred feet of film endure the greatest strain.
The strain on a reel with a five-inch hub equals the strain on a reel with a small hub after two hundred and fifty feet of film have been taken up. The first damage is caused by "take up" strain, and the last hundred feet is damaged by the strain between top sprocket and magazine.

Shorty and Lee, cowboys, arrive at the agency and find the two pretty agents counting their fees. The girls find the boys good to look upon and tell them to be at the station with pink carnations in their buttonholes, to meet two girls similarly decorated. Shorty and Lee are surprised and satisfied to find that the girls have apportioned themselves to them.

STANDING ROOM ONLY (Dec. 1).—There were murmurs of indignation in a quiet little country jail, because the cooking was so bad and the table service much below that in vogue at the majority of penal institutions. The sheriff was a kind-hearted old man, and when the prisoners went to him with their sorrows he promised to rectify matters, and he did. The old warden was dismissed in disgrace and in his place another villager was chosen, not on account of his own abilities, but because his daughter was a most wonderful cook. She made an instantaneous hit in the jail. People absolutely fought for a chance to be locked up, and the sheriff's heart swelled with pride one day when the warden was compelled to hang the sign "Standing Room Only" at the front door.

It was a happy jail for several months, and then the crash came. One morning the fair cook vanished, leaving a note in which she said that the jail was so popular she was overworked, so she had decided to marry the man she loved. What could self-respecting prisoners do under such circumstances? Wrathfully they went to their cells and gathered up their belongings; determinedly they marched out, never to return; and reproachfully they glared at the unhappy warden who stood on the front steps, vainly trying to appease them. The warden watched them with anguish as they filed out of sight. Then he took down the "Standing Room Only" sign and tore it into bits.

A WILL AND A WAY (Dec. 3).—A hot tempered old man, enraged because his daughter defied him, and married the man she loved, disowned her, and made his nephew the heir to his wealth. A couple of years after his daughter left, she returned to her father's house. Her husband was dead and she and her baby were in dire want. Her pitiful plea was addressed to her father, but the nephew intercepted the letter, and prepared to drive the poor woman away. Fortunately for her, the father came along at the opportune moment, affectionatly greeted his daughter, and ordered the heartless nephew out of the house.

When the woman returned the father made a new will, giving her all and the nephew nothing. The lawyer who drew up these documents was a tricky individual, and saw a chance to benefit himself by them. He did not destroy the old will, but kept both papers. When the rich man died the lawyer got into communication with the nephew, exhibited the first will, and intimated that he would suppress the second for a consideration.

The lawyer had a stenographer who had met the nephew and hated him. She had seen the daugter and approved of her. The lawyer and the nephew were dickering over their deal and the lawyer carelessly dropped the will on the desk. The girl was summoned into the room to take some signed letters. She saw the will, realized its importance, and while the attention of her employer was distracted, gathered it up with the letters and departed into her room.

She knew that the document must reach the proper authorities. It was impossible for her to slip out without attracting attention, as she would have to pass through the room in which the two men sat. There was no one to whom she could hand the letter, and yet before the swindlers left the office the important document was on its way to the surrogate, and when the lawyer and his client arrived in court they found that all their wicked plans had come to naught.

A ROMANCE OF THE U. S. NAVY (Nov. 6).—A foolish quarrel with his sweetheart and a desire for adventure caused a young man to enlist in the United States Navy. Soon after his departure his fiancee learned that she had treated him unjustly, but was unable to get any trace of him. The young woman was a teacher in a school for deaf mutes. A year later the warships of the United States Navy gathered in the North River, and there was a great land parade, at which the girl was one of the spectators. Among the men who marched by her she saw with delight the man she loved. She followed him to his ship and there were mutual explanations and forgiveness.

On the day the fleet sailed the young sailor and his sweetheart lunched together. In the other end of the room far from all the other guests were three foreign looking men. They were whispering together and the girl watched them. Because of her ability to read the lip, she was able to understand everything they said. They were discussing a plot to blow up the ships of the fleet as they passed out to sea. The girl told the facts to her sweetheart, and two followed the conspirators to a lonely hut near the Narrows. There while the conspirators were inside waiting, the young sailor located the wires leading to the hidden mine, dived into the water and severed them. After taking other precautions he returned to the ship, where his statement of what had happened caused him to be warmly commended.

On an eminence near the hut one of the conspirators stood watching. Suddenly he turned and ran into the building with the news that the fleet was in range of the mines. Exultantly the conspirators touched the button. To their amazement the big warships were sailing majestically along and there were no signs of any explosion. Frantically they overhauled their apparatus, but suddenly there was an interruption. A number of policemen dashed into the shack and placed the cursing conspirators under arrest.

On the deck of one of the finest warships was a young sailor who looked back toward the land and waved his cap with a smile. On the shore was a young girl who returned his greeting happily, knowing that in less than a year the man whom she loved would be home again to claim her as his bride.

PALS (Dec. 2).—Employed on the ranch of Thomas Wells is old man Dan Matthews. Virginia, the three-year-old baby of Tohmas and Kathleen Wells, is a constant companion to the old man and they are pals. Thomas Wells has discharged from the ranch a workman named Henry Willis and his man Steve Johnson, for which act they both hold a grudge against the ranch owner. The time has also arrived when he finds himself compelled to let Dan Matthews go. His wife pleads with him, but he is obdurate and after giving to old Dan a worn-out cayuse, Wells tells him he can use him no longer.

After the departure of old Dan, the wife of the rancher is busy about household tasks and gives no attention to little Virgie. The little one is lonely without her "pal" and, unable to find him in the accustomed places about the house and ranch, she goes to seek him in the open country. Her search continues until she is worn out and night finds her asleep upon the open range. Henry Willis and his man are looking for a place in which to camp for the night and come upon the sleeping child of Thomas Wells. They pick up the sleeping child and proceed to camp under a nearby tree, on the brow of a hill and near the spot where old Dan is resting. He is hidden from them by a slight undulation of the range and his moody thoughts are suddenly interrupted by the sound of strange voices.

At the ranch house all is confusion over the missing child, and a posse, headed by the father, starts out in search. They find traces of her little feet and follow them. Now thoroughly aroused the old man cautiously creeps upon the two men, who are planning their dastardly revenge. Dan fires a shot which kills the companion of Henry Willis, then charges upon Willis in an effort to rescue the little pal of other days. A struggle ensues, in which old Dan is worsted, but an opportune shot from the leader of the posse lays low the villainous Willis. The posse come upon old Dan and little Virgie in an embrace of greeting. The little one is given into the keeping of her father and the "boys" place old Dan upon a horse and gently lead him back to the ranch house, where an anxious mother waits. The child is given to her amid shouts from the cowboys and old Dan is given a rousing welcome and the assurance that he will never need for anything as long as the father and mother of little Virgie live.

THE ANIMAL WITHIN (Dec. 5).—In a lonely region of the Mojave Mountains lives Anne Carey with her son, Jonothan. One day while Jonothan is going to the city for their weekly supplies, he comes upon the hut of Jane Stevens, just at the noon hour, and seats himself under a tree near her home to eat his lunch. Upon his return to his home that night his mother notices in his actions an attitude of indifference. While in the town, Jonothan had made the purchase of a shawl and some ribbons as a gift to his mother, but in passing the hut of Jane Stevens on his way home she had come out and asked him to give her the ribbon instead of taking it home to his mother. These actions had been carefully watched from ambush by Hal Evers, an admirer of the woman, and he is filled with jealousy.

Jonothan goes to see Jane often and becomes more and more infatuated with her. The mother follows him one day to ascertain his destination and when she learns the truth her heart is filled with misgivings for her boy. The mother goes to the woman and pleads for her son, but an obdurate ear is turned to her entreaties.

Jane Stevens has a vain nature and desires more gold with which to purchase finery of attire. She devises a scheme with Hal Evers for a daring hold-up of the stage coach and plans to use the unsophisticated for a dupe. The woman unfolds her plans to Jonothan and persuades him to commit the deed. At the opportune time and when the "haul" will be sufficient to justify their ends, Jonothan is given the signal by the wicked Jane and he perpetrates the robbery. In his flight he seeks and finds shelter in the hut of the woman. He gives her the booty. The woman espies the posse in the distance and quickly hurries Jonothan out of the hut toward a clump of underbrush. The posse ride up to the door of the hut and the woman points to the brush, thereby betraying the hiding place of the man who had given more than his life to satisfy her sinful vanity. Jonothan turns, and seeing the posse in pursuit, rushes toward his home. The posse follow him to his home and tear him from the arms of his mother. A suddenly awakened realization comes to Anne Carey that the entire wrong going of her son is due to the influence of Jane Stevens and the "animal within" her is fired into action. Taking a rifle from the wall of the cabin she rushes to the hut of the woman. Her arrival at the hut occurs during a violent quarrel between Jane Stevens and Hal Evers, who has come to her for his share of the booty. During the disagreement Jane aims a gun at Hal and shoots him. The mother of the wronged Jonothan now rushes upon Jane making a scathing denouncement of the mischief she has wrought and shoots her upon her own door step without a quaver.

BLUDSOE'S DILEMMA. (Dec. 7).—Bill Hawkins with his latest sweetheart, Anita, the Spanish dancer, came from the dance hall with Anita lovingly leaning on his arm. Iola, an Indian maid of fierce passions, saw the loving pair and in jealous rage followed them to Hawkins' cabin. John Bludsoe, on his claim some two miles from his cabin, made a rich strike. He hurried home, told his wife, had a hasty dinner, concealed the treasure in a trap door beneath the floor and went again to work. Mrs. Bludsoe then devoted her efforts toward putting the little child to sleep. Bludsoe's strike had been witnessed by Hawkins who followed him and, through Bludsoe's window, saw the gold secreted. After Bludsoe's departure, Hawkins crept through the window and made short work of the treasure. In an adjoining room, Mrs. Bludsoe heard the noise, and coming into the living room, at once grappled with Hawkins. The child, awakened by the struggle, asked who was there, and with Hawkin's gun at her throat, Mrs. Bludsoe was compelled to reply. "It is your father." She fought again and fell with a bullet in her side.

Hawkins, with the gold, hurried from the house, little knowing that the jealous eyes of Iola, his discarded lover, were upon him. He went straight by the sheriff's window and dropped a missive, asking the sheriff to go straight to Bludsoe's cabin. Gathering a posse, the sheriff did so just in time to find Bludsoe kneeling beside his injured wife. The child, in answer to the sheriff's question, said that the father had been with Mrs. Bludsoe, and on this evidence the posse made ready to lynch Bludsoe. Then Iola interfered and the posse gave chace to Hawkins.

But Iola had preceded them. Arriving at Hawkins' cabin, she entered without knocking and found Anita and Hawkins examining their spoils. Blocking the door, she bade Hawkins flee and then drawing her dangerous knife gave battle to Anita. Anita, with quick Spanish wit, slipped behind the table, drawing her dagger as she did so. A royal battle followed, the forms of the feminine combatants, one torn with wounded pride and jealousy, the other threatened with frightful death rocked to and fro across the floor. Just as Iola bent her antaginist across her knee for the death stroke, the posse entered. Anita slipped away, Iola sheathed her knife and followed the posse.

In the meantime Hawkins, with the aid of a rope, had let himself over a dangerous precipice. The sharp edge of the rock bit through the hemp and when his body dangled mid-way, it broke. The posse found a mangled heap of human flesh at the foot of the great divide and wended its way to the Bludsoe cabin, where they found Mrs. Bludsoe smiling happily into the eyes of her husband.

THE MATROMONIAL EXPRESS (Dec. 3).—A decidedly handsome lady of the blond persuasion with a feminine companion whose looks are hardly so inviting, find themselves in the same railroad car with Andrew Forbes. Mr. Forbes, thereupon enters a desperate flirtation with the blond lady, which is equally desperately received, the desperation being mostly caused by the Argus-eyed companion who seems to take diabolical pleasure in thwarting their attempts at intimacy. There is a very ingenious courtship carried on through transoms and in the dining car, and especially noteworthy are the feet to promote acquaintance. They reach a tunnel and Mr. Forbes with an audacity quite commensurate with the worthiness of the cause, attempts to kiss the blond lady. Tunnels have an unpleasant way of being dark, however, and he plants his affectionate kiss on the unsympathetic lips of the companion, who is angry enough to bite him. The two ladies and Forbes get off at the same station, but they are whisked out of sight in an automobile before he can trace them. Forbes then goes on to his destination, his uncle's suburban home. His uncle is importunate that Forbes become married and says that he has the lady all picked out for him and that today she will come for inspection. Forbes, making a very wry face at the idea of being "sicked" on to an unknown woman in this manner, as his thoughts are still occupied with the fair charmer of the express. It soon turns out to be the matrimonial express, however, and the very lady selected by his uncle for the lucrative position of his wife is the same as she with whom he had so desperately flirted on the train.

THE RAFFLE (Dec. 4).—Dela Hart and her husband, who are in danger of becoming hopelessly estranged, find a new interest in each other through the medium of a lottery ticket and a set of furs. Dela has an ardent admirer who wishes to present her with the furs. He secures a bogus lottery ticket and gives it to her. The furs are to be the result of the winning number on the ticket. All goes as expected. Dela gives the ticket to her husband and asks him to bring home whatever she has won. Unexpected complications result when Mr. Hart presents the furs to his pretty stenographer and brings home a book to his wife as the result of her winning. However, all ends well, and Dela and her husband really begin to become acquainted with each other.

THE FACE AT THE WINDOW (Dec. 6).—Nina Auvray's childhood and youth have been lonely—spent with an eccentric and miserly old uncle. The house they occupy is an old-time dilapidated mansion. Old Auvray dies suddenly. No will can be found. Nina is compelled to advertise the old home. A fine fellow buys the place, while Nina engages board in the village.

Nina pines for the old house. At times she creeps up the hill and tearfully gazes at the closed windows and doors. Once, looking wearily about, she enters the house and goes through the rooms. Finally, overcome, she throws herself on the sofa and has a cry. It is here the new tenant finds her. Thus their acquaintance starts. Young Grey immediately sets about the repair of the old home and grounds. Two or three hands about the place he retains. One fellow, surly, and a hard drinker, Grey learns to distrust. After repeated and kind warnings regarding drunkenness, Lem Casey is discharged. He leaves cursing Grey.

Nina one day is roaming through the woods, when she overhears Casey and a pal cursing and talking. Casey has planned to shoot Grey that night, and is gloating over the fact that Grey always sits by his desk, writing, within direct range of the south window. Nina, terrified, runs straight to her old home, waits for Grey to return, and in an ecstasy of terror and tears tells him all she has heard. Grey telephones for a couple of officers. Together they fix up a dummy at Grey's desk. Grey and the men hide in the thicket. Darkness falls. Lem Casey approaches. He shoots. Casey turns to flee, but is knocked down by the man he supposed he had murdered. The next day, in locating the bullet, a secret panel is discovered, containing the lost will. Nina is a rich woman, and all ends happily.

MAJESTIC.

AN OLD LOVE LETTER (Nov. 24).—In a family of four girls the youngest sister, Maud, is sixteen. Maud's mother runs a boarding house, and John Bruce makes his home with the family, falling in love with Maud's oldest sister, Dolly. Bruce is shy, and cannot nerve himself to tell Dolly of his love. He writes her a note in which he asks her to be his wife, giving it to the maid to deliver. Little sister Maud loves Bruce, but is never even allowed to talk to him. She makes a confidante of the maid, and they scheme between them to spoil Dolly's love affair. The maid gives Bruce's letter of proposal to Dolly, but Maud gets possession of it later and, putting it in a fresh envelope, gives it to each one of her sisters in turn. They each think that Bruce has made them an offer of marriage, and rush to their mother with the glad news, only to discover that he has proposed to each of them. The result is disastrous to Bruce, and he leaves town without getting a hearing. Maud repents and tries to get him to remain, but without success. However, she succeeds in making him see that he has overlooked the prize sister of them all, and three years later, when he returns to claim her as his bride, he meets the three sisters, walking with their husbands, each wheeling a bouncing baby.

SHOCKING HER FUTURE MOTHER-IN-LAW. (Nov. 26).—Archie Calvert, the son of aristocratic and sedate parents, is in love with Zelda Thorps, a light opera prima donna. The following morning Archie who is at a medical college receives a letter from his mother in which she asks him to bring his fiancee for Sunday dinner, Mrs. Calvert's idea being that the high-class deportment of herself and daughter and the supposedly vulgar personality of Zelda will wean her son's infatuation away from the primi donna. Archie calls upon Zelda and, after telling her of his mother's high mindedness, she has her maid dress her up as a typictl chorus girl. She appears thus arrayed before the mother of Archie, who is greatly shocked and orders her from the house. Just before dinner, she discards her disguise and appears as a plainly dressed young lady, with no other jewelry except her engagement ring, much to the pleasure of Mrs. Calvert. After dinner Archie and Zelda withdraw from the house and go for a stroll. As they are leaving the veranda they discover Nora and Dennis, the Calvert footman, whispering sweet nothings into each other's ears. As they walk away unseen, Archie promises that if Dennis can win Nora, their future shall be the care of Zelda and himself.

PUNCH.

THE TWO CHEFS (Dec. 5).—Jacques and Jules, rival chefs, are rivals in love as well as in business, and Jeanette, their buxom idol, is torn between the two. Jacques has the ascendency, because of the student patronage he holds by virtue of a marvelous sauce for chicken which he prepares from an inherited recipe, kept profoundly secret. Success spoils Jacques, however, and Jeanette, becoming jealous of a little singer who is mocking Jacques' airs, steals the famous recipe, knowing its secret hiding place, and gives it to Jules. Thereupon all of the students flock over to Jules, and Jeanette, with many shrugs, follows the crowd. The darkest hour has arrived for Jacques.

Jules, however, is ungrateful, and does not trust Jeanette with the secret of his hiding place, which, of course, makes her angry. So one day, while Jules is preparing the sauce, she brings Jacques to the kitchen, and in the struggle which ensues for possession of the precious document it falls into the fire and burns. Both are desolated. Jules begins at once to berate Jeanette, whereupon Jacques, by his gallantry in protecting her, wins Jeanette back to himself and bears her off in triumph to his own kitchen. There, under the inspiration of her presence, he regains heart and, being persuaded by her, decides to try to make the marvelous sauce without the recipe. Monsieur Gerome passes upon the sauce's verity for the students, and success comes again to stay forever with Jacques, who thus triumphs doubly over his hated rival, Jules.

HIS DRESS SUIT (Dec. 5).—Handsome Harry is deeply in love with Mabel, who is very fond of flowers. He buys her presents and spends money so freely that he finds himself financially embarrassed. But Mabel must have flowers, so Harry takes his dress suit, which is his joy and pride, and pawns it. With the proceeds he buys a beautiful bunch of flowers and takes them to Mabel's house. She is delighted, and Harry is very satisfied until he learns that he cannot attend her party that evening unless he bas a dress suit. Harry is visited by joy and gloom so often that the little fellows become quite friendly with him.

WILLIE'S TICKER (Nov. 22).—Willie receives a watch from his uncle, and is immediately possessed of a desire to make every clock in the town agree with his own. This, of course, leads to the discovery of several chronological inexactitudes, and Willie is obliged to climb into some funny places to set these matters right. When he has either corrected or demolished every clock in the town, he is obliged to call upon his uncle to protect him from the onslaughts of the infuriated townsfolk.

THE DIARY OF A BAD BOY (Nov. 29).—Uncle Toby determines to catch the thief who has stolen his eggs out of the chicken run. He nails two man traps into a couple of boards and places them in the run. His nephew is soon caught in the traps. With the traps upon his feet the young hopeful hastens off through the town. Thinking to hide in a packing case, the culprit jumps in. Unfortunately the boards just fit the box, and he is nailed in by the packers. This leads to a journey to a far distant port which is never reached, for the vessel is wrecked in a tempest and the bad lad is landed upon a cannibal island.

GRATEFUL HENRY (Nov. 29).—An unfortunate individual befriends Tired Henry, and thus incurs his everlasting and very embarrassing gratitude. Henry will not leave his benefactor, and shows his gratitude in a most amusing manner.

HIS SQUAW (2 Reels) (Dec. 4).—Jim Hale is engaged to a pretty girl, Irene Smith, and goes West to search for gold. After enduring many privations he finally strikes a promising vein of rock, and spends his last money for powder to blast with. A terrific explosion rends the mountain side, revealing no yellow metal. Despondent and discouraged, Jim writes to his sweetheart, releasing her from her engagement and bidding her good-bye forever, and goes on his way. In his abstraction he becomes lost in the desert and suffers from the blistering rays of the sun and raging thirst. In a dying condition he is found by the Indians, who bring him back to health, and Jim marries an Indian girl and becomes a fur trader.

Irene Smith and her father go in search of Jim, joining an emigrant train. The Indians plan to capture the train, and Jim determines to prevent the massacre of the whites. His squaw aids him in this, and he reaches the emigrants and leads the women and children to a distant fort, while the men remain to guard the horses, oxen and equipment. The meeting between Jim and Irene is pathetic, Jim confessing his marriage. A terrible battle takes place between the whites and the Indians, while Jim leads the soldiers to the scene. They arrive too late, as they find nothing but the smoking ruins of the camp. The squaw, thinking her husband is among the slain, determines to avenge Jim's death, and during the night enters the chief's tent and kills him. She is caught by the squaws, who beat her and throw her over a cliff. She painfully drags herself to the door of the cabin, where Jim finds her, and she expires in his arms. The picture ends with a silhouette dissolving scene after a title, "The call of the blood," showing Jim riding slowly back to civilization—and Irene.

PAT'S DAY OFF (Dec. 2).—Pat comes home with a jag on and only part of his pay in his pocket. A stormy argument ensues, in which the neighbors and the policeman on the beat are brought in, but Bridget scatters the inquisitive ones with a pan of dish water. Pat wanders off and stumbles over an open man-hole in the street, and decides to be revenged, so he scrawls a note to Bridget that he has committed suicide by drowning himself in the man-hole, which is delivered to his wife by a boy. Bridget is overcome and becomes hysterical. The town constables on bicycles are called out, the police hurry to the scene, and the fire department lends its aid. A great crowd gathers about the man-hole and heroic policemen, with ropes tied about their waists, plunge into the dark depths in search of Pat. In the meantime Pat has been having the time of his life "rushing the growler," and his attention is attracted by the mob about the man-hole. Unsteadily he makes his way into their midst, and the angry firemen and police lay violent hands on him but are driven off by the valiant Bridget, who leads her spouse home.

BROWN'S SEANCE (Dec. 2).—Brown and his friends take an afternoon off, spending their time with some pretty chorus girls. Their wives persuade them to go to a spiritualist meeting and the Medium makes the startling announcement that a man present is not true to his wife. The women demand the name of the man, and she refuses to answer questions in the meeting but promises to do so at a private seance next morning. At the appointed hour the wives arrive, and Brown and his friends try to hush up the Medium, but she makes them pay dearly for her statement to their wives that their husbands are true to them.

"AT THE RISK OF HIS LIFE."—Tom Nelson had married Rose in a little country town, where she was the popular belle. Jim Mason, who had been his rival, brooded over the fact greatly. Some time after the wedding Jim meets Tom and invites him into a saloom for a drink. Tom reluctantly enters, and one drink leads to another, until Jim is finally compelled to bring Tom home to his bride in an intoxicated condition.

Tom's employers have a strict rule that if any of their employees are discovered carrying intoxicating liquors into the factory they will be dismissed. Jim, knowing of this rule, manages to place a bottle of whiskey in Tom's coat, and then informs the superintendent that one of his men is violating the rules of the factory. Tom is discharged, and as there are no other factories in the town, he decides upon going to New York. During his absence Jim calls upon Rose and tries to convince her that Tom is a drunkard and will never amount to much. Indignant at this unjust accusation Rose flaunts a letter in Jim's face from her husband, in which he tells Rose of a good position he has, and asks her to join him in New York. Rose joins her husband, and the young couple are soon blessed with a baby girl. When Tom meets Jim in New York, he forgets all their old rivals meet often after this, and Tom's brain becomes fogged from the liquor he consumes in his nightly trips with Jim. When too late, he realizes that his position is in danger, and he eventually finds himself walking the streets penniless and his wife and baby ill. Tom, in his aimless search for work, meets Jim and is persuaded to make a trip to Governor's Island. They arrive upon the day that the Government officials are to make a test of throwing dynamite bombs from a balloon. When the aeronaut learns that he must carry 120 pounds of dynamite, he refuses to make the ascent. Jim conceives the diabolical scheme of getting rid of Tom forever and have Rose collect the large reward offered by the Government. He plays upon Tom's poverty and love for his wife and baby and finally persuades him to offer to go up in the balloon and carry the 120 pounds of dynamite. While he is making arrangements with the officials to pay the money to his wife in case death overtakes him, Jim steals a slow fuse which is lying in the dynamite box and ties it to the dynamite sacks. Just as the balloon starts to ascend, Jim, on the pretense of shaking hands, touches the fuse with his lighter cigar. As the balloon ascends to a height of 200 feet, a bag of sand becomes loose and drops upon the head of Jim, killing him instantly. When the balloon reaches a height of 1000 feet, the anxious watchers on the ground become horror stricken as a cloud of smoke envelops the balloon and a second later they are deafened by a explosion. From the midst of this flaming inferno a body is seen coming to earth. When within 100 feet of the water, the parachute which had been attached to Tom's belt opens, and, although saved from the frightful fall, he is still in danger of drowning. Hurriedly a nearby tug is pressed into service and Tom is pulled from the river unconscious but alive. With the money obtained from the Government, he returns to his native town with his wife and baby and again becomes a respected member of the community.

SELIG

SELIG FIVE-A-WEEK.

Dec. 2nd.

THE FIRE COP

Another thrilling and sensational fire drama. This picture is one of the best Selig has ever done in this line. The story involves a policeman who became a hero in spite of himself. A triple rescue from the roof of a burning building is one of the features. About 1,000 ft. DON'T MISS THIS ONE.

Dec. 3rd.

THE MANTLE OF RED EVANS

This is one of those rare westerns in which the comedy predominates, although there are many dramatic scenes of exceptional thrill. The story relates the experiences of a young eastern man who is mistaken for a famous bad man. About 1,000 feet.

Dec. 4th.

WHEN HELEN WAS ELECTED

A riotous farce-comedy founded on a well-known woman's rights movement. The situations that develop are funny in the extreme and your audience will roar with laughter. Exceptionally well played by Selig's best comedians. About 1,000 ft.

THE INVINCIBLE PROGRAM.

Dec. 5th. A FREIGHT-TRAIN DRAMA

Railroad stories are ever popular. This is one of the best in recent years. It tells of the regeneration of one "Bill" Mogroity, who thought that he preferred tramp life to honest employment. The climax is a veritable sensation. About 1,000 ft.

Dec. 6th. JOHN COLTER'S ESCAPE

A drama of the northwestern coast backwoods. Adapted from Washington Irving's "Astoria." The hero's escape from the tortuous Blackfeet Indians affords one of the best thrills of the season. On the same reel with—

A QUESTION OF HAIR

An excellent split-reel comedy. Combined length about 1,000 ft.

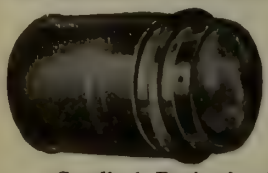
Gundlach Projection Lenses Guarantee You the Sharpest and Most Brilliant Picture it is Possible to Produce.

If you want to improve your picture just order a lens for trial subject to approval and see the result with your own eyes. If you give the height and width of the screen, the size of the picture wanted and the distance from the machine to the centre of the screen we can furnish a lens of the exact focus for your operating conditions.



Many Exhibitors have found it an advantage to ask our advice about lenses before equipping new Theatres. Do not be afraid of a long throw. No matter what the distance is to the screen we can supply lenses of suitable focus and great illuminating power. All the best theatres in Rochester use our lenses and every customer has been satisfied of their superiority to ordinary lenses. THE LENS MAKES THE PICTURE, and you cannot get the best result out of the film unless you use Gundlach Lenses.

You can order through any Film Exchange or Dealer in Motion Picture Supplies.

Gundlach Projection Lenses will be furnished to order with the following machines subject to a little higher price than ordinary lenses: Powers Cameragraph, The Motiograph, The Simplex, The American Standard, The Edison. Our Lenses are used by the Kinemacolor Co. and a large number of the finest theatres in the United States and Canada.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THIS WONDERFUL INVENTION

Here is just what the Moving Picture Man has long been looking for. A truly wonderful invention; it thoroughly cleans your films, removes every particle of dust and oil and makes the films show CLEAR AND BRIGHT AS NEW. Has been tested from coast to coast and has CERTAINLY MADE GOOD. Clearer pictures mean more satisfied patrons. And that means increased business and MORE MONEY FOR YOU. The very best investment you can make, costing but $10.00. Pads, $1.00 per 100.

SERVICE—Attention Exhibitors:

As in your business unexcelled service means positive success, so we, ourselves, must confess that our own is strongly fortified by working hand in hand with users of RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS. What we said last week was most assuredly worthy of your attention and bearing us out in that point we reproduce the following letter. A point, however—so many unscrupulous firms print false and distorted letters, also those given in return for free screens or cut prices, that we wish to say that never in our business career would we permit one letter or line to appear except where it could stand on its own merit absolutely.

Write Mr. Stanton—we are willing to pay $1,000 to charity if it is not true from beginning to end.

November 7, 1912.

Gentlemen:—Let me take this opportunity to thank you for the splendid piece of repair work on my curtain. After a year of service my curtain was injured by carelessness on part of my employes, but the injuries so sustained are not noticeable now.

I can cheerfully recommend your Radium Gold Fibre Screens to any picture theatre manager in the world, and do not hesitate to say that there is a tremendous difference between pictures shown upon it and those shown upon other screens.

You are at liberty to use my name as a reference at all times and I assure you that any inquiries I receive concerning your curtain will be answered truthfully and honestly.

Again thanking you for your prompt attention given me, I am,

Very truly yours.

Signed, M. A. STANTON,

HIS ONEROUS DUTY COMPLETED, FORBES RESIGNS

THE SHERIFF PRO TEM

A reward is offered for knowledge of the whereabouts of Noel Sheldon, an old moonshiner who lives secluded with his pretty daughter, Rachel. Joe Tracy, who alone knows their abode, uses his knowledge as a weapon to force his love upon Rachel. Repulsed, he informs the Sheriff's office and young Forbes is appointed Sheriff "Pro Tem," and ordered to make the arrest. In the conflict Rachel is wounded, and Forbes, though his heart bleeds in pity for old Sheldon, is forced to jail him. The onerous duty completely breaks Forbes up and he resigns.

BUT ALL AGREE ON

POWER'S Cameragraph No. 6A

With their great strength and fighting mechanism they crush nations. POWER'S mechanism crushes all criticism, and its superior construction enables it to stand all tests.

The stamp of public approval has long since been placed on POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH, and to this there is added the favorable comments of Royalty.

The following news item is from the Vienna Extrablatt, one of the prominent newspapers of Austria :

RADY-MALLER, Incorporated
No. 1 Ward (Bezirk) Biberstrasse No. 15
Vienna, Austria

Mr. Maximilian Rady-Maller, who is the Proprietor and President of the above world known "Kino Film Co.," has exhibited a number of moving picture projecting mechanisms which are all well known as being the latest, and are on the foreground of really improved construction.

The Power's Cameragraph No. 6A, which is noiseless, flickerless and absolutely fireproof, attracted especially the attention of people who are interested as operators, and exhibitors; as well as other professionals.

During his visit to the Kino Exposition, His Imperial Highness, the Archduke Leopold Salvator, spoke in terms of the highest praise of the various mechanisms exhibited by the Ray-Waller Company and especially of the Power's Cameragraph No. 6A.

Our factory is the largest of its kind in the world; yet, working day and night, we cannot keep pace with the demand for POWER'S NO. 6A.

The trade recognizes the superiority of this machine; our patented loop setter device alone, which resets the lower loop automatically, is controlled by us; and is sufficient to place this machine in a class by itself. Let us send you catalogue G, giving complete details.

AURORA FLOYD

IN TWO REELS
TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10th

is Miss M. E. Braddon's world famous story of the wealthy girl who was won by her own groom and of the maelstrom of trouble into which the match brought her, including her trial for a murder she did not commit but for which she was sentenced to death. Most grown people know the story from reading the book or witnessing the play, and the picture is easy to advertise. Two one-sheets, a three-sheet, slides, cuts, heralds—of course. You know where, or if you forget we'll tell you.

SOLAX NIGHT

AT THE TOWN HALL IN BREWSTER, NEW YORK, ON FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 22nd. A NUMBER OF PERSONS CAME IN AUTOMOBILES. F. A. HOLMES, THE MANAGER OF THE SHOW, DECLARED THAT THERE WERE IN THE AUDIENCE A MILLIONAIRE AND HIS FAMILY AND OTHER WEALTHY PERSONS LIVING IN BREWSTER AND ITS ENVIRONS.

THE FOLLOWING RELEASES WERE EXHIBITED:

The New Love and the Old The Wooing of Alice

Making an American Citizen

Sealed Lips The Glory of Light His Double

These the exhibitor rented from the Empire branch of the Mutual Film Corporation of New York. After the performance all were enthusiastic. Mr. Holmes made more money on this occasion than at any one time in the five years he has been running attractions at the Town Hall. This isn't "guff." Ask Holmes and he'll tell you that Solax films "have the punch" and "bring in the coin."

"A DOUBLE REWARD"

One Reel, Released Wed., Dec. 11

A well acted western story in which a girl secures the man of her choice in a clever manner. Her sweetheart is a fugitive, though innocent of the charge against him. She captures him and secures the reward offered, then makes a prisoner of the real culprit by lassoing him in the woods, thus securing her lover's release. The father favors a wealthy easterner who is the accuser of the man she really loves, but she elopes with her sweetheart and secures parental forgiveness.

"HIS SENSE OF DUTY"

Two Reels, Released Wed., Dec. 18

A Masterpiece of Dramatic Effort and Spectacular Sensationalism

While the Colonel is away battling with the Indians, in which he is shown in sensational scenes, the private guards the honor of the Colonel's wife by interfering with a superior officer who is paying attentions to her. In a furious fight he lays his superior officer low, and with sealed lips accepts the verdict of the court-martial. The prisoner escapes during the excitement of an attack by Indians, and rescues the Colonel's little girl, and the dying officer is revived sufficiently to confess that the private was blameless in the fight between them.

"A MIDNIGHT ELOPEMENT"

Jim Smith and Sally Rice plan to elope, owing to her father's opposition to her marriage. A midnight meeting is arranged, and Jim has all prepared, including a waiting country justice, to tie the knot, but taps on the wrong window. Papa Rice pursues him with a shotgun, and as he gives up the race, owing to the stony ground and his bare feet, he takes a shot at Jim, wounding the Judge in the back. To square himself with the law Rice is compelled to consent to the marriage, while Jim soothes the irate Judge with a roll of money.

Let's Be Honest About

"RIP VAN WINKLE"

IN TWO PARTS

From Washington Irving's American Classic

Our Production Is Not the Only One, But We Claim It Is the Very Best!

It is best in point of story construction—it is incomparably better photography. In selection of backgrounds and settings the difference is overwhelmingly in its favor. It is enacted by the greatest Cinema Artists in the world.

It Is Best Upon Every Count

It is a subject which will always have the most favorable booking possibilities. It hasn't the momentary appeal—it has the eternal —You will always find bookings for it.

Sit down with your business judgment and common sense and figure out what scores of millions have not yet seen this greatest of all American stories. Think of the hundreds of theatres where it may be booked.

"Rip Van Winkle" is being sold at the very lowest figure ever quoted on a genuine feature. Its price is our vital clinching argument. It is the probable reason why you'll buy.

We have cut off our profit that you may make yours, for while profit is desirable to us, we realize that it is essential to you, the buyer.

This feature, like every Union Feature, is perfectly surrounded by advertising material. Three sheets and two ones, slides, heralds, booklets, cuts, photos, lobby display frames—in fact, everything any feature can profitably use.

ASK THE PRICE!

Write and inquire the price—that won't cost nor lose much of your time, and it will bring you an astonishing offer in return.

"THE SPHINX"

or, Love Under the Red Terror

IN A PROLOGUE AND TWO PARTS

BACKED BY OUR UNQUALIFIED RECOMMENDATION

And before our word goes back of a feature it must possess feature qualifications. It must contain, first—an unusual story—it must be perfectly cast and competently acted, it must have big scenes, scenes of an overwhelming swing of action, real settings, and the photography must be technically and artistically superior throughout every inch of film.

Such is "The Sphinx." It is a FEATURE—a tragic drama blended with a reproduction of the historical blood-run days of the French Revolution. It is as stupendous, as stirring as history itself, and as gripping as drama can possibly be.

BUYERS—You can book this subject steadily—daily. It will prove a genuine success with the public. Every exhibitor will willingly recommend it to the next renter—so profit is certain. What more can a feature possess?

Surrounded by the very finest of advertising matter.

AS GREAT AS ANY AND MUCH GREATER THAN MOST, IS

"The Ironmaster"

IN TWO PARTS

A STORY which has been read by all peoples of all nations—there's where your attendance comes in.

Written originally in French by Georges Ohnet, it has since been translated into practically every language.

It has a tremendous plot—but such a plot as works into the silent drama without a bit of loss in power.

It deals in striking contrast—those of the powerfully rich as opposed to those of the world-wide masses. It goes right down and in-and-among those who make up 90 per cent of the average attendance.

It contains the greatest factory scenes ever enacted and filmed—A mob scene that is a marvel of stage ensemble—the crowd fired by a seemingly real fury of violence. It is the biggest scene of any feature of today.

EVERYTHING which goes to advertise a feature and attract attendance is attached to this release.

Now Are You a Feature Speculator or Are You a Business Man Handling Features on a Basis of Certain Business Profit?

Isn't there something profitably convincing—something bankably certain in dealing with a successful company?—The company which today is selling far the greatest number of features? There's a reason for our success—It lies in the features we sell. The features you should buy, if you mean to trail with success ARE

UNDERWRITERS' TYPE "B"

The final test of a motion picture machine lies in its ability to project steady, clear-cut pictures while it is subjected to ceaseless grinding. To do that it must be built simply and only the best materials can be used. The Edison, the pioneer moving picture machine, is built to last. Countless experiments have shown just what materials are best suited for each part and each part is thoroughly tested before it is placed in the machine. Hardened steel is used in the Edison where there is the greatest strain. Everywhere there is the greatest possible care taken to prevent wear. Buy an Edison and let that "One Moment Please" sign gather dust on your shelf.

The exceptionally high grade lens used on the Edison gives the clear, sharp picture that your audience has a right to demand. The well-balanced mechanism gives freedom from flickers.

Get an Edison, save repair bills and hold your patrons.

"THE CROOKED PATH"

A STORY OF THE UNDERWORLD

"THE CROOKED PATH"

SPECIAL LITHO. POSTERS—1 Sheet (new price) 10c.; 3 Sheets, 35c.; 6 Sheets, 65c.

A valuable watch and money stolen from a banker by Dan Lyons results in the arrest and conviction of the crook. While his sweetheart, Nell Harris, sits alone in the park reading of the long prison sentence given her lover, she is approached by a young clergyman, Edward Kimball, who questions her regarding her trouble. Nell admits her wrong deeds and tells him of her desire to follow the straight and narrow path. Kimball takes her to his blind mother and soon grows to love her. They become engaged and Nell is very happy. Dan Lyons in his prison cell succeeds in communicating with his pals by means of a note tied to a rat's tail and receives a supply of saws with which he effects his escape. He changes his convict's suit for the old clothes of a scarecrow and arrives in the town in which Nell lives. He sends her a note asking her to return to the old life, but she refuses, and in revenge Lyons plans to rob the home of Edward Kimball. He and his pal are discovered and handed over to the police, and the minister accuses Nell of assisting in the robbery. She confesses her former associations with the crook and is forgiven by her fiancé, who promises to shield her from all future evils of the Crooked Path.

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

Nell Harris, of the Underworld	Ormi Hawley
Dan Lyons, a crook	John Halliday
Spike Edwards, his pal	Clarence Elmer
Edward Kimball, a young clergyman	Edwin August
Mrs. Kimball, his mother	Mary Stuart Smith

"STRUGGLE OF HEARTS" — Tuesday, December 3rd

John Carnes, an escaped convict, is assisted to a more worthy life by Rodney Ford, a minister. Inadvertently he falls in love with his benefactor's fiancée and she with him. It is a big struggle between love and conscience all around, but love wins in the end and the noble minister brings about the union of the lovers.

"TWIXT LOVE AND AMBITION" — Thursday, December 5th

John Sterne and Marie Wayne are admirable sweethearts, but the girl adopts the operatic stage and they are separated. Years pass and one summer Marie rents a cottage which by chance is near John's country home. She accidentally becomes acquainted with a little boy who is John's ward and nephew. "The Lady of the Hills," as she is called, saves the boy's life and John, unconscious of her identity, goes to her house and finds his old love. The meeting is joyful and they agree never to part again.

A SPLIT REEL FOR FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6th

"HIS FATHER'S CHOICE" 664 Feet — Friday, December 6th

Jack Halsted is in love with Gertrude Terry, a beautiful but rather poor girl. His father objects and threatens to cut him off. Jack takes Gertrude to Mrs. Robbins, a mutual friend. They tell their troubles and do much weeping. Presently the father comes in and seeing the girl, recognizes a young lady who had much impressed him at a society function. The scene ends with "God bless you my children."

"LOCKED OUT" 339 Feet — Friday, December 6th

Jones rents an apartment to Mr. and Mrs. Grim, but finds it hard to collect. One night Jones and his wife hear noises which induce them to think that their tenants are about to skip. Jones rushes down the street in his pajamas to keep watch. The door slams and he is locked out. He sees someone coming and hides in a big hamper, which is promptly lifted into the wagon, with the Grims belongings. He is carried to the new apartments. Being discovered half dead, he begs to be sent home and is willing to cancel the rent.

"A SOLDIER'S FURLOUGH" — Saturday, December 7th

Private Robert Adair, getting a ten days' furlough, visits his sick mother, who dies. Adair leaves his young brother Tom in care of Reco, an old friend, and starts to rejoin his regiment. A Squaw-man and two Indians try to rob the Reco home and the Squaw-man shoots Tom. Reco pursues Robert and informs him of the deed. The soldier returns and after a terrible fight kills the Squaw-man and carries the body to the fort.

"A LUCKY FALL" — Monday, December 9th

Jack Hollingsworth and his partner go out for a prospecting trip. As they are away several days, Kate, Jack's wife, goes out prospecting on her own account and strikes a claim that is very rich. She takes some of the quartz to an assayer, who tells her it is only worth $30 to the ton and is about to buy the claim for $150, when Jack and Will arrive and discover that the quartz is worth $3,000 to the ton. They are just in time to save Kate from a crooked deal.

Facts and Comments

THE ridiculing of national peculiarities seems to us to be always in bad taste. In our big cities with their cosmopolitan population it is not only bad taste but equally bad judgment and policy to caricature the foibles and oddities of any particular nationalities. On the speaking stage this evil had some years ago become intolerable and evoked well-deserved rebukes from the nationalities which seemed to be the chief targets of the "playwrights." There came a change for the better and to-day the folly of lampooning men for their nationality is recognized by all sensible writers and managers. The film producers have with rare exceptions steered clear of this form of "comedy." They realize that the exhibitor can make neither money nor friends by wounding the sensibilities of any portion of his audience. A picture recently made shows the ridiculous antics of an Irishman who has become rich suddenly. There can be no objection to showing the foolish things that are often done by the newly rich. The chances are that a newly rich Irishman would act very much like a newly rich Frenchman or American. If the producer had contented himself with characterizing instead of caricaturing the Irishmen there would have been no objection. Indeed one of the classics of the more boisterous sort of comedies "Mr. O'Brien in Society" is still remembered with pleasure by all who saw it. This other and newer picture aims not so much at ridiculing the follies of the newly rich as at ridiculing the Irish race. Such at least is the opinion of an exhibitor of considerable intelligence and experience. This exhibitor has complained that the exhibition of the picture in his theater caused great dissatisfaction. "There was not a laugh in the house," he said speaking of the reel in question, "and after the show was over many patrons stopped to speak to me and denounced the picture as an unwarranted libel upon the Irish people."

It is quite possible that the producer meant no harm and that he was simply following out what he conceived to be an uproariously funny idea. His fault may have been due to thoughtlessness rather than to any deliberate design to wound the feelings of the Irish people. It is quite possible too that the complaining patrons were too sensitive. We are always willing to believe, that the other fellow is too sensitive when he feels hurt at our jokes, but we take an entirely different view of things if we ourselves are made the butt of ridicule. Whatever the motive of the producer of this film the result is deplorable. There is no need for this kind of pictures. Their humor at best is one-sided and humor to be really pleasing must be universal and appeal to everybody.

BUT three months have passed since the National Convention of the organized exhibitors at Chicago. These months have been marked by a ceaseless and well-directed activity on the part of the organizing forces. The League is to-day truly national in character. At the convention in Chicago the East was represented by New York and New Jersey; at the next convention all of New England will be represented. Heretofore the League was disproportionately strong in some sections of the country and disproportionately weak in other sections. The actions and resolutions of the next convention will therefore be entitled to the greatest respect. Not only the industry in all its branches will follow the deliberations and all the steps of the convention with the closest interest, but the public at large cannot fail to be impressed with the doings of a convention which represents every important state of the Union. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD hails with special satisfaction the election of Mr. Joseph Mack as president of the Massachusetts league. Mr. Mack has been one of the pioneers of the moving pictures and few exhibitors have striven more earnestly and more consistently for the uplift of the exhibiting profession.

It is likewise highly gratifying to every friend of the motion picture to note the grounds upon which the president of the national organization, Mr. Neff, urges the necessity of organization. He pleads for the elevation of the business, which in his judgment can be accomplished best by a thorough organization of the exhibitors. Mr. Neff in his addresses dwells on the educative mission of the cinematograph and knows how to emphasize the fact that the exhibitors are "amusing, entertaining and instructing millions." His repeated declarations that the exhibitors themselves must exert all their powers to banish "immoral and suggestive" pictures are well-timed and have everywhere been applauded by the exhibitors. Exhibitors of course expect to derive great and immediate benefits from their organizations; relief against hostile legislation or the enactment of fairer and more liberal laws, redress against an unjust censorship and a campaign of education against the enemies of the motion picture in the daily press and out of it. The keynote of the situation has, however, been struck by Mr. Neff in his plea for a higher standard. If this standard can be attained and then kept up the other things will follow in the natural order of consequences.

ONE of the present dangers to the reputation of the motion picture is the cheap and flashy "feature" film. There are now a dozen or more of these films, some made here and some made abroad, and all of them making their appeal to the lowest grade of taste and intelligence. As a rule these alleged "features" have been made with very little expense; a lurid and ultra-sensational title is selected to attract th. crowd. What the feelings of the audience are after they have seen one of these "sensational" affairs is a matter of great indifference to the manufacturer who pockets his rental or his percentage and cares very little whether the exhibitor is harmed or benefited. It would seem good sound policy for exhibitors to insist on seeing every feature film which they are asked to book in their houses. There is more than one case on record where an exhibitor attracted by the title of an alleged "feature" film trusted to the representations of the booking agents only to regret his credulity after the first reel was run before his audience.

Are Sacred Pictures "Irreverent"?

By W. Stephen Bush

A GREAT deal of discussion has always surrounded the question as to whether it is proper to present sacred subjects in moving pictures. Most of this discussion was focused about the Passion Play. As the exhibitors all over the country will soon be called upon to answer arguments against cinematographic presentations of films portraying the life of Christ, it seems advisable to consider the subject in these columns and to furnish the exhibitors with counter arguments.

Let us begin the consideration of the subject with a solid historical fact which will be admitted by everybody. Here is the fact: The dramatic representation of sacred persons and events was common in the early Middle Ages, and continued in some countries almost up to our own day. These plays were called "Miracle-Plays," and one of them is still a living force to-day; we are speaking of the Passion Play, which is presented every ten years at the little Bavarian village of Oberammergau. The text for these medieval "Miracle-Plays" were almost invariably furnished by priests, and the presentations were in almost every instance staged and directed by clergymen. It was the custom to present these plays on solemn occasions, sometimes political and sometimes ecclesiastical. The object was to arouse and stimulate the piety of the people and to add to their knowledge of sacred history. It may be assumed as a moral certainty that the motion picture, had it been known in those days, would have been called into service constantly. Now, whatever we may think of the middle ages, whether we hold that humanity in those days was happy or unhappy, it is very certain that medieval humanity was intensely pious and reverent. This piety and reverence speaks to us to-day in the churches and shrines and statues and paintings and sculpture of Italy, Spain, Germany, France and of what remains of the ancient church in the British Isles. One cannot read the history of those days and then look about him in this present world without realizing that there was more genuine charity, more honest belief and more spiritual life in 1500 than in 1900. It seems, therefore, almost ridiculous to have the men born and bred in this cynical and material age come forward and protest against exhibitions which were deemed laudable in an age when men and women showed the sincerity of their faith by a willingness to make sacrifices. I have the utmost tenderness for conscientious scruples, and I have no doubt whatever that many of the protests against sacred things in motion pictures are inspired by good motives and spring from a sincere conviction. It is, however, an undoubted fact, in history and in psychology, that minds given to this way of thinking are extremely prone to excess and possessed of unfortunate destructive tendency. The words "sacrilegious" and "blasphemous"—terrible words, which every human being should hesitate to use against the doings of another—roll from their lips with alarming readiness. In other words, men of this type border on the verge of fanaticism, which, if not restrained, has often led to mental aberration. We are not theorizing. History records the outbursts of iconoclasts (image breakers) and the irreparable damage they have done in Greece, in Italy, in Holland and England. There are men who are perfectly honest in their hatred of music or art, but that surely does not make them more amiable. We cannot find fault with temperamental weaknesses, which may be inherited. We do find fault, however, when such men attempt to impose their views upon us and ask the public authorities to assist them in the attempt. If a man regards the reverent presentation of sacred persons and events as wrong, it is his undoubted privilege to do so. No one can compel him to attend such exhibitions. When he tries, however, to prevent others from attending, not merely by persuasion but by an appeal to the police, he oversteps the bounds of fairness and moderation, and we have every right to object to him and resent his meddling.

With very few exceptions the manufacturers of moving pictures have a keen sense of what is sacred to all men. We have had some objectionable sectarian films, but nowhere can be found one single film deserving to be called irreligious. Blasphemy and sacrilege are becoming obsolete words in modern life because they denote a degree of moral degeneracy which borders upon madness. If we hold that the presentation of sacred persons and events either upon the stage or in moving pictures is proper and violates no moral law, our opponents may denounce us all they like as "blasphemous" and as "sacrilegious," but that does not make us so. We will listen with due courtesy and respect to all they wish to say and then reserve the right to depend on our own lights. If we honestly believe that such exhibitions are productive of good rather than evil, we need not be ashamed of ourselves.

The reproach is often heard that the exhibition of sacred moving pictures is objectionable because a price of admission is demanded. No doubt in an ideal state of things great churchmen and philanthropists would be coming forward, producing at their own proper expense wonderful cinematographic reproductions of the life of Christ and showing them to the people absolutely free of charge. I sincerely believe that money could not be put to better use. It is a fine thing to endow Bible Institutes and send missionaries with the good tidings into all parts of the world. The best missionary, however, is the motion picture. It speaks the universal language. If the churches cannot see that the motion picture may be made its greatest ally in the future and that religious propaganda for any purpose can best be furthered by a judicious use of the cinematograph, no one is to blame but the churches. Shall we wait until the churches come to the front with free pictures? Humanly speaking it will take many years before any such possibility can be seriously considered. Who shall in the mean time object to the filming of gospel events in the land of the gospel by a company of film producers who claim no connection with churches? If their work were done in a careless fashion, if their films showed a lack of proper reverence, the objection urged against their enterprise might have to be sustained. The facts show the contrary. No fair-minded person will say that the making of money was their only or even their principal object. They were looking for laurels no less than for dollars. When the churches are able to point to their own unselfish work their criticism of a more selfish ambition will be entitled to respect. Until then they have no right to find fault with a private enterprise which performed a most marvelous and laudable work destined to result in measureless good to humanity.

FRANK CRANE A CANUCK.

Writing Thanhouser friends from near Montreal, Canada, where he is producing for a Canadian picture company, Frank Crane, famous as Thanhouser's first leading man, says what they need more than a Screen Club up there is a Blanket Club. He says they should be worn "out on exteriors," during the taking of which "it's so cold that the film freezes onto the camera." Mrs. Crane is with her husband.

Edison Poetry, Pathos and Humor

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"It was the time when lilies blow
"And clouds are highest up in air."

What a relief to have a master hand like that of Lord Alfred Tennyson writing motion-picture subtitles!

"Lord Ronald brought a dappled doe
"To give his cousin, Lady Clare."

Thus begins the scenario of exquisite form and language so plain that all may picture it who read with minds not primitive. Here is melody in subtitles—the effect of their connection with artistic pictures is that of music—melody that stays by one, often running in and out of remembrance like a winning song once heard, and the lasting impression rather than the transitory one is that which causes people to talk about a play they have seen.

There is such a lot of foolishness about limiting the stage to scenery, screeches and strutting! People go to the theater to receive an impression, and it has already been proven that the voice, powerful as it is as a medium, may be dispensed with. The whole object of the play is that of transferring a sentiment to our breasts or an idea that deeply affects us, and it matters not how we use all mediums in combination or singly so that the desired effect is produced. Nearly every situation can be paralleled in human experience—the question is that of dressing it with such good taste as to produce a sensation of delight or impressing it with such power as to carry the author's purpose from his mind to those waiting to receive it.

The story of Lady Clare enters into one of the problems of today, all too delicately told in the poem and its vitalized illustrations. It is a story showing the force of circumstances as opposed to what is commonly ascribed to birth. A nurse, a trusted servitor in a rich and noble family secretly substitutes her newly born babe for that of the Earl when the little one of noble descent dies in her arms, her object being to secure for her child those advantages which are only enjoyed by a privileged class. The question involved is one of eugenics. What is shown so delicately by this poetic photoplay might well be demonstrated more fully—it is that beauty and talent are to be found everywhere among intelligent people, only needing the warmth of opportunity to flower.

Alfred Tennyson, first Lord of that name, himself one of the privileged class, dealt tenderly with this modern idea, but he clearly suggests that eminence for the less fortunate is largely a question of bursting certain conventional bonds of society. The nurse's child is raised in full belief that she is Lady Clare and becomes the heiress of a vast estate. She has attained lofty position without a life-long battle against obstacles and fills it acceptably to all. The loser by her inheritance is a cousin named Lord Ronald, to whom she becomes affianced.

When this true-hearted girl learns from her own mother's lips that she is a beggar born and not the old earl's daughter, she dares all for the sake of a principle.

"She clad herself in a russet gown—
"She was no longer Lady Clare:—
"She went by dale, and she went by down,
"With a single rose in her hair."

In the garb of a poor girl she goes straight to her lover and tells him that which makes him the rightful owner of all she enjoys. As he is a very much of a nobleman, the result is a happy one. He takes her in his arms.

"If you are not the heiress born,
"And I," said he, "the lawful heir,
"We two will wed to-morrow morn,
"And you shall still be Lady Clare."

"The First Settler's Story."

We are given a glimpse of kind-hearted Will Carleton's warm sympathies in "The First Settler's Story," an adaptation from one of his "Farm Festivals." The story is told to a group of friends by the First Settler in the declining years of his life. He recites the early experiences of himself and wife in their struggle with that infinite pathos of little things that only a poet's sensitive imagination can abstract from humble careers, tells how they came to harmonize in helping each other, unconsciously contrasts his own manliness with her womanliness, and leads us with consummate skill to one of those trifling episodes that alter and split the common tendency of two destinies. Occupied with her home duties, while he is in the field, she lets the cows stray. He bursts into a rage of impulse and frightens the child creature entrusted to his keeping. They remain aloof from each other through offended pride for several days, then the same accident occurs again. In dread of her loved-one's reproaches, the young wife provides for her husband's comfort and leaves a pitiful note behind:

"The cows have strayed away again, I fear;
"I watched them pretty close; don't scold me, dear,
"I hunted for them all this afternoon;
"I'll try once more—I think I'll find them soon."

Doubly impelled by desire to please her husband and fear of his disapproval, the frail wife battles alone though a forest fire to save the cattle and finally brings them home. Torn, burned, exhausted and overcome by excitement, she falls unconscious on the floor of her home. He searches for her in the forest fire, only to find that she has succeeded far beyond his expectations. He returns home with heart warned to forgiveness, tries to raise her from the floor, and finds that the heart that leaped and thrilled in responsive love has ceased to beat. He has gained little and lost the world's greatest treasure.

"An Old-Fashioned Elopement."

"An Old-Fashioned Elopement" drawn from a curious poem published in an English periodical, "The Gentlewoman," furnishes delightful comedy relief. It is simply an old story retold in attractive form and furnishes opportunity for some quaint characterizations, interesting exteriors and amusing incidents. An ardent young lover carries off the daughter of a rich old sorehead before the eyes of a comical rival, a paternally-favored suitor. She mounts behind her bright young lover, and the infuriated father gives chase in his carriage with a postilion.

Scene from "The First Settler's Story" (Edison).

"But ere they'd gone a many miles
"Misfortune did betide
"Their horse went lame, so down they came,
"For they no more could ride."

Scene from "An Old-Fashioned Elopement" (Edison).

They stop at an inn; the irate father finds them; he kicks out the aspirant to his daughter's hand; the youth changes clothes with the postillion; he drives father and daughter into a ford, and there the chaise sticks in the mire. He carries the girl ashore on the horses and leaves pa-pah to think it over.

"The lady first, with the aid of the horse.
"Did reach the river's brim,
"And there in the wet did the father sit,
"As they never came back for him."

FILMS TEACHING HISTORY.

In the lecture room of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, before a distinguished audience of educators headed by Professor Franklin Hooper, one of the best known pedagogues of the country, a special exhibition of the films known as "The Miracle" was given a few days ago. The picture was shown primarily to demonstrate the high and unique teaching power of the cinematograph and its special fitness as an illustrator of history. Before the exhibition, Mr. W. Steven Bush, of The Moving Picture World, delivered an interesting lecture on the cinematograph as a most valuable teaching agent in history.

GAUMONT WEEKLY HAS COMIC SUPPLEMENT.

The Gaumont Weekly, beginning with the issue of November 27th, will contain a comic supplement—"chalk talks" from the skilled fingers of eminent artists. These will be after the manner of that rapid-fire art shown on the vaudeville stage by such cartoonists as "Rube" Goldberg, Winsor McKay and Bert Levey. This feature will bring the Sunday newspaper to the eye ahead of the Sabbath Day and the material that the Gaumont Company is now having prepared is of the kind appealing to the risibles of young and old. The first of these supplements will appear on the Gaumont Weekly of November 27th, and the subject is that of four Turks who are reading the war news. It depicts their feelings as they read of the Turkey Trot which the Moslems have danced to the Allies' music.

"QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER."

The much talked of and well know New England rural comedy "Quincy Adams Sawyer," has been made in to a three reel special feature picture by the Puritan Special Feature Company, (Inc), of Boston, Mass. This is the first successful rural play that has ever been made into a moving picture and great success is predicted for the play in picture form. The photoplay of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will be sold to state right buyers and is now ready for delivery.

There are 50 different scenes of comedy, country character and action. There is something doing all the time, all the scenes in the play have been faithfully reproduced in the picture and the clean, wholesome atmosphere stands right out and the same sweet love story will make the picture play as big a hit as it has the stage play. The Puritan Special Feature Company have a complete line of pictorial lithograph paper for the advertising of this feature.

Of special interest to the state rights operators will be the fact that this story in book form has been read by over a million people and as the play has been presented for the past twelve years in every city and town in the United States, over twenty-five millions of people have seen the play. This feature alone will make it one of the few picture plays that will draw money from the start as much advertising has already been done for it. Ask any theater manager in the United States what "Quincy Adams Sawyer" is; his answer will satisfy you.

A CAUTION TO EXHIBITORS.

In its last issue The Moving Picture World printed the advertisement of a foreign film dealer offering a number of reels for sale. We have since been informed by a number of reputable importers and producers of feature films that the list of reels advertised for sale contains a number of features duly copyrighted in this country by the original producers. Upon investigation we find that the titles of many of these films were changed and fictitious names of manufacturers were given by the advertiser. But for this deception the advertisement would never have been accepted. We have refused to print or receive any further advertisements from this film broker.

This statement is made for the protection of the legitimate importer and producer and especially for the benefit of the exhibitor, who may be approached by men offering a cheap and badly-worn feature. Everybody in the industry is interested in preventing this country from becoming the dumping ground of transatlantic junk.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

CHARTER MEMBERS OF MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE

Among the picture men who attended the meeting of exhibitors held at Boston on Tuesday, November 19th, the following named signed the membership roll:

Harry Katzes, Fitchburg; Samuel Grant, Lynn; Felix Alland, Boston; William Murphy, Boston; Charles Hodgdon, Wakefield; Arthur Pearson, Somerville; Glover Ware, Beverly; John Kaen, Salem; J. Freedman, Revere; M. Sandler, Revere; William Dowlin, East Boston; Ernest Horstmann, Lynn; Jacob Loune, Boston; Fred J. McAloon, Taunton; J. J. Donovan, Taunton; Harry E. Meehan, Stoneham; P. J. Enwright, Roxbury; George D. Jellatis, Quincy; George A. Ramsdell, Malden; George W. Allen, Jr., New Bedford; George D. Leonard, Taunton; M. I. Senna, New Bedford; John W. Raymond, Worcester; H. M. McKenney, Revere; J. H. Griffin, Dorchester; Mrs. S. W. Dowling, Boston; Powers and Woodhead, Boston; N. N. Brooks, Boston; George F. Washburn, Boston; Joe Mack, Boston; F. T. Littlefield, Jamaica Plain; E. W. Lynch, Worcester; N. L. Demara, Lawrence; Silas H. Bunce, South Boston; J. J. Cahill, Brockton; F. G. Woodward, South Boston; C. H. Buckley, Roxbury; Henry Gilray, Maynard; W. H. Wolf, East Boston, and Harry Wasserman.

It is hoped that a great many more will join, but at the first meeting many houses were ineligible, due to the ruling that managers could not sign as the official representative of their employers.

Secretary Washburn announces that the regular meetings of the Massachusetts League will be held on the first Tuesday of each month, beginning December 3rd, 1912.

THE UTICA MEETING.

Meeting of Local No. 3, Motion Picture Exhibitors of Central New York, was held at Utica, N. Y., November 20th.

President Douque presided, and introduced National President Neff as the first speaker, who gave a lengthy address, outlining the by-laws and the necessity of the motion picture exhibitors banding together. He also illustrated the good accomplished by other leagues throughout the country.

Mr. Trigger, the State president of the New York State League, gave his views and experiences with different organizations, and reported the vast good done in Locals No. 1 and No. 2, and expressed himself as being greatly pleased with the large number of exhibitors present to enroll in Local No. 3. In conclusion, President Trigger gave his assurance as being ready at any moment to give his undivided time and attention for the welfare of all members.

The following committee was appointed by President Douque to draft by-laws for Local No. 3: Messrs. Carl, Cavello and Linton.

Before adjournment a vote of thanks was extended to Messrs. Neff and Trigger for their efforts in behalf of the local.

JOHN E. REARDON, Secretary.

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE MISSOURI STATE BRANCH.

President Wiley, of the Missouri State Branch of the Mition Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has called a special meeting to be held at Kansas City, Mo., on Tuesday, December 10th, 1912.

There are many matters of importance which will come before the meeting, and every exhibitor in the State is invited to attend.

President M. A. Neff of the National League will be present, this being his first trip through the Middle West in his official capacity.

TAMPA EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A meeting of the motion picture exhibitors of Tampa, Fla., was held in that city on Monday, November 25th, and a permanent organization, to be known as the Tampa Exhibitors' League, was formed. Edward Tarbell was elected president; Scott Leslie, secretary, and William Sipe, treasurer. The new organization will affiliate with the National League.

NOTES FROM THE PRESIDENT'S OFFICE.

The Iowa convention, which will be held on December 3d and 4th at Des Moines, Iowa, headquarters at the Savery Hotel, promises to be a grand success. Letters are pouring into the National President's office from Iowa motion picture exhibitors, expressing their intentions of attending the convention.

Every exhibitor in the State of Iowa is urged to attend the convention, as matters of great importance affecting their business will come up for action. Some of the important subjects which will be discussed will be Sunday opening, the $2 a week license and State legislation directly affecting the motion picture industry.

The big convention to be held on the 5th and 6th at Omaha, Neb., is being enthusiastically supported by the Nebraska Motion Picture Exhibitors, and a large attendance is expected. Headquarters will be at the Rome Hotel, Omaha, Neb.

M. A. Neff, the National President, will be present at the Iowa convention, also the Nebraska convention to be held in Omaha on the 5th and 6th. Mr. Neff will also visit Kansas City, Mo., on the 7th and 8th of December and address the Missouri exhibitors. Mr. Wiley, president of the State organization of Missouri, writes that he expects a very large, enthusiastic gathering of the exhibitors in attendance at the Missouri convention on the 8th of December.

After attending the Missouri convention, President Neff will cross the river, accompanied by Mr. Wiley, president of the Missouri State organization, and others, and on the 9th and 10th of December will organize the State of Kansas, at Kansas City, Kas. From Kansas City, Kas., after completing the organization, President Neff will proceed to St. Louis, Mo., where he will meet several motion picture exhibitors, and from St. Louis will go to Murphysboro, Ill., to organize a local branch of the motion picture exhibitors of Southern Illinois, which will affiliate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

VERMONT HEALTH BOARD INSTALLS POWER'S MACHINE.

The Vermont State Board of Health is nothing if not progressive. The latest addition to the board's already extensive apparatus for educating the people in matters of health is the purchase of a Power's cameragraph, a motion picture machine of the very latest type. This machine is now being put into shape at the State laboratory, and it will be used for giving free pictures in connection with the tuberculosis exhibit. Many motion picture plays dealing with tuberculosis and its cure are now being supplied by the motion picture firms, and these will be used in giving exhibitions in towns throughout the State. There are many other pictures dealing with sanitary and health matters which can be secured, and which are being used extensively to educate the public in these matters. The machine just purchased by the State board will be complete, in that it will have included among its accessories a motor generator, so that it can be used in rural communities and in places where electricity cannot be secured. Without this additional equipment many of the results to be gained would be impossible of attainment.—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

ISADORE BERNSTEIN JOINS MONOPOL.

Friends of Mr. Isadore Bernstein, formerly of the International Feature Film Company, will be pleased to learn that he has accepted the position as general manager of the Monopol Film Company of New York, at a considerable increase over his former salary. Mr. Bernstein is a hustler and is sure to keep the name of "Monopol" well in the public eye. In addition to being general manager he will conduct the publicity campaign of the Marion Leonard feature films from the offices at 145 West 45th Street. Mr. Bernstein will remain with the International Feature Film Company for a week or two longer, finishing up some of the work in which he was engaged at the time the Monopol offer was tendered him.

Edwin S. Porter

A Sketch of the Treasurer and Director of the Famous Players—His New Studio.

By George Blaisdell.

EDWIN S. PORTER is described best as the man who not only has done things, who not only is doing things, but who plans to do still better and greater things—to perpetuate on film the best art of the contemporary stage; in fact, to transform raw stock into actual living rolls of enduring fame for the greatest artists before the footlights to-day. Behind him are the years of work that have yielded rich experience. Before him, based upon ordinary expectancy, are the years that are to crown the work that has gone before. Mr. Porter's plans are broad and comprehensive. He has always believed that the bane of motion picture producers is the arbitrary release date—the rule requiring the turning loose of so many reels a week, on certain days, regardless entirely of surrounding circumstances. In his new field as producer and director of Famous Players pictures Mr. Porter will allow himself sufficient time to do those things which ought to be done and to avoid those things which ought not to be done Mr. Porter combines with his work as director of the Famous Players the duties of treasurer of the company. It was in the office of the latter functionary that the writer recently cornered Mr. Porter and plied him with questions. He is, like most men who do, not at all loquacious when the subject is himself. The inquisitor disregarded orthodox rules and went right to the beginning. "Where were you born, Mr. Porter?" he asked.

"Fayette County, Pennsylvania," was the reply; and then, with native pride, he added: "The same county, by the way, that gave W. A. Clark to Montana and New York and H. C. Frick to Pittsburg and New York. James G. Blaine was raised just across the county line."

"Did you have any early experience in photography?"

"No, indeed. My first work? Why, I was a 'news butcher' on a train. Then, at the age of fourteen, I became a telegraph operator. I followed that line for three or four years and then took up the plumbing trade. Then I was a custom cutter in a tailoring establishment—in fact, had a business of my own. During some of these years I worked around a local theater of which my brother was manager; acted in the capacity of ticket seller, usher, etc. Later my brother was 'advance' for Washburn & Huntington's circus. I was on the bill car. In that way I came to have a general idea of the circus business. I also traveled with him a part of a season in comic opera. Thus I became acquainted with the mechanical end of the stage business.

EDWIN S. PORTER.

"Owing to the severe and variable climate around Pittsburg I contracted pneumonia twice. The doctor advised me to take a sea voyage. So at the age of 22 I left that section. My first employment was with the Cramps in Philadelphia, in their electrical department. I assisted in installing the electrical equipment on the old cruiser New York. When the boat we then thought so big was put into commission I enlisted in the navy and was put in charge of her electrical department. I was three years in the navy. During that time I served under 'Jack' Philip, 'Bob' Evans and the then Capt. Schley. What did I think of Schley? He was a very fine man.

"I left the navy in the spring of 1896. It was about that time the moving pictures came into public notice. I went to work for Raff & Gammon, who had bought the rights of the Edison Vitascope. They sold State rights for that machine. By the way, if there is any public interest in this statement, I assisted in running the first motion picture that was shown in a theater in New York—in Koster & Bial's Thirty-fourth Street house, since torn down. In the fall of '96 and until the summer of '97 I traveled with a machine through the West Indies and South America. When I returned I began the manufacture of motion picture cameras and projecting machines. I entered into partnership with W. J. Beadnell. We had machines in the Eden Musee, in the Proctor houses and also in some of Percy Williams' theaters.

"Here's a reminiscence. At this time one of my operators was a man whose name you will recognize—Nicholas Power. He was in the Novelty Theater, Brooklyn.

"I continued manufacturing machines until I was wiped out by fire, in 1900. I then sold out my machine interests and was engaged by the Edison Company to design and build cameras and projecting machines. After being with them a short time, and as they were in need of a cameraman and a producer, I was given charge of the first skylight studio in this country—at 41 East Twenty-first Street."

It was in this employment that Mr. Porter originated the plan of producing pictures which is followed to-day—of inserts, switchbacks and "follow-up," etc. In 1900 appeared the first dramatic production of the Edison company—"The Life of an American Fireman." In it was used double exposure—the vision of the fireman. Also there was close-camera work, now so much in vogue, showing the fireman pulling the bell. In this first dramatic production were all the elements of the present-day picture—heart interest, suspense, spectacular scenes, etc.

Next came the picture all old followers of the screen will remember, "The Great Train Robbery." Mr. Porter smiled when this film was mentioned. "You may remember," he said, "when the passengers were lined up and the robbers were relieving them of valuables, one of the former attempted to escape. A robber fired a pistol in the direction of the fleeing individual. He 'got' his man. The passenger fell to the ground. The one who dropped was Gilbert M. Anderson. Mr. Anderson did his first work in pictures in the Edison company."

Then came "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Goldlocks and the Three Bears." It was in the latter that the "stop motion" was employed for the first time. Mr. Porter had the field of stop-motion work all to himself for two years before his competitors fathomed it. It was in the "Teddy Bear" picture that this expedient was most effectively used. The writer was one of the many who laughed over this most amusing production of seven Teddy bears, graduated in stature, going through the antics of so many human beings. Mr. Porter worked eight hours a day for a straight week to get ninety feet of film.

Mr. Porter also made the first motion picture ever taken at night. This was of the illumination of the Esplanade at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo in 1901. Each exposure required ten seconds. At the end of four hours there were twenty-five feet of film.

The first "Western" picture ever made was staged on Staten Island. It was entitled "The Life of a Cowboy." Mr. Porter had the use of the horses and equipment of a man named Craver, and in the picture were shown the since-familiar scene of the stage hold-up, the chase, the girl captured by Indians, lasso throwing, and at the same time running through the film was a story of heart interest.

In the old laugh-maker, "How the Office Boy Saw the Ball Game," was first introduced the trick since so frequently and effectively used—the circular picture thrown on the screen, simulating the view seen through a telescope. Mr. Porter has made a close study of the problems involved in lighting interiors. Up to a very few years ago little attention was paid to sources of light in motion pictures—such, for instance, as fire light effects, light from a lamp or a window, moonlight effects, etc. This is another of the fields in which Mr. Porter had done much original research. It was about seven or eight years ago that he produced "Seven Ages," which he made chiefly for the purpose of studying the possibilities of light effects. There was a scene in this drama of an old couple sitting before a fireplace. Mr. Porter took the picture early in the morning when the sun was sufficiently low to shoot through an improvised fireplace and create the desired situation. Afterward he discovered the way to use a mirror and get results. It was practically his own field up to about three years ago.

"I am a great believer in natural effects," said Mr. Porter; "to have the light come from the source from which it is supposed to come. A great many directors throw up their hands in horror if they see a shadow in an interior. It is easily possible to have light come from three or four sources in one setting. A shadow is not out of place at all. Some think we must have a well-diffused light and not show a bit of shadow."

Besides Mr. Anderson, some of the players who worked under Mr. Porter and later became directors were Messrs. Griffith of the Biograph, Ranous of the Vitagraph and Haddock of Eclair. Florence Lawrence and Julia Swayne Gordon were also with Mr. Porter—in fact, their first screen work was under his direction. In the making of "Kathleen Mavourneen" occurred the first "substitution"—where a miniature house was destroyed by the flames. In "Uncle Tom's Cabin," produced in 1904, there was a race of two Mississippi River steamboats. The craft were in miniature.

Mr. Porter was with the Edison Company for over nine years, at the termination of his engagement being in charge of negative production. During this period he made all the pictures, built and designed cameras, wrote many scenarios, staged all the productions and operated the camera. He did, in fact, produce the pictures.

Late in 1909 Mr. Porter organized a company for building the Simplex projector. James A. Stillman, vice-president of the National City Bank, financed the undertaking. Mr. Porter is now in receipt of royalties on his patents on this machine.

In the fall of 1910, in conjunction with Joseph Engel and W. H. Swanson, Mr. Porter organized the Rex Motion Picture Company. The first release was on February 16, 1911, "A Heroine of '76," and was a pronounced success. The career of the Rex is current history.

Mr. Porter became interested in the project of the Famous Players Company last winter. It was seven weeks ago that he disposed of his interests in the Universal that he might devote all his time to his new alliance. On December 9 he will stage "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett in the leading role. The number of productions each year will depend wholly on circumstances. "We have got enough stars under contract now to keep us busy for eighteen months or two years," said Mr. Porter. "We will probably not attempt to market more than four or five of these plays a year."

The studio of the Famous Players is a marvel. It is the top floor—the drill hall—of the old Ninth Regiment Armory, on Twenty-sixth Street, near Seventh Avenue. There is an unbroken area of 100 by 200 feet—sufficient for the staging, if necessary, of twenty sets. On the north side the roof for a space of 40 by 75 feet has been changed to glass. For the forthcoming Hackett play thirty sets of scenery are now being prepared. Three kinds of lamps are ready for installation—Aristos, Quartz and Cooper Hewitt. A new idea is employed in the latter—copper reflectors painted red. All "props" are supported the same as on a regular stage. There will be fuse boxes and trap plugs all over the floor. It is intended to construct regulation hydraulic stage traps, so that any part of the floor may be elevated or depressed. Mr. Porter is a believer in the plan of setting up his scenery first and lighting up afterward.

The windows are all provided with large boxes, which will be filled with plants. Even the decorative side has not been neglected. There are eight dressing rooms, which will accommodate fifty players. The stars will have three large rooms, with hot and cold water. Also on this floor are the offices and a large reception room. In the gallery are developing and printing tanks, everything being new. There is also here a projection room. On the fourth floor is the carpenter shop, 200 by 100 feet. The stage floor will be devoted solely to taking pictures.

With all this up-to-date equipment, with the best players on the American stage to re-enact for the screen their great successes, and with Mr. Porter as the man behind the gun, picture lovers will be justified in looking forward to cinematographic productions of unusual excellence.

"PAUL AND VIRGINIA" (Rex).

HERE is a picture that will make unusual appeal to all women. It is straight drama, and serious. There is no comedy in it. It is a story of early France, the scene changing to the Island of Martinique, then to France again, and back to Martinique. The settings of the latter scenes show considerable care, being in large degree primitive. The interiors in the French scenes have been laid with due attention to historical accuracy. The costumes are of the period. There is a wide variety of tinting, which materially adds to the charm of the picture.

The story, which is in two parts, opens with a secret wedding. A young woman, of aristocratic lineage, marries De la Tour, a young nobleman. The relatives of the bride cast her out. The young couple go to Martinique, where a year later the husband dies, leaving his wife and young daughter penniless. Margaret, a young woman whose only family is a son, Paul, takes her in and cares for her. Paul and Virginia grow up together. They are childhood sweethearts. As they grow to manhood and womanhood the ties strengthen. The aunt of the mother of Virginia writes that, as she fears death and that she dreads the possibility of her estate going to strangers, she will educate and provide for Virginia if she be sent to France. The governor arranges for her departure.

After Virginia has sailed for France the mother of Paul, noting his melancholy mood, informs him as to the circumstances of his birth, which, she tells him, preclude the possibility of his marrying Virginia. In France Virginia is taken to the arms of her greataunt. She is told that she is to be a countess. As a preliminary she is sent to a convent to be educated. While she is there all the letters that come from Martinique for Virginia are intercepted by the greataunt. Back in the island the mother and friends of the girl in France cannot understand her silence. Virginia is annoyed by the attentions of a dissolute nobleman. She refuses to have anything to do with him. As a result her greataunt disowns her. Virginia sends word to the island that she is coming home, and sails. A storm sweeps the coast as the vessel bearing Virginia nears the coast. The villagers are all watching for the ship. As the craft founders Paul makes an ineffectual attempt to save Virginia. The body of Virginia is found on the beach in the morning. It is Paul who discovers it. There is a solemn funeral. It is attended by the soldiers, by sisters, by all the neighbors and the natives. The next morning Paul goes down on the beach, to the spot where he and Virginia have spent so many happy hours. It is here that the mother of Paul finds him beyond the reach of further sorrow.

"Reincarnation of Komar" (Vitagraph)

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS two-reel release deals, as the title indicates, with new embodiment, but I have returned from an exploration of its mysteries without adequately solving them. It is a peculiar play in more than one respect. It is remarkable for some intense emotional acting, the India settings are of startling fidelity, yet one of the actors who appears in the India scenes and compels attention every moment he is within the range of vision is not enumerated in the following official cast.

CHARACTERS:

Komar, a High Priest.....Mr. Courtenay Foote
Leslie Adams .....Mr. Courtenay Foote
Mr. Adams .....Mr. Charles Eldridge
Lillian White, ward of Mr. Adams,
Miss Lillian Walker
Quinetrea .....Miss Rosemary Theby

Notwithstanding the high quality of performance shown by all the leading members of the company, and especially by Mr. Courtenay Foote, Miss Theby carries off the honors in her splendid opportunity. She depicts woman as German scientists write about her, not as immoral but as absolutely non-moral, a sliding, gliding, sinuous creature, absorbed in self-contemplation, extremely conscious of her sway over man through sex attraction, not to be persuaded that she ever does wrong because she has no moral sense, and not to be blamed or excused because she measures all the charms she studies in her mirror by their effect on man.

Having no personal knowledge of creatures so soulless as the seductive dancing girl, Quinetrea, I am compelled to depend upon the German authorities for data concerning their shameless and heartless characters, or upon that chivalrous English poet who vented his Adam-like rage on woman by calling her harsh names, "A rag, a bone and a hank of hair." Considering alluring women to be what these disappointed gentlemen declare she is, I can only say that the type is admirably depicted in the enchantress who ruins poor Komar, High Priest of the Temple of Innocent Manhood.

Komar makes a show of resistance outside the temple, where people are looking, but she follows him up and becomes a priestess to be near him. She tries to ruin him and, according to the English poet and German scientists, she does this simply because he is so good. After he succumbs to her blandishments and she jeers at him in triumph, he drags her before all the others in the temple and curses her. She is in raiment that would hardly do on Broadway, even in this era of slashed hobble skirts, but she would certainly be better treated in New York, even if she was not taken to the horse-show.

She is so entrancing that almost any Rialto gentleman would step up and tip his hat, "How te dieu—fine weatheh we're having," rather than treat her in shabby fashion for looking her pleasingest. Might as well curse a flower for not being a weed as to damn a young and healthy dancing girl for being her sweetest and dearest; but Komar has taken a vow to some imaginary god or other never to love a woman and acts like a fool after he has stubbed his toe. He drags her out before all the others and curses her in such fearful terms that she sinks down crushed on the floor and is transformed into a huge, writhing snake.

Mr. Snake is the one not to be found in the cast, but he gets into the action so promptly that all the other characters hurry out to keep other engagements or make sure that their last premiums are paid. Mr. Snake is a ten-foot boa, non-venomous but with a mouth full of teeth that can hold like a bulldog or lacerate like a Russian wolfhound. I have seen him coiled up at the zoo, tangled up in slippery knots of infinite variety, but never in action. He is a Marathon starter from the moment he appears on the spot where much-cursed little Quinetrea vanishes. No one had to tell the priests and priestesses that it was time to go, and I suppose they had to lash the camera man to the tripod.

Scene from "Reincarnation of Komar," a Vitagraph Two-Part Feature Production.

Two thousand years after: Mr. Leslie Adams, in modern guise and bearing a family resemblance to Komar of the Curses, is smoking a "hookah" in his den. A hookah is one of those Oriental pipes which permit the smoke to be drawn through water by means of a long flexible tube. So much for the apparatus, but no one knows what is in the bowl. He dreams. Quinetrea appears to him in the dream. He soon after visits his father in India and becomes engaged to sweet Lillie White. All three visit the ruins of an ancient temple. Their guide shows them the huge snake, now sleeping quietly, and tells them that the boa is Quinetrea. He recites a legend that she reassumes her human form every hundred years. Leslie lingers when the others pass on, and he lingers when the enchantress rises from where the snake was lying.

Poor old Adam—in this case, Leslie Adams! He always lingers. He shows no marked improvement in all the twenty centuries of experience with the soulless ones. He is addicted to hookahs, sees snakes, zoological or otherwise, neglects the good woman he has promised to faithfully love and hangs around waiting to be tempted. His deep-seated hypocrisy, always a comic element in characterization, is never more amusing than when it is veiled to himself and obvious to all others. He knows that he must submit to law and custom in order to get along in the world, but he likes it about as well as the average small boy likes to go to school.

Komar, reincarnated in Leslie Adams, falls for the wiles of the enchantress, as we may expect him to fall whenever he gets an opportunity—he is only good when it is lacking, like the man from Montclair—and is induced by her to accept a necklace for his betrothed. He falls for almost anything. His betrother is growing anxious about this time and comes back in search of him. Quinetrea hides and watches her victims. Leslie cannot plead a business engagement as an excuse, and he adjusts matters by the good old subterfuge of offering a distracting present.

He places the necklace around the trusting girl's neck and is horrified to note that it affects her as might a concealed poison. She sinks down in agony, while the enchantress gives vent to her triumph in malicious smiles. The young betrothed girl dies in the arms of the man who promised falsely and lingered weakly. He looks about him as if at a loss to understand this sudden retribution. It all comes to him, that scene in the temple, and he understands. He is to be eternally tortured for the sin he committed there. In his rage he repeats the curse upon the woman who dragged him down from his finer ideals, and she resumes her snakelike slumber for another century. He falls on the lifeless body of the one he betrayed and the play ends.

"All hateful things conspire to bind him in existence—a future like the past — which makes him shrink from immortality."

GAUMONT EDUCATIONALS.

A visit to the Gaumont studios at Flushing, Long Island, in the interest of the educational picture, reveals the fact that this firm is forging ahead in educational films, especially in their Paris studio. At the present time quite a number are approaching release, with many others in course of preparation. It was most interesting to find that industrial and natural history pictures are being prepared in larger numbers, bidding fair to compete with the photoplays in attractiveness.

The first natural history picture is that of "The Large White, or Cabbage Butterfly." This butterfly is described as being "common in Europe, Asia, and Northern Africa." Each succeeding sub-title clearly describes the habits, growth, reproductive powers and life of the fly, in a way to make it interesting and instructive. Beginning with "a greatly enlarged view of the butterfly's trunk." There is then shown how "the female lays about 100 yellow eggs at a time on the cabbage leaf; each egg is about one-twenty-fifth part of an inch in height." The natural incubation is explained until, fifteen days later, caterpillars emerge from the eggs. Their rapid growth is seen in but "four days after hatching," when the fairly-grown caterpillar is preparing to feed upon the cabbages. That its destructive work is beneficial to itself is proven by "the caterpillar feeding on the leaves gradually increases in size," until, "when one and one inches in length they are a source of great destruction among the plants." This extensive nature of their feeding is shown by the sad picture of "the remains of a cabbage on which a colony of caterpillars have established themselves."

As though by a law of retribution, "the caterpillars have several terrible enemies, including one known as "Microgaster Glomeratus." This fearful parasite makes sad havoc with the would-be beautiful butterfly, "depositing its eggs in the caterpillar's body. The larvae hatch in the body, feeding on it until their own development is complete," finally hiding their corruption by a "silken cover which is woven over the body of the still-living caterpillar."

It becomes now a pleasure to follow the life of the healthy caterpillar, which, free from these deadly parasites, show their vigor by "climbing to the top of a wall or tree" with the ability to "fix themselves by means of a silken thread." From this stage they, "some hours later change into a chrysalis." Whether this change is painful is not known, but the convulsions seem to indicate the working of a strange power as "by a series of violent efforts the perfect butterfly tears its envelope and emerges with its wings folded." It would seem that the "hatching" of a butterfly is very similar to that of a chicken in the method of throwing off the old shell. In a short time "the wings dry and develop" and ere long the beautiful fly is "preparing for its first flight." This film has many valuable associates in the natural history series with which it will rank high, as besides being beautiful it is most intensely interesting and very instructive.

"Glove Making."

This Gaumont industrial picture will prove of interest to a large portion of moving picture visitors, especially perhaps those of the more glove-wearing sex. Beginning with the statement that "gloves are made exclusively from the skins of goats and lambs," the flocks in the fields are silent witnesses of the fact. The detailed processes of examining the skins, removing the wool or hair, softening, stretching, tinting, scraping and polishing, are shown.

Afterwards the marking, cutting out and sewing of the fingers are shown; the stretching to special lengths, sorting, sizing and embroidering, partly by hand and partly by machine, are each shown in interesting minute detail. With the putting on of buttons, they advance to the finishing room and so on, until "the result of the processes" is shown when "my lady" is drawing on her "elbow length" new white gloves with admiring eyes.

"THE COMPACT" (Pathe).

The ideal combination—a strong dramatic story and a photographic feat perfectly accomplished, are to be found in Pathe Freres' "The Compact," which will be released December 12th.

John Blair, the district attorney of a metropolis, is a slave to the drug habit. He has ably conducted the prosecution of a celebrated murderer until the day for summing up, when he finds he is a wreck and unable to go on. A young lawyer, James Gary, who has watched the trial, applies for a position on the district attorney's staff. Gary calls at the prosecutor's office, and as the two men face each other there is demonstrated one of the marvels of photography—a perfect double exposure. The resemblance of the two men is astounding, but to the district attorney it suggests a way out of his difficulty. He offers Gary $1,000 to impersonate him and sum up the People's case that afternoon. Gary seizes the opportunity, and the two men exchange positions. Blair goes to Gary's lodging house, there to seek relief by further indulgence in the drug habit. Gary is preparing his speech when Mrs. Blair enters the office. She greets him affectionately, never suspecting the substitution. Together they journey to the court, where, after a brilliant summing up, the jury returns a verdict of "Guilty." Mrs. Blair is overjoyed, but her delight is short-lived, for Gary unfolds the story of the part he is playing. Gary leads her to his rooming house, and there they find Blair, dead. To save Blair's good name and to avoid a scandal, they arrange a compact whereby Gary marries Mrs. Blair and continues through life as District Attorney Blair. The real Blair is buried under the name of James Gary.

This film has been reviewed more fully by Louis Reeves Harrison in the November 9th issue of this magazine, and the several remarkable double exposures occurring in the course of the story are pronounced perfect. It will be released on December 12th.

FEATURE MANUFACTURERS ORGANIZE.

Thirty feature manufacturers held meetings at the Hotel Astor on November 21st and 22nd and effected an organization to be known as the Feature Manufacturers' Association. These officers were elected: President, H. A. Spanuth; vice-president, E. Barry; treasurer, Sydney Ascher; secretary, Tobias Keppler; sergeant-at-arms, Edward Roskam. A committee of ways and means was appointed by President Spanuth, as follows: B. S. Clements, of the Big C Features; Ludwig Erb, of the Crystal Films Company; Mr. Jablin, of the Fine Arts Company, Inc., and Mr. Draher, of the International Film Traders.

The officers and the committee on ways and means will draft by-laws and outline plans, and as soon as their report is ready for presentation another meeting will be called.

"Nell of the Pampas"

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

THE American's Western company, under the direction of Allan Dwan, has turned out a novel and praiseworthy film in "Nell of the Pampas," which will be released on December 12. Its novelty lies in the strikingly beautiful scenes amid which the action takes place, and which represent the treeless plains of South America, where the tall and graceful stems of pampas grass, with their panicles of silvery whiteness, undulate over a sea of tremulous green. These scenes have been taken from natural surroundings, in the vicinity of the American's studio, in California, and bear witness to the remarkable variety of Nature's charms in that land of sunshine, fruit and flowers.

The cameraman has done his work well in giving us the full beauty of these natural scenes, but he has insensibly fallen into over-exposure in two brief instances, owing to the intense brightness as the sun beats down on the waving, silver-white pampas grass flowers. "Nell of the Pampas" can lay claim to the finest photography I have seen for some time. There is fine definition throughout, and the entire film is a delight from the standpoints of technique and camera work.

There is another standpoint from which this film can be viewed with pleasure—the acting. The characters are all simple folks and the plot is also simple, so that no claim can be laid to high histrionic art in the characterizations; but these simple folks must be presented to the life in order to win our approbation, and that requires art that is well worthy of praise. Warren Kerrigan, as Juan Cadoza; Jack Richardson, as Jim Beverley; George Periolat, as Pedro Villiar; Pauline Bush, as Nell Villiar, the pampas girl, and Louise Lester, as the half-breed, all claim our hearty interest, in varying degrees. Nor must the young man who plays the orphan idiot be omitted from the list. His little bit is quite a character study at that.

The young woman who appears as the half-breed attracted my attention particularly by her facial portrayal of suppressed emotions. The stoicism of the Indian holds in check the fiery temper and ardor of her Spanish blood, and we can see that she suffers from unrequited love, notwithstanding her brave attempt to disguise the fact. Only once does she smile, and that is when the tempter suggests a plan whereby she may secure the man she loves for herself alone. It is a delicate bit of shading, this momentary reflection of the joys of paradise amid the darkness of despair.

Down among the pampas growers, Nell, the young and beautiful daughter of old Pedro Villiar, has many suitors. No matter where she goes among her father's men, she is always welcomed and worshipped. In the kindness of her heart she has been generous to an orphan idiot who lives off her father's bounty, and he follows her like a faithful dog.

Among all her suitors, Juan Cardoza is the favored one. Big and manly, he has inspired her love and they have reached an understanding; but Juan's striking personality has unwittingly won the affections of another woman, a half-breed, who seeks his love. She watches the lovers with jealous eye and one day sees Juan giving Nell a bracelet of silver as a betrothal present. The half-breed waits until Juan leaves Nell, and when he passes her, she throws herself into his arms and implores his love. All this is witnessed by Nell, who, sick at heart, throws the trinket away and starts home. Juan renounces the half-breed, but the harm is done.

On her way home, Nell encounters a stranger and taking him with her introduces him to her parents, who make arrangements for his board. But Jim Beverley soon shows his true colors. He abuses the poor idiot and thus secures that poor creature's enmity. Then he attempts to embrace Nell on one occasion, and Juan, witnessing the attempt, gives him a trouncing. Thirsting for revenge, Beverley plots with the half-breed to kidnap Nell, thus leaving her a clear road to the affections of Juan.

Beverley sees Nell leaving her home one evening for her accustomed stroll in the pampas, and, mounting his horse, follows her. He, in turn, is followed by the idiot. But at the same time Juan starts out in the hope of seeing Nell and is followed by the half-breed woman. Beverley, lying in ambush, sees Juan approach, and attempts to shoot him; but the half-breed has been watching him and springs in front of Juan, receiving the bullet in her own breast.

Beverley hurries back to his horse to flee the neighborhood, but finds the idiot waiting for him. In the fight that follows, both are mortally wounded. Nell, startled by the shooting, hurries to the scene and finds Juan kneeling over the half-breed's dead body. Both rush to the spot where Beverley and the idot lie, and then all is explained to Nell as she weeps over the dead body of the slain idiot.

The Hope Jones Unit Orchestra

An Instrument That Will Make Any Picture House Popular on Its Own Account, and a Great Help to the Picture.

By Hugh Hoffman.

AT a private demonstration, as a representative of The Moving Picture World, I went recently to the Century Theater, New York City, to hear the music that can be obtained from that remarkable piece of human ingenuity, the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra, the patent rights of which have been acquired by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company.

The real meaning of unit orchestra is that one man, by the use of the instrument, is able to produce the music of a full orchestra. The particular instrument in question was installed in the Century Theater at an expense of $20,000; the working parts as installed are not visible to the audience. The keyboard is the only part of it that can be seen from in front. By virtue of its being an electric instrument, the keyboard may be placed at any distance from the working parts themselves.

The Unit Orchestra was operated by Mr. Frank White, who uses the instrument at every performance of "The Daughter of Heaven," which production at the present time is occupying the theater. The inventor of the Unit Orchestra, Mr. R. Hope-Jones, was present also, to explain the mechanical workings. Mr. Smith rendered the following selections in beautiful style: "Woodland Dove," by Moret; "La Boheme," by Puccini; "Evening Star," by Wager; "Nimosa," by Himan; "Anitra's Dance," by Grieg; popular medley, "Serenade Coquette," Bertholme; "Chinese Overture," from "The Daughter of Heaven."

This prodigious instrument has the power of casting a magnetic spell over the listetner. Its range is so extensive and the effect so wonderful that the work of a good musician instantly transports the auditor to a musical heaven. It is not an automatic orchestrion. It is an instrument that requires a skilled pianist to get the most out of it. The keyboard resembles that of an organ, having three banks of keys, in addition to which there is a semi-circular row of stops very close together, which control the instrumentation.

The variety of sounds produced by the Unit Orchestra far exceeds that of the most comprehensive pipe organ. There have been simulated in its range the true sounds of every legitimate orchestral instrument—the violin, the viola, 'cello, double bass, clarinet, flute, cornet, French horn, trombone, tuba, tympani and double drums. In addition to these regular instruments there is the sound of the oboe, the bassoon, harp, xylophone, cathedral chimes, orchestra bells, tambourine, castanets, and more effective than all is the exquisite vox-humana, a series of pipes that come as near simulating the human voice as is perhaps possible with a mechanical instrument of today. With these stops it can produce the exact effect of a great chorus of mixed voices at a distance. The bass voices can be distinctly heard mingling with the sopranos, altos and tenors.

It was a charming hour spent listening to this wonderful device. As an embellishment to moving pictures there is no question but that it goes far ahead of any eight-piece orchestra that could be gotten together, for the simple reason that the pictures can be followed absolutely at an instant's notice. The great trouble with orchestras in connection with moving pictures has been that the musicians are obliged to stop and change their music. They have to be in accord with each other, and it takes time to make changes. The pauses that an orchestra will make during a picture exhibition are really annoying to the spectators, and this instrument seems to do away with that awkwardness between the selections of an orchestra. Although operated by one man, the full orchestral effect is obtained with the Unit Orchestra, but, more than that, the entire orchestra can change music at an instant's notice.

Besides the three banks of keys there is a set of pedals for the bass, much the same as on an ordinary pipe organ. Each key is equipped with what is called the double touch, which means that with ordinary finger pressure certain solo instruments are operated, and the same keys with the harder touch bring into use a supplementary tone on a lower instrument, harmonizing with the solo notes. By this means a man with his ten fingers can really produce twenty distinct notes, plus the four that he can produce with the pedals.

One of the principal points concerning the Unit Orchestra is that, while it resembles an organ, it does not require the organ touch. The legatos need not be sustained, as they can be controlled by using certain stops, which same can also be said of the staccato notes. One of the most striking features is the accuracy with which thunder and rain can be simulated. In the Chinese overture Mr. White introduced these effects, which seemed to the writer more true than those produced ordinarily by sound effect men. There is also wind effect, gun shot, lion roar and the sounds of other animals.

These instruments are very costly, but they surely would be a source of great satisfaction at a moving picture exhibition. With all the various sounds there is something quieting and soothing in such an instrument. It is not pretended for a moment that any but an experienced player can operate the device, and even with a competent pianist it is necessary that he devote at least a month to familiarizing himself with the instrument. But it is quite easy to realize that an instrument of this kind installed in a motion picture theater would be the means of attracting considerable patronage from lovers of good music, to say nothing of the wonderful help it would be to the picture, and the tremendous saving in salaries to musicians, which can be applied to paying for the instrument. The exhibitor who is first to introduce such an apparatus as this into his town is the one who is going to have the most popular picture house in a very short time.

"THE SPENDTHRIFT'S REFORM" (Pathe).

A story with a moral is remembered; a story that is remembered is enjoyed. A story that deals with the difficulties in the lives of ordinary humans, has a universal appeal. A story that is full of pathos and heart interest, when it is capably acted, is received with silent admiration. Pathe Freres' The Spendthrift's Reform, which will be released on December 7th, has all of these qualifications for making it a success.

It deals with the gambling passion of Dan Steele, whose indulgence in the vice has made his wife and little boy practically dependent upon the generosity of her father, with whom they live. Steele returns home one night with ruin staring him in the face unless he can get some money. His wife has been sitting up waiting for him and in her he confides. The good woman has been saving the pennies to educate her boy, but when her husband swears by their child never to gamble again she goes to get the money which she has hidden beneath her father's safe. The old gentleman is awakened by the noise, and sees the figure crouched at the safe. Securing his revolver he fires. Her life sways in the balance for a few weeks, but finally she recovers. Needless to say Steele has learned his lesson and keeps his promise to abstain from gambling, while Mrs. Steele considers her suffering to be worth while.

This sort of story is sure to appeal to any audience and we strongly advise all exhibitors to book it. It will be released on December 7th.

The Educational Picture

Rich. G. Holloman's Sample Show of Instructive Films an Eye-Opener.

MOVING PICTURES will soon fill a large part in general education. There is no doubt of this, but progressive educators are still finding it difficult to get needed appropriations except in some of the more progrfessive States. To help along the development of their use in this field and to provide a good argument for it, Mr. Rich. J. Holloman has collected a number of good films, each instructive and each adapted to illustrating some course in education. They furnish a very pleasing evening's entertainment. Cinematography is already being used in schools and colleges. Its value has been proved, and the chief obstacle to its spreading like the measles is the present lack of an adequate library of pictures to cover an extended course in any subject. Excellent and varied botanical pictures, for instance, can be had, but they were made for the ordinary show houses. They are wonderfully instructive and even scholarly men can find not only inspiration, but also information in them. These are good; but before long educational series will be made as textbooks are made, to cover completely some subject or one of its subdivisions. These will be accompanied by supplementary notes and explanations.

MR. RICH. G. HOLLOMAN.

Mr. Holloman remarked to a representative of The Moving Picture World, when interviewed after his sample exhibition at the Eden Musee, that the beginnings in preparing film courses of this kind will probably be small, but once started must quickly grow to a size equal to the school book publishing business, which is immense. That a good beginning has been made, Mr. Holloman's exhibition is ample proof, and great credit is due those who are making the field ready; for since it will be necessary to sink considerable capital before even one such complete course can be made, some assurance of success from a financial viewpoint has to be shown.

The instructive pictures that have already been made have accomplished what was expected. They have whetted the average spectator's appetite and thy also have done what wasn't so confidently expected by everyone; they have made enthusiasts of many of the leading progressive educators. There is at present a markedly growing demand for projecting machines in schools and colleges to take advantage of films already available; a library that, as readers of this paper know, is by no means insignificant. The pictures in Mr. Holloman's collection deal with over fourteen subjects. Every picture gives more information that will stay in the memory and add to a man's general culture than a popular lecturer could possibly impart in the usual hour allotted to him.

The first subject treated was geography. On this subject was given a beautifully photographed and stereoscopic picture, "The Banks of the Ganges, India," and also a Russian picture, "The Region of Mt. Ararat." There are a very large number of pictures of this kind now on the market. They reach around the world.

On agriculture, "A Model Farm in Argentina" might have been placed under the subject of geography. The pictures we have seen of farming operations are also numerous and several of them that show new kinds of agricultural apparatus in use are much better.

The picture shown on ornithology, "Scenes from Bird Life," is a very valuable film. Very many other pictures on this topic can be obtained, and most of them are fine.

The zoological picture, "The Life of the Otter," is one of the best pictures we have ever seen. It shows how the otter spends his day, and when one considers how timid and wild an otter is, the result is marvelous. Partly it was taken under water and partly in the air. It shows, for instance, the otter chasing and capturing a pike, which is no slow coach when it comes to swimming.

On fish, he has a picture, "Hatching Fish at Surrey, England. This gives a clear idea of trout culture for the market. Several American pictures have been taken of government fisheries which are given more instructive.

On entomology, he showed "From Moth to Butterfly," a picture that excited enthusiastic applause. Along this and kindred lines there are a large number of fine pictures.

As a sample of illustrations of famous poems for classes in literature, "Hiawatha and Minnehaha" was shown, and surely no more pleasing selection for an American audience could have been made. This beautiful Indian love story was simply and beautifully told. It is full of poetry and very lovely.

Under the heading, chemistry, a picture showing the action of aluminum, magnesium, etc., in acid or in water was shown. The great problem in teaching science to large classes is the difficulty of making it possible for each student to see what takes place in an experiment. Laboratory equipment in high schools with a large attendance is expensive, and it is often hard to arrange hours so that every student can accomplish for himself anything like an adequate amount of experimenting. With the use of the cinematographic film, the experiment, magnified many times and very clearly shown, is projected on a screen. With it, even the instructor actually sees graphically pictured before him what he saw mostly through his imagination, if at all, without its help. Among all branches of educational work, the teaching of science, both in preparatory schools and colleges, needs cinematographic help most. In fact, the need is such that very soon we will not be able to get along without it.

We have just remarked that teaching science needs this help most; let us hasten to add that botany cannot be taught to children in any proper way without it. By the camera's help, the whole process of growing above the ground can be caught and pictured. The camera can be fixed in front of the plant to be studied at a time when it is beginning to pierce the ground. The crank need only be turned once or twice a day. At the end of several weeks the film, when developed, will have at its beginning, the early stages of the plant; at its middle, the middle stages, and at its end, the ripening or the flowering stages. This film projected on the screen shows us in fifteen minutes what took place during the whole summer; we actually see the plant grow.

We have pointed out that in teaching chemistry and botany the motion picture camera is a great help to instruction; in biology it is positively illuminating. In this field, to an even larger degree, it can be used in advanced laboratories as a means of progressive study. We don't claim to be prophets, but we can easily imagine a candidate for the degree of doctor of philosophy in the future submitting with his descriptive thesis a number of film reels that may reveal so much that the professors, throwing them on the screen, will find the candidate worthy of laurels even before they read his necessarily dry screed.

To cover his subtitle, "Biology," Mr. Holloman had projected one of the most remarkable films ever shown. Its title is "From the Egg to the Chick." It is a radiograph moving picture of what happens inside of an egg when the chick is coming into being. Such an operation of our great mother, Nature, is wholly indescribable and we shall not here attempt the impossible; but to the audience who watched it with us, it was a marvel and a wonder. Never had we seen anything like it, and it held every eye among us from the time it began to the completion of the process.

Mr. Rich. G. Holloman deserves much credit for his efforts for progress not only by constant and enthusiastic argument but by such works as the collecting of this little library of educational subjects just to show what there is. As we have necessarily pointed out, these pictures are only a small taste of what is even now available. Mr. Holloman got them together because of his deep interest in the movement.

He is keeping the library together and will gladly lend it to any responsible persons for exhibitions in churches, schools or institutions of similar nature, and, we understand, free of charge, provided that the expenses of the exhibition be assured.

A STRONG WEEK FOR KLEINE.

George Kleine will release two excellent comedies of a highly entertaining nature and a powerful heart interest drama for the week ending December 7, 1912.

For the Tuesday Cines, "Up Against It," offers an extremely amusing farce comedy of the kind that appeals to spectators of all ages. It describes the adventures of an unfortunate young fellow who is "broke" and endeavors to borrow funds, but all he succeeds in obtaining in any quantity is sympathy, which he is in no mood to appreciate. His various attempts to "touch" his many friends and relatives will awaken many hearty laughs. The leading role is taken by Mr. Louis Gillami, one of the best of the Cines comedians and he certainly looks and acts the part well.

The reel is completed by an attractive travelogue subject entitled "The Ancient Town of Narni," a town situated a short distance from Rome. We are shown the historic rock of Alexander VI, the ancient market place, a view of Stifona and some delightful views of the Nera Falls.

"Wrongly Accused" is the title of the Wednesday Eclipse release. It is a strong, well-written drama relating of a man who, because of a grudge, is sent to prison for a crime he did not commit, but is finally released and happily restored to his wife and child. The scenes showing the tender parting of the husband from his dear ones and of his happy return after years of sorrow will awaken much sympathy. The role of the child is an important one, and no better little actress could have been selected to fill it than little Andre Roudes, who has appeared in several former releases of this company and whose sweet childish ways always endear her to the hearts of everyone in the audience.

For the Saturday Cines, "Because of a Widow," relates in highly entertaining fashion of two young fellows who fall victims to the wiles of a fascinating widow. It is interesting to note how the sly minx by dividing her favor equally, keeps them both upon the tenderhooks of suspense, but the bubble of their fascination finally bursts when they begin to quarrel between themselves and the widow apparently tiring of the sport discloses her fickle nature. It ends by both of them deciding to return to their studio where they determine to devote themselves strictly to their work and make art their mistress for life.

"FOOTBALL DAYS AT CORNELL" (Essanay).

In this feature film is seen a splendid reproduction of life at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. In this subject the Essanay camera conveys us to the beautiful Cayuga Lake and Valley, one of the garden spots of America. Herein lie the most gorgeous bits of scenic beauty imaginable.

Wonderful panoramic views of the valley, taken from Cornell University are unfolded before us, and then is shown the University Campus with it's hurrying throngs of students. The Varsity football team is next seen at afternoon practice, including tackling, bucking the line and going through various intricate formations. Next we see a football aspirant tried out for a position on the team. He lasts until the entire team make mince meat of him, then solemnly swears "never again." One of Cornell's annual football games was snapped by the Essanay camera, and the film shows many sensational views of the game during the most exciting moments. This, together with views of the students parading to the field and going through their famous "snake dance," completes as interesting a subject on college life as can be imagined. The Essanay camera men spent one entire week snapping this film, and the production will undoubtedly arouse the old college spirit of all those who love their alma mater. "Football Days at Cornell," is booked for release Thursday, Dec. 5th.

PROMINENT STAR ON A RECREATION TOUR.

George Periolat, the popular character lead of the Western "Flying A" stock company, is on a recreation tour after constant application to his work for about two years. Mr. Periolat will spend only a few weeks in Chicago, but will not return to the coast until after the first of January.

More Universal Companies Due to Arrive in the Western Film City—Another Selig Animal Picture.

FOUR more Universal companies are now on their way here from New York and are due to arrive the end of this week or early next week.

Two Rex companies, one Imp company and a second Powers company are in the big party which numbers more than 100 persons. It will be the largest and most important single contribution ever made to the local motion picture colony.

There are seven companies belonging to the Universal now at work in this field, counting the Powers company which arrived within a month. Eleven companies working simultaneously under one management will probably constitute the largest motion picture enterprise in the world.

Meanwhile improvements at the Universal plants in Hollywood and in the San Fernando valley are keeping pace with the other details. Since the recent arrival of A. M. Kennedy, the producing manager who came from New York, he and Wesley G. Gilmour, the business manager, have been making things hum. Last week they sent to San Francisco and hired a full regiment of militia for an indefinite period. On the way back the agent dropped off the train at Santa Barbara and spent $11,000 in thirty minutes for Western cow ponies.

About the same time 60 additional head of long horned cattle arrived at the big 20,000 acre motion picture ranch near this city, and another agent of the Universal company came back from a trip to New Mexico personally conducting 60 Indians, making 300 at the ranch.

The forthcoming arrival has made it necessary to do fast work in enlarging the Hollywood studios, where all the dramatic productions are to be made hereafter. The Bison 101 pictures and the other big Westerns will all be made at the ranch.

"The biggest thing that has ever been done in Western motion pictures, either by this company or any other, isn't a circumstance to what we will put out in the next six months and hereafter," says Wesley Gilmour. "We are going to surprise the world at the magnitude and the perfection of our big pictures. This doesn't mean that we are neglecting the drama or the comedy ends of the business, for that is being carefully studied and improved all the time, but our forthcoming productions of virile western stories with big backgrounds, big ideas, and big treatment will be epoch making."

From the way money is being spent by the Universal company in this vicinity it seems that there ought to be some astonishing results. Already the company has the largest and most completely equipped plant in the country. The organization at the ranch alone is as large as that of Barnum and Bailey's circus.

Selig Produces Big Animal Picture.

The biggest animal picture ever attempted by the Selig Polyscope Company, famous already for its animal pictures, was completed this week by Producer Colin Campbell at the Selig animal farm in this city.

It is a two reel production for which the name is still to be chosen. Several weeks will probably elapse before its release for it is expected to reflect much credit on the concern and is to be extensively advertised.

The thing that makes it especially interesting to those who know the technique of producing a picture is that there are several scenes where actual contact takes place between the human and the animal actors.

It appeared that this took place in the recent release "Kings of the Forest," but it really did not. There are a number of scenes in that feature where live lions appeared on the screen with the mother and child. This was accomplished by trick photography, one half of the width of the film being exposed for the animals and the other half for the human beings. When the film is projected it makes two separate actions appear to take place simultaneously both as to time and location.

In the forthcoming release there will be several scenes which were taken under rather tense conditions, but men armed with rifles were stationed in readiness to shoot if it became necessary to protect an actor.

A heavy price was paid for realism when one of the finest male lions in the menagerie, valued at about $800, was shot before the camera. The shooting occurs in dramatic circumstances and the scene is convincing. The character who slays the lion was assumed by Tom Santschi, the same man who had the leading male part in "Kings of the Forest."

Another exciting scene in the new picture will be one where a full grown leopard springs upon a man and a terrific struggle takes place. This scene was not rehearsed. If it had been it would never have been reproduced, for the actor who went through it said afterward that no money could induce him to repeat it.

Lillian Wade, the four-year-old girl whose presence of mind in hiding herself in a trunk to escape the lions was one of the big scenes in the last animal picture, has a prominent part in this one.

When the "Kings of the Forest" was shown at Clune's Main Street Theater in this city last week, the management aroused additional interest by engaging her to appear at each performance. Her home is in this city where the picture was made. After each exhibition of the film the screen was raised disclosing a forest, set in which were cages containing all the animals which took part in the production. A moment later the lid of a trunk which occupied the center of the stage was raised and little Lillian stepped out smiling and bowing.

Handed It To Ince.

Some of the friends of Director Ince, of the Kay-Bee Company, decoyed him to the Venice Country Club the night of November 15, where he was made the victim of a gigantic conspiracy. When he arrived there were about 300 grown-ups waiting for him to remind him in a vociferous manner of something that had entirely slipped his mind, namely, that it was his birthday. Never mind, it was one that comes after 21.

All the members of the Kay-Bee and the Broncho companies were present and a number of specially invited guests from other motion picture companies in the vicinity, among the latter being Mack Sennet and Mable Normand of the Keystone, and Mr. and Mrs. James Young Deer of the Pathe Western company.

There was a banquet, an impromptu entertainment and a dance and it took until nearly 4 o'clock in the morning to run through the program. During the evening they made Ince stand up and look sheepish while a presentation speech was made as a preliminary to handing him a topaz ring, the big stone surrounded with small diamonds. The topaz is supposed to have special significance for those born in November. After that Ince made a speech forgiving everybody for their share in the conspiracy.

Brevities.

Reference was made last week to the fact that "Bill" Clune, who owns a string of big motion picture houses in and around Los Angeles, has gone in heavily for newspaper advertising recently. It might have been added that he is not a pioneer in the newspaper advertising columns, for two other enterprising exhibitors operating big downtown houses preceded him. Mozart's Theater on Grand Avenue made contracts with all the daily newspapers two or three weeks before it opened and has continued to advertise daily ever since. When T. L. Tally came back from San Francisco a couple of months ago and regained possession of the house he had formerly operated on South Broadway between Eighth and Ninth Streets, he also went into the newspapers. The fact that three of the largest motion pictures in Los Angeles are now liberal advertisers may possibly explain to some extent the increased interest which the newspapers have recently taken in the industry.

Marie Coe, a special writer for the Express, this week contributed an article over her signature calling attention to the powerful influence which is being exerted on the present generation by the motion pictures and suggesting what the future effect may be.

A three-reel feature imported from Germany and known as "The Yellow Peril" was to have been shown at the Rose Theater in the downtown business section this week, but was postponed because of a mix-up with the local censor board. The board had made arrangements to hold a special session Monday morning to view the film and if satisfactory pass it for exhibition beginning at noon of the same day. Through a misunderstanding Nelson Evans, head of the American Feature Film Company, who controls it in this section, did not appear, expecting to take it before the board at its next regular meeting the following day. The board waited until noon and meanwhile the management of the theater made hurried arrangements with the Emmick Film Exchange to get the three-reel feature, "The Circus Girl," which had landed in town and was put on as a substitute. "The Yellow Peril" was passed by the board the following day after two slight alterations had been ordered, but Evans lost three days' business for the feature. At the same time the board also approved a two-reel feature of the American Exchange's called "Society Life in Paris." POWELL.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THERE is some talk among the cabaret managers in the city of substituting motion pictures for the entertainment of the diners, the idea being to use the feature line of pictures. One manager, who is particularly interested in the proposition, thinks some of the feature reels produced would be far more pleasing to his patrons than most of the cabaret performers, besides adding more class and interest to the show at a smaller cost. "When people will pay a half dollar and more to see such pictures," he said, "I am quite sure they will see equal value in them when dining. I thing it will pay to make the experiment."

The Mayor wants "Lefty Louie" given a rest. Haven't the courts attended to that?—Evening World. Sure, and let the motion picture people also take the Mayor's tip in connection with that given by the dramatic critic who says that the short-lived trash that is flooding Broadway has had its inevitable demoralizing effect upon both the drama and the public to which it looks for support.

William Fox opened Thanksgiving week with a change of policy at his Academy of Music on Fourteenth Street. He opened the season and continued it until the beginning of the present week with revivals of musical comedy successes. He has now again taken up the "continuous" at 10, 15 and 25. In his announcements he gives no reason for the change. It can readily be surmised. Many other houses that started out with the idea to draw from the picture houses this season with big straight productions at popular prices would like to do the same thing, but cannot on account of being tied up by contracts.

The writer was one of a party of people directly and indirectly interested in the moving picture business who met at dinner to talk over "why we should be thankful." It was a mixed gathering of licensed and other makers, players and showmen, but entirely impromptu. Among the first to speak was an actor. He said he made more money and worked less when with the straight live companies than is his lot with the moving picture business; but, after all, he had much to be thankful for. The pay is fair, the engagement thus far had been continuous and when the day closed he could seek his own fireside. "I do more work in one afternoon now than I did in two days on the road," he said, "and on salary figures I get less per week. But—excuse me while I cherish the thought for a moment—I get it, and without going from home, sweet home."

Another actor said, on a basis of steady employment and the absence of road expenses and incidentals, he had arrived at the conclusion that the man in the pictures is better off than his fellow actor on the one night stands, and the former has more congenial work, although at times it may be a little harder.

An exhibitor was the next speaker and he was evidently very sincere in all he said. In fact, he spoke with such effect that several subsequent speakers advocated that similar meetings be held as often as feasible. As one of them put it: "Impromptu gatherings of this kind bring out many points that are rarely touched upon in formal affairs and help to promote the mutual interests of all concerned in the business."

* * *

The exhibitor stated the work of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America during the past year had done more to create a spirit of thankfulness on the part of all concerned in the motion picture business than any other body of men connected with it. The league itself, he said, should give thanks that it has such an intelligent executive body with such an able man as President M. A. Neff at its head. A year ago rivalry and vindictiveness was rampant. All must admit there has been a great change and the Exhibitors' League must be given a large share of the credit because such changes have been brought about by bringing the people to a thinking point through the personal efforts of Mr. Neff. He has traveled through the country preaching truths of this character: "There is not only a potential influence of mutual gain to be derived from a thorough organization for ourselves, but for every manufacturer, film man and others with whom we have business relations. We believe that every exhibitor should conduct his theater in a pleasant and efficient manner and guarantee the public that the exhibitors, as well as the manufacturers, are working to place cinematography on the very highest plane."

Another speaker was a gentleman widely known in the picture field and who follows all events in connection with it very closely. He heartily endorsed the sentiments expressed by the exhibitor and expressed the hope that before the next Thanksgiving season arrives the public press will have been converted to a spirit of fairness towards the picture business. He said newspaper men, as a rule, are good fellows and when they do not do what they should, it is frequently because they are not in close enough touch to be acquainted with the real facts. They should be brought into meetings of this character and made acquainted with the true nature of our affairs.

"Yes, they certainly need some education along those lines," said a theater owner, "I read a news item from St. Louis the other day in which a representative of the Department of Justice was quoted as saying he had found out that the moving picture trusts were responsible for the creation of the 10, 20 and 30 picture houses. If he means that the film manufacturers brought this about by making improvements and elaborations in the production of motion pictures to justify the owners of the higher priced houses in handling them to the present extent, then I say he is right. If any other meaning is to be attached to the statement, then I say he does not know what he is talking about and no intelligent newspaper man acquainted with the facts would have handled the report seriously."

Among the last of the speakers was one indirectly connected with the manufacturing interests, who took occasion to thank the previous speakers for a chance they had given him to speak on something to which he had given much thought. In view of all that had been said, he felt he could talk on the subject without rendering himself liable to a charge of self interest or prejudice, although the subject was a delicate one in view of the peculiar circumstances surrounding it. The newspapers, particularly in New York, have been devoting considerable space to the condemnation of loan sharks and fake auction rooms, all of which has been perfectly proper. Had the press assumed a similar stand with regard to the motion picture business a great justice would long ago have been done to the industry and much of the vindictiveness referred to by some of the speakers would not have taken root. The newspapers, the speaker said, say that, generally speaking, the fake auctioneer is no respecter of any law or ordinance. Some people are so constituted that they will work harder to get something for nothing than they will to accomplish a legitimate piece of good business with the same profit. "I want to say to you gentlemen," continued the speaker, "that statement can be applied truthfully in its entirety to conditions in the moving picture business as they existed until certain protective measures were taken, and which still continue under cover to a more limited extent. I refer to what is known in the business as 'duping.' The unauthorized reproduction and cheap selling of films made from negatives created by the brain work and financial outlay of others." The speaker proceeded to quote other newspaper comments by the press to the effect that fake auction rooms are a fraud upon rich and poor alike and divert trade from its legitimate channels. Every dollar spent in them is lost to the regular tradesmen and it is an injury to the makers of the goods who spend thousands to manufacture and advertise them.

"Before closing I want to say," said the speaker, "I fully realize that the newspapers cannot handle the matter I refer to with the same latitude as they can the loan sharks and fake auction rooms, because they are not backed up so well with the law; but there is sufficient room for them to do a power of good for all branches of the moving picture industry by taking up the lines I have referred to and others, and showing to people who do not read the trade journals that the legitimate manufacturers, renters and exhibitors are frequently handicapped by a class of people who are of the same class, morally, if not legally, as those the press has exposed."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

That Censorship Matter.

SEVERAL weeks ago we told of a western town where the usual red-headed censorship had been proposed and suggested a campaign of education to offset the misdirected efforts of the reformers. We mentioned no names, but the manager who wrote us was Emil Kehrlein, of the Turner and Dahnken Circuit's house in Fresno, California. His brother, Oliver Kehrlein, of the San Jose house, sends us a letter from his brother from which we quote. We do not, as a rule, get sore lips from blowing our own horn, but we are proud of this endorsement because it was not written to us.

> I had written to Sargent for some of his dope. His suggestions are always the best, and whenever you are in trouble drop him a line. As a matter of fact what he suggested was just about what I was and am doing in this town, and I have actually brought about a condition that he said would be brought about if certain methods were followed, showing that he knows what he is talking about.
> When the talk first came up I wrote a letter to the Republican. Then I visited the Mayor and several of the Trustees and showed them, as best I could, what the little firms were doing, and the impracticability of the proposed ordinance. They saw it, and at the next meeting the agitators backed down somewhat. They proposed a substitute measure, calling for a censor who would have the power, if appealed to by the public, in the case of an obnoxious film, to compel the manager to withdraw it. In other words he can act only on the complaint of some citizen. This is a start in the right direction, curbing the arbitrary power of the censor. I feel that the cleanliness and the tremendous number of educational subjects, coupled with my literary contests and charity benefits, have practically served to knock the props from under this censorship business. I am mad because our theater had to bear the brunt of the whole affair, no help coming from the other picture people, when it was they who were the targets.
> As a matter of fact I felt at times like abandoning the fight, especially when the Rev. Wallace got up at the hearing before the Trustees and urged every one of them to attend the Fresno Photo theater, as he considered it the greatest educational institution in Fresno. I also received a letter from the Humane Society complimenting me on the superiority and educational plane to which I had forced the picture game here. In short these very agitators urge people to come here and they cannot understand why I alone am fighting the measure.

Mostly the Way.

It's mostly the way that the theatre least deserving of restriction jumps in and fights for the good of the business as a whole. The man whose short sightedness in letting through the occasional dangerous picture is the last to enter the fight because the same lack of common sense renders him unable to appreciate the gravity of the situation. It is not so much the censorship that is objected to. It is the slur that is unwittingly put upon the entire business, and the house that respects its business is first to jump into the fight, not because it is itself under censure but because it regards any attack upon the pictures as an attack upon itself indirectly at least, and respecting the business in which it is engaged fights for the reputation of the business as a whole.

Mr. Kehrlein has done what we are constantly urging all exhibitors to do. He fights for the right no matter how much he may, at the same time, help those who through their own inactivity are underserving of assistance. It is the right spirit; the only proper spirit, and it has won; as it always will. It is probable that even the modified censorship will presently be withdrawn because of Mr. Kehrlein's proof to those in power that the pictures are not in need of local censorship other than public opinion.

No manager need fear an honest, intelligent censorship. What he does fear is the thick-headed, arbitrary ruling such as obtains in Chicago where very recently the Edison Willie's Dream was censored because in that delightfully absurd burlesque a small boy slew a dozen or so pirates with his trusty toy pistol. That is a condition that every exhibitor should seek to avoid by all legitimate means.

Same in San Jose.

Oliver Kehrlein adds his own testimony to that of his brother in regard to the house under his own direction. He says:

> The conditions here in San Jose were somewhat similar to Fresno when I arrived, but now I have several ministers as regular patrons, have installed two machines in Protestant Churches, am now helping the Sisters to install one and another is going to the Jesuit University at Santa Clara. All of the newspapers are now boosting and will even run editorials if the occasion demands. At present I have the City School Superintendent, the President of the School Trustees, and one of the High School Principals as judges of my essay contest on As You Like It, so you see the schools are with me. Several times I have received direct boosts from the pulpit during Sunday morning services and one Catholic priest almost forbids his parishioners to attend any other theatre in town.
> I wish that your staff would not only keep up the work of segregating all the educational films, but would go back and select all the good films of this character. It would facilitate my work considerably as the requests for these films come in from many quarters and it keeps me busy keeping each one supplied with different films. Do you know of any list in existence containing past educational films?

We'll Get a List.

We do not know of any such printed list, but Doctor Stockton has a card file of educationals for more than a year back and we shall submit Mr. Kehrlein's request to him. It is the only accurate list we know and will be welcomed by many.

It is a remarkable thing that some managements should be able to place their houses on such a plane as that occupied by the Turner and Dahnken Circuit, while other houses are universally condemned for the style of its performance, but some managers with the mistaken idea that sensation pays best, deliberately set out to make the pictures appear to be worse than they are.

Sensation may pay for a short time, but it doesn't last. The sensational is something that cannot be controlled. It cannot stand still. It whets the mental appetite and the sensation of to-day must be greater than the sensation of yesterday to appeal to the jaded palate. At length a time comes when a point is reached beyond which the sensation-monger cannot go. He cannot meet the demand for the ultra sensational and he loses his patronage.

And one does not have to go far to seek the proof. Five years ago the Salome had started in vaudeville, following the production of the Wilde-Strauss opera. There was a craze for nakedness. Loie Fuller saw the single dance one better by bringing over a troupe of young girls who were nude below the waistline and half nude above. Others followed that lead until the public was satiated. It demanded entire nudity or nothing and the business fell. The "big time" vaudeville business had been on the decline for the past two years. The decent people stayed away when the nudity began. The sensation seeker dropped it when nudity stopped. We have actual box office figures of houses in New York and elsewhere that show a decline of from thirty to forty per cent. in receipts in the past two or three years.

Sensation doesn't pay in the long run. Clean up and get in line with those who seek to uplift the business. Build your house on a firm foundation or you will assuredly find it falling about your ears. Follow the lead of men like the Kehrleins and enjoy the prosperity that is yet to come; a greater prosperity even, than that enjoyed in the first boom of the "store show."

Sound Argument.

We wish that we might afford the space for the entire letter to the papers of which Mr. Kehrlein speaks, but we can reproduce only the ethical argument for the benefit of others. If you do not need it now save it, for the time will come when you are likely to need it. Here it is:

> The Mayor, the honorable board of trustees, and the various civic bodies of the City of Fresno are about to be asked to concur in appointing committees for the purpose of enacting an ordinance censoring motion dramas and motion portrayals.
> As an earnest exhibitor, striving always for the higher plane in presenting photoplays, I ask for a few words in your valued columns.
> To us, who have been associated with the "silent drama" these many years and have watched it grow from a struggling babe into a sterling manhood, the idea of censorship seems so unnecessary. Not that we do not welcome every means for betterment; we do, but it is because we do that you find today the formerly much despised little films doing a vast educational work.
> Can you point to any one form of public amusement, in vaudeville, musical comedy or drama, that consistently, day after day, pours forth, literally, such a torrent of education and worthy subjects as do these self-same little films? What form of public amusement is there today, that will transport you from one world's end to the other, if it is not these self-same little films? What form of public amusement do you find in your theaters that shows how the silk-worm weaves its slender fabric; that shows you how paper is made; that presents the mysteries of the X-ray or liquid air; that unfolds the many beauties of art, history and literature and pours them into your lap in a veritable avalanche? And, what form of public amusement can offer 204 educational, topical, industrial, scientific and scenic pictures within a period of ten months? This theater alone has done it this year, and, mind you, there are other picture theaters presenting educational and entertaining photoplays in the City of Fresno.
> If I mistake not, religions were censored in the ancient days, the art of printing was likewise subjected in the middle ages, while even within the memory of the present generation, your very newspapers have witnessed censorship movements.
> And, have censorship movements ever solved the problem of education institutions? As a matter of fact, what is in store for the editor who permits foul language in his newspaper, for the publisher who consents to obscene pictures in his books, or for the teacher who teaches immorality? The answer is too obvious.

Pre-supposition of evil cannot be cured by censorship—educational institutions stand or fall according to their merits or demerits.

Edisons for December.

Mr. Plimpton courteously sends advance advices for the first half of December, recommending for especial notice four of the list. The first of these is His Mother's Hope, listed for December seventh. This is clean melodrama, the story of a child who wanders away from home to a gypsy camp. In young manhood he is turned out of the camp because he protects an old woman from her brutal husband. He meets success, then reverses and finally enters his old and unremembered home for the purpose of robbery. He is detected and in the end recognized.

An Oppenheim story is listed for the tenth in Annie Crawls Upstairs. In a way it remotely suggests the theme of The Passing of the Third Floor Back. A little lame girl, the daughter of the janitor of an apartment house, climbs from the basement to the upper floors. At each landing she works good until arriving at the top of the house, the sight of her checks a would-be suicide. The child is tired out by her adventurous climb and sound asleep is carried back to the basement where her parents abandon their quarrel at the sight of the sleeping child. It is a novel theme; one that might serve as the theme of a sermon. Have you ever tried to interest your local minister in Sunday pictures? Get him to see this, then offer to bring it back some Sunday and run it in his church.

Fog, released on the thirteenth, is a Bannister Merwin story made in London. It is tense and melodramatic but not blood and thundery.

A Christmas Accident is scheduled for the fourteenth. It is a heart-interest story well worked out. It boasts some snow scenes that are out of the ordinary and unlike the cut paper variety. The story by itself will last well past Christmas.

A Special Front.

Here is a picture of a special front that is sent along with the reels of a C. G. P. C. special handled by the Feature Film Company, of New York. The story deals with a Hindoo girl who marries an English officer. Her pleasant co-religionists send a leopard to steal her child and in following the trail she falls into the hands of the fanatics who bind her to a post in a den infested by snakes, crocodiles and other amiable associates. The lower pieces are mounted on "profile" and may be placed to suit the lobby space. The frame in the center is run by clockwork the leopard moving its head while snakes writhe in and out of sight and the two figures bound to the post move their bodies in poses of despair. Anything with movement attracts attention in an advertising display and this entire layout catches the eye. It caught us the other day when it was being run at the Comedy theater. The Comedy added a couple of men in native dress and the blackest sort of whiskers.

Doing Much Better.

And speaking of the Comedy we are glad to note that they have taken notice of a recent article and now stick to the paper furnished for the releases. They still use too much paper and show a fondness for lurid titles. We think that if they would put in the indirect lighting system (the house interior is far too dark), used less paper and planted it more attractively, letting the light into the lobby and making it more cheerful, they could raise the price to ten cents and get just as many people and twice as much money, but to do it they should try to get as far away as possible from the style of the house next door to mark the contrast. Houses further along the street in both directions make money by being attractive, and there are hundreds of people passing the door every hour who would rather pay ten cents to see a ten cent show than five cents for what that implies. The house has good projection, a mirror screen (with a crack down the middle that doesn't help any), and comfortable seats as picture seats go. They cannot be too comfortable where the house is continuous. The motion picture business has passed the stage where cheapness is the prime attraction. Loosen up the lobby, put up the price and the money will come.

Wants to Exchange.

Fred Foley, of Foley's Pictures, Christchurch, New Zealand, wants to exchange advertising matter with American exhibitors and promises some of his programs in exchange. If you take him up go to the slight trouble of having your package weighed and properly stamped. If you send matter underweight double the postage is collected at the other end in the case of foreign mail.

Mr. Foley runs twelve houses in two circuits of six each. He gets out one program for each set of subjects and this does for all the houses, the schedule being printed on the front page. A program, for example, starts south on Monday at Fairlie, on Tuesday at Makikihi, on Wednesday at Washdyke, Thursday at Temuka and so on, going on the North Circuit the following Monday for six more towns with names just as simple. The programs are ten by four inches, four pages. The first page gives the prices, which are from 12 to 36 cents, and the schedule. The second and third pages are advertising top and bottom with the program in between and the last page is all advertising. There is one star film and six or eight other titles. Mr. Foley writes an interesting letter on the exhibition business in New Zealand which will find its way into Foreign Notes in due time.

About a Kalem.

If you have not yet run Kalem's The Apache Renegade, here is a clip from the Santa Fe New Mexican that will work in well with your press stuff. So many of these western pictures have been made with prospectors with D-handle shovels and sieves instead of washing pans, that it is something to have a picture that is guaranteed authentic by westerners. This picture was made by the Kalem Company in Santa Fe, which explains the burst of local pride. The De Vargas picture referred to is Uprise of the Indians in Santa Fe, yet to be released, which was made on the occasion of the De Vargas celebration. Here is the clipping.

> I went to the Elks' theater partially as an interested party in the returns being received by the New Mexican, on election results, and partly to see the Apache Renegade, the Kalem picture which reproduced one of the dramas enacted by the company last Summer in and around Tesque.
> Manager Stanton is to be congratulated on getting this truly wonderful picture for its first run. It is difficult to conceive of anything more perfect in a moving picture production and no Santa Fean should fail to see it.
> Of course, it appeals to us in a peculiar way because we all know the country where the little drama was enacted, but wherever shown, this wonderful picture should attract wide attention as it is the very perfection of photographic art.
> I felt a little pride, too, as I read on the slide, introductory to the reel, the announcement that the picture was taken near Santa Fe, at an altitude of 6,000 feet and realized that from one end of the country to the other, these pictures would be seen. It will be a splendid advertisement for our old town. It will call attention to the wonderful bits of scenery about here. It will impress upon the minds of the people all over our land that Santa Fe is a place worth seeing, and when the De Vargas pictures come out following this one of the Apache Renegade they will only add to our reputation.

The Shaughraun.

Kalem will release at an early date The Shaughraun, the most popular of all the Boucicault dramas. This picture, which is made by arrangement with Mrs. Boucicault, was done in Ireland last Summer and with real Irish backgrounds will prove one of the best of the Irish productions. You can't afford to let this get past you for box office reasons. Special music will be published, about twenty-eight pages of score being supplied for half a dollar. Don't let your pianist "fake" the music. You will pay extra for the subject. Spend another half dollar and get the music right. Get it ahead that your pianist may become familiar with it. These Kalem special scores are splendid things for the live wire managers.

The Melies Poster.

The Melies Company has sent the licensed exhibitors a large poster in brown showing the members of the company who are now on their around the world tour. The poster is a handsome one and worth the ten cents asked for it but we think that the sending of the poster with the request that ten cents be returned was not altogether tactful. The same tube also carries the announcement of sets of eleven photographs of the players at two and three dollars the set according to the finish. The poster is good advertising matter though the accompanying text is poorly prepared.

Nowadays the careful exhibitor tabulates all the data regarding photographs and postcards of the favorites that requests for information may be intelligently replied to. Do you? You should, for to encourage interest in the favorites is to make more popular the pictures in which they appear.

Better Yet.

S. L. Baxter of the Bee and Isis theaters, Denver, goes even further. M. L. Smith, "The Slide Man," of that city, send in a black and white fac-simile of a slide run at both houses every performance which reads:

> "All the People read the daily newspapers, comparatively few read the pictures; the Moving Picture World, a weekly publication, furnishes all the information in advance with a synopsis of every picture to be released and the date. For Sale by all News Dealers at 10 cents per copy or $3.00 per year."

Mr. Baxter knows that whatever interests his patrons in the pictures helps him to hold the business he draws. He finds that the brief descriptions of the films on his program rouses interest and creates a demand for fuller information than can be given in the house publication. By recommending the Moving Picture World he knows that he not only does this paper a very graceful compliment, but he helps his own business by getting his patrons more fully interested in the pictures.

Mr. Smith writes that the New Isis is nearing completion and that a photograph will be sent when the house is done. We hope that he ties a piece of string around his finger to be sure to remember to send it.

The Isis program remains the same, a four page folder with the name of the house appearing nine times on the front page in a novel arrangement with the program on pages two and three and the special features more fully treated on the fourth page. Early runs are used and apparently all of the special features are snapped up as soon as they appear.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Kinemacolor Address.

A CORRESPONDENT points out that while our address slips give the Kinemacolor address as Los Angeles, the company's advertising asks that photoplay scripts be sent to the New York address.

The Kinemacolor photoplay editor is Mrs. Anita Hendrie Miles, who is with the company at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, and scripts should be sent to her and not to the New York office where there is no editorial force. Send them straight to Los Angeles and they will come at once into the proper hands.

Watch K-B and Broncho.

It will pay advanced writers to study the Kay-Bee and Broncho releases; not merely look at them, but study them in an endeavor to penetrate their style of production. They are now making two two part subjects each week and Richard V. Spencer writes that they have not been able to find a writer whose work exactly fits in with the studio ideas. To quote Mr. Spencer: "We find it impossible to get writers who can put over powerful stories and put them over in our style of technique. We have had work from many of the star writers, but somehow they cannot put over the stuff that we demand, and as a consequence Mr. Ince and myself have to do most of the writing."

Mr. Ince has four directors under him, putting on the big scenes himself, and he cannot well spare the time to frame up the stories as well. He would welcome the advent of a writer or two who could get the stuff over in exactly the form he wants it, and it will be worth while to make a try for the inside track.

Eastern Universals.

Joseph Brandt, publicity promotor for the Universal Film Company, is authority for the statement that the Universal is now willing to act on the outside scripts. He states that all scripts have been held for reading and that now they are settled in their new quarters in the Mecca Building they will hurry to catch up with back submissions and handle more promptly the incoming scripts. Mr. Brandt is less communicative as to the dozens of letters we have received asking why the Universal does not reply to letters of inquiry accompanied by return envelopes, but contents himself with the statement that from now on things will be run properly.

Ever since Hal Reid was permitted to upset what started out to be a good script room, the Universal Photoplay script department has been an unspeakable thing, and it will take some time to fully clear up the mess Mr. Reid made of things. It is pleasant to know that a start has been made—and Mr. Brandt says that such a start has been made.

If You Live in Pittsburgh.

If you live in Pittsburgh and want to talk photoplay with other writers, we have the address of a man who is willing to form a circle. Send in your names and they will be passed along.

Barely Possible.

We can't imagine two photoplaywrights in a populous place like Rockville Centre, Long Island, but if there is another one in the town we can put him in touch with a fellow fan.

Someone in Kansas City.

A photoplaywright in Kansas City wants the society of his fellows. He suggests that two or three heads are better than one, even if his own is of solid ivory. Send in your name and it will be sent to him.

More Fools Needed.

To translate a current expression into more polite talk, there is a credulous fool born every minute, but the supply will have to be increased if all the photoplay grafters are to have their full supply, for the fakirs are increasing all out of proportion to the visible supply of fools.

The latest comes from the Rocky Mountain district and is a "Clearing House" for photoplayerights. All you have to do is to send ten cents in silver for a copy of the book they issue and if you do not like the book you can keep it and ask for your money back. You are also required to sign an innocuous contract to the effect that you appoint the clearing house your agents and will send them all your stuff. If it conforms to style you are not charged a reading fee. If it doesn't you pay the fee for reading. You also pay all postage costs in the event of a sale or not and you give them ten per cent. on all sales and let them collect the money and send you your share less the postage.

It all looks simple enough, but it is as full of jokers as a Tammany Hall graft bill at Albany, and all you get is the privilege of giving up ten per cent. to these benevolent persons who do for you—or at least promise to—precisely what you can do for yourself.

There is not one single agency, clearing house, society, association or individual who can sell to any better advantage than yourself and in most studios you stand a far better chance of making a sale than the agency, since most editors are disposed to choke off these pests who can do them no good and who have rich possibilities for harm. Send for our list of addresses—which costs you only the return postage and addressed envelope—study production through this page and you have the best of any sales agent.

Richard V. Spencer.

Although Richard V. Spencer is located in Los Angeles, he is no stranger to New York writers for he spent several weeks in the east last Summer and made a host of friends. He is an unassuming sort of chap, quiet, modest but a good mixer and not at all suggestive of a man who can supply the scripts for 5,000 feet of film each week, though he has to do much of the work with the manager of production, Thomas Ince. Mr. Spencer originally hails from the east though recently a resident of Los Angeles. His scripts attracted the attention of the old Bison company when they went westward from Coney Island and he was installed as photoplay editor and writer. Prior to this connection he had done considerable free lance work in stories and photoplays and for a time was Los Angeles correspondent of this paper.

Richard V. Spencer.

He Knows.

Here is something from David Morrison that should put a muffler on some of the kickers who spot family resemblances between their rejected scripts and some other production. Mr. Morrison writes:

> I would like to state a curious and rather interesting fact that occurred to me that might prove helpful in relieving the minds of those various kickers who make known to the world through your column of the Photoplaywright that their ideas have been stolen by a film company to which same have been submitted.
> To prevent the loss of plots and ideas I keep what I choose to call my "Idea Book" and put down from time to time different ideas and suggestions as they come to me. Some time ago I hit upon what I thought a clever idea and put it down in the book, to be worked out in its turn. I had lately started work on it when I read in last week's World of Eclair's release entitled "The Black Hand." This caused me to discard my plot altogether.
> My story was also called "The Black Hand" and was very similar to Eclair's synopsis. My chief character was even named Bridget, as I believe to be the same case in Eclair's story. Now I know positively this idea was not stolen from me, in that I never submitted it to anyone, in fact, had not finished writing it out. It is just a case where "two hearts beat as one" and Eclair's beat faster than mine.

If anyone had seen my synopsis and also Eclair's, it would not have taken much labor to convince them that one was taken from the other, and yet the very fact that I had never shown my idea to anyone (no one but myself ever sees my Idea Book) proves that such remarkable coincidences can really happen. And I had my idea long before Eclair announced their release of "The Black Hand."

I have never landed one with Eclair, so even though I lost out I get some compensation out of it in the knowledge that I undoubtedly would have landed had I been quicker. So much for being an optimist.

The Right Viewpoint.

Here's a writer who looks at things from a sane viewpoint. Recently he had a chance to go over old files of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD and read up the things that were printed before he became interested in photoplay, and these are his conclusions:

I was particularly interested in the letters from Hall and Kitchell, for they show what tremendous strides have occurred during the last year in the lot of the scenario writer. Though my success has been very small, my experiences have been sufficient to show me that a scenario writer to-day receives very decent treatment, and if only some writers would realize, as I try to do, what poor stuff they are turning out, they would not grumble in the way they do. It always seems to me that a writer is getting an absolutely fair deal whichever way it comes to him, whether in rejection slips or in small checks. The companies are not going to pay out fancy prices for stuff they cannot use in its entirety, and I have come to the conclusion that a small check is good proof that one's efforts have failed except in one regard, which is that one has given the manufacturer an idea which he can work up, and nothing more.

That's a lot better than kicking, and it leads to better things. If you think that your checks are too small strive to do better work and the pay will be better. You'll not get the top price until you can write the top notch play.

Writing Comedy.

Don't think that because it is easy to think of a joke that it is easy to write comedies. It is not. It looks simple, but it is the most difficult form of playwriting because it demands an appreciation of humor and the ability to invent humorous situations. A comedy is merely a story humorously told. In the comedy of the stage the dialogue is as important as the plot. In the comedy of fiction the incident must be revealed in diverting phrase. In photoplay the comedy must be told in continuously funny action. You cannot write twenty or thirty scenes of sober action leading up to some funny situation where the plot breaks. The majority of the scenes must each have its own comedy action while the narrative is advanced and it is here that the average writer of comedy falls short. If a scene is not naturally funny, put some humor into it. Do not force the comedy action but invent something that is germane to the plot and natural to the situation. If you can do this you can write comedy, but until you can get a laugh in every scene you are not writing comedy no matter how funny the central idea may be. As a rule the central idea furnishes the comedy for only one scene; not for the entire play. In comedy you must play faster, work harder and strive constantly for the natural, unforced laughs. And remember that the editors go to vaudeville shows, the same as you do. They know the old sketches and the whiskered jokes. If they wanted them they would write them themselves.

Dynamite the Sticker.

Now and then we see a script someone has written that could be very much improved if some charges are made, but it seldom happens that the changes are made in full. The average writer seems to cling to a certain idea or set of ideas like a burr to a horse's tail. You'll never be able to swing your scripts until you can wash the slate clean of all ideas save the central one. If you think it will be clever to have the father of the girl kick the young man from the house, you'll keep that kick in through a hundred new versions of the script. We recall one late incident in which a man was annoyed because a married woman, an old sweetheart of his, called him to her house late at night for old time's sake. A change was suggested in the script that unmarried the lady and did other important things, but back came the script and the young man was still annoyed though now the phone called him to the home of an attractive unmarried woman at a perfectly circumspect hour. He had been annoyed in the first line up of action and he kept on being annoyed through two other versions of the plot though the reason for his annoyance had been removed in the second version.

Unconsciously you'll cling to such bits as this through successive versions, though you'll never be able to work over scripts until you can clean the stage and start fresh. Use dynamite to remove the stickers if you have to, but get them out of the way or you'll never be able to do much with the good idea improperly developed.

Talking Pictures.

A correspondent who is looking rather far ahead, wants to know about the talking pictures.

It will probably be some time before the talking pictures are regularly released and it is probable that when they are the writing of the plays will be given to a few persons familiar with the spoken drama, for the script of a talking picture will simply be a drama in miniature with rather full stage directions.

It will require a nice knowledge of time values to write to even approximately fit the thousand foot release. Each scene must be carefully timed for dialogue and action, each interval must be allowed for and the dialogue so condensed that each scene shall carry on the story to the point required. All of this will be beyond the ability of the average writer for a time and must be done at first by specially trained persons, but here are a few hints for the inquirer and others who want to start practising now against the time when there is a demand for the spoken photoplay.

In writing dialogue it is essential that it be colloquial and not in the lofty tone of blank verse. The dialogue must be in every day language and not the stilted declamation of the old time dramas. In other words the characters must speak as every day men and women naturally do speak.

To keep within the time limits it will be essential to keep the talk down to the essential speeches so far as practicable. Long descriptions and monologues must be avoided, the speeches being cut up and divided among several players rather than held to one or two when more are on the stage.

It will be necessary to indicate the business more fully than in the stage play, but not as fully as in the photoplay. It is permissible to have scenes of action, alone, though not many of these.

The great point is to transfer to the stage the natural speech and action of every day life rather than to create a false standard for the picture. George M. Cohan is not a great writer, his diction is faulty, but he seldom scores a failure because he makes his characters human beings and not stilted puppets. Aim first, last and in between at naturalness, naturalness of speech, of action and of situation.

But do not be in a hurry because it will be several years before there is any real demand for the spoken photoplay.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—No question can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

F. F.—In Gold and Glitter Miss Grace Lewis, formerly of Imp and Vitagraph, was the wife and Lionel Barrymore her lover. You have better eyesight than we. We can see no reasons why we don't want to print Miss Pickford's picture now that she is out of photo play.

B. T. I.—You will require permission of the manufacturers to use the portraits of their players for your proposed souvenir. We are advised that all scripts sent the Universal office will shortly be acted upon.

C. A. C.—American casts are not available as the company is working under pressure and cannot spare the time to send them out.

M. J.—We do not consider the ages of the players proper subject for inquiry. Address Mr. Williams in care of the Vitagraph studio. His personal address concerns only his intimate friends. Miss Leonard is not working at present. Miss Buckley is not ill. Miss Joyce is not in town at present. Mrs. Costello is not dead.

E. H. H.—Pathe does not reply to inquiries as to players' identities.

L. H.—See reply to B. T. I. Give Kay-Bee eight weeks before querying.

J. R. A.—If you have any idea your photoplays will be stolen don't send them out. You don't belong to the business so long as you nurse that idea. It is impossible to give an average price for scripts.

E. F. M.—Miss Mary Pickford had the leads in the two Biograph plays you mention. She has left photoplay for the dramatic stage.

ALLDER.—No one around the Lubin plant ever discovered the names of the Los Angeles players, so your first question cannot be replied to. Baby Nelson was the child in Together. Lillian Wade was the child in The Lake of Dreams. Send envelope for the picture information. We do not supply addresses in this department.

NOVICE.—Send to this paper for a copy of Technique of the Photoplay. It will be sent postpaid for one dollar. We cannot reply to your question in the limits of this space.

H. B.—Same one.

W. E. W.—We are shy that first Biograph cast. Miss Mae Hotely and Jerold Henever are with the Lubin Comedy Company in Jacksonville. Miss Martha Russell is touring the picture houses at present on leave of absence from Essanay. The Husband in Gold and Glitter was Elmer Booth. We do not answer Pathe questions since they will not.

F. B.—You are not limited as to the number of words used in a photoplay, but the fewer you use the better so that the meaning is clear. A trained writer will use from a third to a quarter the number of words the novice employs and make his idea more clear. Describe only the principal action; the action that tells the story. There is a well defined form. See Technique of the Photoplay. Western stories are made in and around Los Angeles where it is possible to work outdoors the year round.

C. E. C.—The Powers casts are not available.

W. H. R.—See reply to B. T. I. The companies you mention all have Winter studios. Kalem has four or five.

A. B.—The Asta Nielson features were virtually a special brand. Will reply later to your second question. The third is outside the scope of this department. You should know the answer to the fourth better than we since you are on the ground.

W. I. G.—There is some difference between Tom Beckett and Thomas A. Becket. Vitagraph made the latter about two years ago. We do not place the other two titles.

A. B.—We do not reply to inquiries as to the marriage relations of the players, but at the mere fact that a man and woman play sweethearts in the same company is not sufficient reason to suppose them to be man and wife. We have not heard that the Thanhouser intends releasing through the Universal. Probably it is news to them. If we had such dreams as these we would cut out mince pie.

M. E. H.—In the first place you'll lose a lot of valuable time trying to market scripts made from copyrighted plays. The studio can do this sort of work far better than you can if it wants to. If you do work over copyrighted plays, it is necessary to make some arrangement with the holder of the copyright. The purchase of a copy of the book carries with it no right to dramatize or make other use of it and changing the names of the players does not alter your legal responsibility in the least. You are liable to get in trouble with the author and then be arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses as you are required to state that you are the author of an idea before you get your check. Your questions do seem unnecessary, as you suggest, for a little thought would have shown you that you have no right to the property of another and a copyright is tangible property. Scripts should be addressed to the photoplay editor of a company and not to the director.

R. R. P.—Mrs. Julia Mackley was the Mother in Essanay's The Mother of the Ranch. Miss Virginia Ames was one of the daughters (the smaller). The other is not known to the home office. Please be more explicit than "the man" in asking questions. Which of the several men do you mean? We have not the Nestor cast.

Comments on the Films

"THE THIRD THANKSGIVING" (Edison), Nov. 25.—There is a note of human earnestness in most of James Oppenheim's work that places him among a group of photoplaywrights and writers following the path of Charles Dickens. There never was a humaner or more wholesome model to follow.

This is a dramatic little picture of a family reunited at Thanksgiving. The son had married an actress, and the father had refused to let him come home even to spend Thanksgiving Day. The refusal was repeated the following year, but just at the third anniversary, events turned so that the father was brought to see how fine a character the little woman had. He relents. Charles Ogle plays the father; Mrs. William Bechtel, the mother; Harry Beaumont, the son, and Edna Flugrath, the actress. Robert Brower, Bigelow Cooper and Viola Flugrath also have roles. It is a very pleasing picture, well acted and full of heart-warming sentiment.

"WILD PAT" (Vitagraph), Nov. 23.—A story of Ireland and America. Wild Pat is a hard drunkard at home, but the village priest induces him to go to America and brace up. He makes good in America, but is killed in averting a boiler explosion nearly caused by the carelessness of his drunken associates. The priest has to tell the wife and comfort her. Arthur Bently, the author, has provided a wholesome human picture, which has been skillfully produced by Charles Kent. The acting is commendable. Rose Tapley, as the wife, has the only role that requires highly emotional playing. Her characterization is intelligent, but has its limitations. Harry T. Nearey's part, Pat, is clearly drawn, as is the village priest, by Tefft Johnson.

"THE REVOLT OF THE PEASANTS" (C. G. P. C.), Nov. 22.—This is not a historical picture in any strict sense of the word. It exists for the sake of a sensational climax. Some Dutch peasants bind four of the Duke of Alva's Spanish soldiers each to an arm of a windmill, and let the wind fling them around. It is melodramatically acted, so that from the first everything is a climax, and when the climax comes it is flat in consequence.

"MANFREDONIA, SOUTHERN ITALY" (Cines), Nov. 23.—These old cities in lower Italy are extremely interesting. Some fine panoramas of the mountainous neighborhood are included. A very instructive offering, well enough photographed.

"TWO AFFLICTED HEARTS" (Cines), Nov. 23.—On the same reel, a farce with a very slight situation. It is short, but seems strung out, nevertheless. Part of it is good.

"BILLY'S BURGLAR" (Vitagraph) (Special).—A two-reel picture that held a large East Side audience very closely. It is a story of a boy of about twelve, who had a decided taste for detective stories, his family including the cook, a burglar in police uniform and the copper on the beat. It is very well produced and naturally acted. The thrilling story is pleasingly relieved with unforced humor that made several good laughs. An excellent picture that can be depended upon to please.

"THE SILENT SIGNAL" (Lubin), Nov. 23.—A melodramatic picture, in which the hero, heroine and villain are introduced without loss of time, which is commendable. We see at once enough to understand the social status of the first two, but not of the third. It is always safe to take time enough to properly introduce the villain. In this case we don't know that the man was influential in any way. Such a knowledge helps in melodramas. The villain must never be a nonentity, even for one act. Also, since the melodrama's writer had decided to have this villain caught abusing a meek halfbreed, it would have been better to have the hero interfere, rather than the heroine, since the villain was to wreak vengeance on him, and she was to learn of his predicament by means of a silent signal, and to bring the troops to the rescue. A heroine needs to be young and pretty more than courageous, while the hero needs to be chivalrous. The hero in this instance is almost colorless. Capt. W. Dean wrote the scenario. L. C. Phillips plays the lieutenant and hero; Edna Payne, the colonel's daughter and heroine.

"RED WING AND THE PALE FACE" (Kalem), Nov. 23.—An Indian story, and one that hardly could be less probable. It fails to convince at all, but it is clearly produced, and one or two of its scenes are beautiful photographs. Jane Wolfe plays Red Wing, an Indian girl; Carlyle Blackwell, a white man who has killed Red Wing's sweetheart, an Indian, played by Knute Rahmn. Her father, the chief, is played by Paul C. Hurst. The white man's father is played by William Herman West, and his wife by Lillian Christy.

"A CHASE ACROSS THE CONTINENT" (Edison), Nov. 23.—That the situation behind this picture is artificial doesn't hinder it much, once it gets under way. It is for the most part well acted and plausibly conducted. There is one scene that seemed to us extremely displeasing. A niece is being defrauded by her uncle, who has hidden a will by which, unless the niece is married in San Francisco by a certain date, he is to inherit. A thief has robbed her aunt of gems. She finds the will, calls up her fiance and prepares to hurry with him to San Francisco in disguise. The uncle sets a detective on the girl's trail as the thief. This detective enters the girl's room with a drawn revolver. It seems unnatural and unnecessary. Charles Reigel plays the uncle; Camille Dalberg plays the aunt with some distinction; Laura Sawyer plays the niece; Jessie McAllister, her maid; Benjamin Wilson, her fiance, and James Garden, the detective. It plainly pleased a large Broadway audience, and is commendable and good entertainment. The photography is fine.

"A SAILOR'S HEART" (Biograph), Nov. 25.—A satirical comedy of a sailor and his many sweethearts, each of whom is the only one he ever—etc. Satirical comedies exist for the sake of laughter, and not for smiles. Under the fun there is the nettle, and where it fails to get strong hold of us it is apt to irritate. In this there are good laughs; they come only when the satire stumbles and true comedy steps into its place. This relieves the picture and makes it good entertainment.

"THE STOLEN SYMPHONY" (Lubin) (Special).—A two-reel subject that was very carefully produced and finely acted. It probably would have been a masterpiece in one reel, but seems drawn out as it is. A big East Side audience, a large part of which came in because this feature had been advertised, watched it with close attention and, although there was no applause, seemed to take pleasure in it.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 48," Nov. 25.—Contains a number of good items on the Balkan War. There are no battle scenes, but we are shown now the Bulgars going out to war, and now the Turks. A good picture.

"THE PENITENT" (Essanay), Nov. 22.—In this picture a conventional story is very well acted and smoothly and clearly told. The sets and backgrounds are fine and it has many lovely scenes. These things alone keep its head above water and make it an acceptable offering. But it seems too bad that the skill and care that was expended hadn't been used on a better scenario. Francis X. Bushman plays a hopeless lover of a pretty girl (Beverly Bayne) who loses her sight in a chemical laboratory explosion. Her fiance (Wm. Bailey) grows tired of her being blind and falls in love with her cousin (Mildred Weston). Howard Missimer and Helen Dunbar play Beverly's parents and Wm. Walters plays the doctor.

"A LETTER TO THE PRINCESS" (Eclair), Nov. 22.—This is the fifth installment in the "What Happened to Mary" series and appeals to us as the most interesting of the whole series so far, although we remember saying that same thing of the one just preceding. Of course it is well acted, but it is unusually thrilling, being a story after the manner of Dumas' stories and dealing with some important "state paper," of character not disclosed, which Mary is to deliver to Princess Ida. She has trouble doing it. Mark MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt play two conspirators who do their best to get it away from her. One good scene, from a popular viewpoint, is the lawn party of royalty at which Mary (Mary Fuller) finds the princess.

"LOVE AND TREACHERY" (Lubin), Nov. 21.—A theatrical story of smugglers in which there are no new characters, just the stock villain, hero, heroine and half witted man, with the soldiers, etc. We find the usual rocky beach scenes, etc. The author is William C. Carr, who has followed the approved formula for fabricating a melodrama. The hero is played by Geo. E. Reehm, the villain by Walter Stull, the heroine by Frances de Moyer; the half wit by Thomas Aiken and the captain by Robert Burns.

"THE GOVERNOR'S CLEMENCY" (Melies), Nov. 21.—There is more freshness and humanity in the idea set forth by this picture than we expected when the situation was first stated. It interested us not a little. It's a story of the West and concerns a man out of work and desperate because his family is in want. He determines to hold up the stage; but misses it and comes on the Governor who is driving alone. This official hears his story and makes him a game warden. The picture suffers from the artificial way the man's brother is warned of his intention of robbing the stage; but it suffers most from the fact that we are left in the dark about what happened when he held up the Governor until we know that he has been appointed to some office. We are left to guess what happened and we are led to guess right. Then the whole is shown to us. We should have been led to guess wrong, then the showing of it wouldn't have seemed like repetition.

"THE FLOWER GIRL'S ROMANCE" (Kalem), Nov. 23.—A tragic picture taken on a flower ranch in California and full of beauty, of scenery naturally; but of human things also. Jane Wolff is the story's heroine, the flower girl whose heart is piteously wounded. Miss Wolff has usually played older roles and it is with agreeable surprise that one finds her so adequately filling a part that needed youth and comeliness. We have long been noticing her work and have seen it as the saving grace of some than one picture. She is most certainly among that not too numerous group of players of distinctive talent.

The story is of the simplest, but, in those scenes in which Miss Wolff shows a young girl's sorrow, it is deeply significant. She has indeed accomplished something more than a portrayal, at least in the best part of her work; she has almost identified herself with the flower girl whose love had been wakened by a man already engaged and who later sees how matters stand and is compelled to gather flowers for the wedding.

The picture is not wholly comprehensible, chiefly because the hero's character is shown in only a sketchy manner. He is drawn as distinctly not a villain and yet is shown as making love to the girl. For the first half of the picture we felt that perhaps the producer was going to make the fiance turn out to be only a sister. We had been seeing many other pictures and perhaps owe the producer an apology although it was the producer's weakness that sent us searching for some explanation. Again, we cannot help feeling that to cut off the last two hundred feet would help the offering. The last three scenes consciously asked our pity for the heroine whereas those that immediately preceded them were content merely to show us these reasons for pity. They were sincere, true and very effective and were followed by a distinct anti-climax.

As an offering this picture is desirable. The people will like it. Wm. Herman West plays the girl's father; Carlyle Blackwell the man, and Neva Gerber, a very pretty girl, very acceptable in this role, the man's fiancee.

"THE INFORMER" (Biograph), Nov. 21.—The one quality that marks the work of an experienced maker from that of others is a feeling for what is significant. We notice evidences of skill and experience in this picture, but not so markedly as in some by this company. Yet so thrilling and so well made is the story that it will draw the audience forward, make it swallow the scenes with its eyes, so to speak. The scenario behind it is unusually strong for a war time picture. It, as a human tale, is a long advance over "The Battle," by the same company, and the producer has made it far more thrilling than that picture, although only a squad is seen fighting. A very desirable offering.

"HOW MR. BULLINGTON RAN THE HOUSE" (Vitagraph), Nov. 22.—Mr. W. L. Tremayne, the author of this picture, has at least added one delightfully refreshing series of scenes to a rather stale situation. The last third of the picture is dandy and kept the house full of hearty laughter; but the first two thirds, except for two or three moments, is not fresh enough to be very funny. Florence Turner played her part well and was ably supported by Kate Price, but it is a comedy depending largely on the character of Mr. Bullington and probably was written for Bunny. Hughie Mack is an intelligent actor; but he didn't show genius in this part, and left it rather flat. When Flora Finch, the last cook, arrives with her family, she dominates the situation and makes it very amusing. Lillian Walker plays a Swedish girl whom the Bullingtons tried out after they fired Kate Price, the first cook.

"THE FIRE FIGHTER'S LOVE" (Selig), Nov. 21.—A melodramatic picture with some very convincing fire scenes. Two firemen are rivals in love. The unsuccessful one gets drunk and is abusive. A fire call is rung and the successful one risks his life to save the other. Nothing is impossible except things that contradict each other, like round squares, for instance. But it surely is not probable for two men to be caught on the second story of a burning house when the walls and roof fell and yet lived almost unhurt. The picture is an adaptation from Carl Chapin's story, "The Test," was produced by Oscar Eagle, and seemed to interest. Charles Clary and Wm. Stowell play the two firemen; Adrienne Kroel plays the girl. Others in the cast are Walter Roberts, fire captain; Fred. Bernard, an old fireman, and Collin Reid, the old fireman's son.

"A QUESTION OF AGE" (Pathe), Nov. 21.—A picture that tickled a large audience and kept it laughing. It is a success without a doubt; but it is probable that few beside Gwendolin Pates could have got it over. As it is, she fails once in a while, but for the most part keeps its very farcical business from falling into the utterly ridiculous. Her part calls for a young girl of Gwendolin's own age who learns that an old flame of her widowed mother is coming to see her and the "baby." So a baby she decides to be and finds a dress suitable to a girl of five. She gets across with it very well, better than her friend, the youth next door who is let in and dresses in the clothes of his small brother very fat. These two make mamma's lover romp with them. The plight of the small fat boy who has to wait long for his clothes also makes laughter.

"BILLY McGRATH'S ART CAREER (Essanay), Nov. 21.—Pictures dealing with studio life and with artists and their adventures have a big advantage over pictures of fugitives from justice, of unconvincing, impossible love stories and melodramas. And when, as in this case, they are good comedies with a tangible amount of real human experience, albeit exaggerated for the sake of fun, they can be depended upon to furnish amusement. This one kept a smile warm all through and now and then made a good hearty laugh. The audience liked it.

Billy McGrath (John Steppling) is a society man who gets squelched by an impressionist (E. H. Calvert) for not knowing what a picture was about. His fiancee (Dolores Cassinelli) and her mother (Eleanor Blanchard) are there and are ashamed of him. The former tells him he must amount to something before she'll marry him, so he turns artist. His butler (C. Hitchcock) has to play model. Billy's accidental achieving of fame gives him an idea for helping a girl artist whom he finds is having hard times. A few crazy smears on her paintings help in their ready sale. Ruth Stonehouse plays this girl. Alkali Ike is now an art connoisseur, and appears in this picture.

"TIMID MAY" (Vitagraph), Nov. 20.—One hardly expects much that is fresh in these ranch farces played by clowns. There is one unexpected incident, but after it has been used four or five times over and over again, the laugh, that was most hearty at first, grows thin. Mary Charleson is fair as a clown; but that kind of work doesn't seem to be the true path for her. Robert Burns plays a timid, blustering puncher; Geo. Stanley plays a timid, bewhiskered terror of the mountains; Chas. Bennet, a sheriff. The author is Royal A. Baker; producer, R. S. Sturgeon.

"DARKTOWN DUEL" (Vitagraph), Nov. 20.—A shorter and more amusing picture than the other on the same reel. It's a picture of colored people and in it a love rivalry ends in a melon eating duel. Mr. Johnson, of the cavernous mouth, loaned from the Kalem studio, wins the duel; but loses the girl who fears she can't support a husband with so big an appetite.

"THE COUNTRY BOY" (Pathe), Nov. 20.—Just a romance in which Betty Gray plays the heroine and Charles Arling her wealthy father. Although at first Betty is an invalid, she travels out to the West alone, notwithstanding the ample means of her people. This is merely a specimen of work that many producers carelessly leave in their pictures, expecting the spectators to excuse them. Even where such are excused the picture suffers none the less. The only really fresh or convincing part of this offering is the manner in which the heroine's father's factory catches fire. The girl is in the building; she has recovered and has come back from the West. A cowboy who had fallen in love with her and who had come to the city and had been given the cold shoulder by her father is now on the fire force and rescues her. In the first place, these stories in which poor cow punchers who are grown up and who fall in love with rich girls so young that they wear their hair down their backs, are anything but convincing. This one invites cynical thoughts. It is pretty well photographed, but very poorly acted.

"THE TELL-TALE MESSAGE" (Kalem), Nov. 20.—A picture of a crime and how it was brought home to its instigator, a rich banker. Two old ladies, frightened at account of burglaries, bring their treasure to the banker for safe keeping and he gets his gate keeper to steal it from the safe. A clew is produced that leads the detective to the old man who is arrested. The tell-tale message comes from the banker to the old man in prison. It is hidden in an egg and discovered. This story gives some chance for character sketching, but it is made much use of along this line. The producer's attention seems to have been given more to creating suspense. But his failure to get strong plausibility hinders this. The chief difficulty seems to have been that we are not shown why the innocent old gate keeper should have fallen so easily at his time of life. As shown, it is displeasing. Stewart Holmes plays the banker; Lawrence Wood, the gate keeper; Earle Fox, a detective and also the banker's valet, a good duplication. Hazel Neason plays an unimportant role as gate keeper's daughter.

"HIGH EXPLOSIVES AS USED IN THE U. S. ARMY" (Edison), Nov. 20.—It is well photographed and naturally makes a dandy offering.

"SALLY ANN'S STRATEGY" (Edison), Nov. 20.—Louise Alvord, the authoress of this delightful comedy sketch, has provided two of the Edison players with fine character parts. Alice Washburn has the happy faculty of making her characters, within her limitations which give her plenty of scope, quite natural and convincing. She plays Sally Ann, a farmer's wife. Martin Fuller, whose work we haven't been noticing so long, does as well in the role of her husband. They have just sold the farm and have a bundle of money. Si is going to the city to deposit it. Sally wants to go with him, but he won't let her. She uses strategy—it is a quick inspiration at the last moment—and exchanges the package of money for a package of wood that looks like it and this Si takes along. Of course, he falls in with the plausible stranger and loses it. For some reason, this little comedy was a welcome relief from the artificial, melodramatic or complicated pictures we have been seeing for more than a week. Charles Ogle, Wm. Bechel and Bigelow Cooper have lesser roles. A pleasing picture.

"THE SAINT AND THE SIWASH" (Selig), Nov. 19.—The saint refers to the wife of a man, reported to be a fugitive from justice; who has followed her husband to the wild lands. The Siwash is a squaw, owned by a villainous white man, and whom the saint rescues from her bondage. If the picture's object, even in part, was to stir us with admiration for the white woman's nobleness to call her the saint it wasn't wholly wise. We are also kept from full sympathy with her by the fact that until the end of the story when, through an unexpected turning upside down of the situation brought about by what was almost a prestidigitator's trick, not organically dramatic, it is shown that her husband is innocent. By no means do we argue that a wife shares her husband's gilt; but her seeming to help him in his escape makes her seem to. The picture has the advantage of being freshly interesting and as entertainment it deserves a good place among others of the week. The wife is played by Myrtle Stedman; her husband, by R. de Roselli; the Siwash by Mrs. Lester Cunio; the brutal squaw man, by Lester Cunio. William Slavens McNutt wrote the scenario, which was produced by Marshall Stedman.

"A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE" (Lubin), Nov. 19.—One wonders what object the writer of this picture had in view, what impression he desired to create. He shows ability in his construction. There are three qualities in every good dramatic production. They are clearness, smooth progress of incident, and interest. In this picture we find some of all of these; but precious little of the last and after all, with the people, it is the most important. In the early days the man who had committed some crime and was fleeing from justice used to be helped by a girl and he then found in her a sweetheart. This was the cause of much disgust. Then we found fugitives being helped and converted; but it wasn't found convincing enough. Of late, the helped fugitives are shown as biting the hand that helped them. At least it convinces; but we can't sympathize with such a man; he disgusts most people. Now, looking merely at the present picture, is there any one with whom we can sympathize very heartily? The man and woman who warmed the viper at the hearth and got stung can be made interesting by true artists; but one reason why they are not in this case lies in the brutality of the man. When he has been fed in the cabin and both man and wife have lied to the sheriff, he gets up in the night and goes away with the man's gun and horse. And, next day, comes back in the man's absence and demands not only money but is taking the woman too. The picture is, indeed, most distressing. The characters are played skillfully. The badman by Burt King, the husband by Edgar Jones and the wife by Clara Williams.

Independent

"THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR" (Powers), Nov. 27.—A comedy staged amid Southern California gardens. There is a real plot and plenty of incidents. A pie-stealing tramp is especially amusing. Also there is a hen-pecked husband, who goes to great lengths to get into a little game. It will hold.

"THE ENCHANTED UMBRELLA" (Milano), Nov. 30.—A bit of the slapstick stuff which seems to be so popular in some houses.

"THE ADDA RIVER RAPIDS" (Milano), Nov. 30.—On the same reel is this fine scenic. Also there is shown many ways of utilizing water power commercially.

"BONIFACE IS BASHFUL" (Milano), Nov. 30.—Also on the same reel is this comedy of the broad sort.

"AT THE FLAME THE BUTTERFLY BURNT ITS WINGS" (Eclair), Dec. 1.—This single reel by the Paris company is notable for the appearance in the leading role of Miss Lucille Guyon, the Eclair's feature star. The story is staged amid Japanese settings. Miss Guyon, in her portrayal of the Japanese maiden, again shows her marvelous versatility. It is hardly necessary to say that any picture in which she figures is bound to be notable.

"VENGEANCE" (Imp), Nov. 28.—This two-reel production, directed by Herbert Brenon, well may be featured. In the first part appears the scene of the frightful train wreck, photographed just after the disaster on the New Haven road. While there may appear to be an unusual series of coincidences dovetailing into the story, these in no way detract from the interest of this strong play. There are fine settings, outdoor and interior. Vivian Prescott here does some of her best work. So also do William Shay and Bill Lawrence.

"IT HAPPENED THUS" (Victor), Nov. 29.—A picture showing the struggles of a man against the inclination to yield to the impulse of a hereditary suicide taint. There was one scene which reminded the writer of the story of the man going into the fields to commit suicide, and ran from a charging bull. In this case, when the burglar took from the would-be suicide the bottle of poison and fortified his position with the display of a revolver, the man so anxious to end his life made no attempt to induce the intruder to try his marksmanship. However, this is but an unimportant incident. The work of Mr. Moore and of Fritzi Brunette, as the sweetheart, was good. The portrayal of the burglar was unusually convincing.

"A HEART RECLAIMED" (Rex), Dec. 1.—A strange story of the man who lost, told in a series of pictures in large measure. There are dramatic moments.

"THE REGENERATION OF WORTHLESS DAN" (Nestor), Nov. 25.—We cannot sincerely find much to praise in this picture, except the scene choosing and the mechanical work. The story is very improbable, and, because it could not have been made effective by any producer, it has been handled in a hurried way and very awkwardly.

"THE TWO CHEFS" (Punch), Dec. 12.—A brisk farce, full of snap and fun. A recipe for a sauce so good that all the patrons come to the restaurant that has it is the bone of contention between two rival chefs. There is an entirely new flavor to Punch's pictures, and if they keep up to this we think they will be successful.

"HIS DRESS SUIT" (Punch), Dec. 12.—A light-hearted clown farce, in which a dress suit is pawned to pay for flowers for a girl. There is joy in the morning, but gloom after five, when dress suits are required. It is extremely slight.

"THE QUEEN OF THE SEASON" (Great Northern), Nov. 30.—The three knights who dog the footsteps of the young matron in this comedy closer than her shadow are good characterizations. One of them is young, the other a sly old dog, and the third very fat, with a comical face. The lady who visits the seashore resort alone disappoints the ardent trio very much when she presents her husband and little son to them. The production will appeal in particular to mature, experienced men and women.

"THE MATRIMONIAL EXPRESS" (Gaumont), Dec. 3.—An interesting view of French train service, equipment, etc. The hero carries on a very difficult and correspondingly clever flirtation with a girl in one of the compartments, much to the chaperone's dislike. Pleasing comedy and good pictorial effects.

"THE BALL PLAYER AND THE BANDIT" (Broncho), Nov. 27.—Baseball fans will enjoy this picture more than other people, but it will interest anyone. Harry Burns, the college star pitcher, refuses to carry a gun when he goes West. But he knocks out one fellow with his fists very handily, and brings down a bandit with a swift throw of a baseball. Rather improbable, but it leaves the audience laughing, which makes up for a lot of things in a moving picture. The love story is also interesting.

"A SPIDER IN THE BRAIN" (Itala), Dec. 2.—The hero of this eccentric comedy does a great amount of jumping about when a big spider crawls into his ear. The knockabout scenes are better than common, and the locating of the spider in his brain by use of the X-ray is amusing.

"TOO MUCH BEAUTY" (Itala), Dec. 2.—The new maid is so pretty that every man about the place becomes a "Jack-the-Peeper." She and the mistress of the house leave notes under the doors of the men, telling them to meet the maid in the greenhouse at midnight. They arrive there, one at a time, are locked in and have the hose turned on them. Successful comedy. On same reel with the above.

"THE BROTHER OF THE 'BAT'" (Reliance), Nov. 30.—The "Bat" proves an interesting specimen of the underworld, with his training as a pickpocket. But he comes to grief, and Rex, who has joined a sociological order, undertakes to reform him. Then "The Slugger" appears and forces the boy to help him rob the house. The glove fight between Rex and "The Slugger" for possession of the boy brings a very interesting film to a close. The plot of this is above the average, and is well handled throughout.

"THE TRUANT'S DOOM" (Thanhouser), Nov. 24.—The Thanhouser Kid is, as every one has remarked again and again, a most remarkable little player. She certainly is a great help when poetic child-life pictures are being made, such as this. The Thanhouser Company has made other good ones even without Marie Eline, but in this her sincere and earnest picturing of the truant boy who dreams a heart-breaking dream of prison, and so runs back to school, gives just the impression desired. It was an impression, too, that it would have been easy to overdo or to fall short in. The boy's mother is played by Mignon Anderson, and Jean Darnell plays the teacher. Both have reason to be cross with the boy, and both handle the situation with delicate sense of preparation and with skill. It makes a very pleasing release and good entertainment.

"THE THUNDERBOLT" (Thanhouser), Nov. 26.—A picture with a startling climax, but almost lacking in dramatic suspense. Of course, a thunderbolt could not be made to be expected, yet it might have been used so as greatly to add to the climax of a dramatic story. The present picture lacks unity of interest. It fails to set forth one person or group of persons with whom the spectator can sympathize. It isn't a story about any one person, as it starts out to be, but of a bundle of money. The thunderbolt reveals its hiding place. James Cruze, as the dishonest broker who steals the poor man's little legacy and has it hidden, does excellent and very interesting work. David Thomson plays the poor man; Jean Darnell, his wife; William Garwood, their son grown up, and Mignon Anderson, the broker's daughter grown up. It is a prettily made picture.

"CROSS YOUR HEART" (Thanhouser), Nov. 22.—A story of a boy who grew up. It makes a heart warming little picture that calls to human sympathies strongly through its simplicity. Three little children are brought together early in the story. The little girl (Thanhouser Kid) and her smaller brother are children of a farmer who has caught a kid of about nine (an orphan whom a tramp scissors grinder has picked up) stealing his chickens. The farmer has locked the kid in a closet while he calls up the constable; but the little girl, moved to pity, lets him go after a promise cross his heart, that he won't steal any more. Marie Eline makes it ring true. After a well suggested lapse of years the boy has grown up and becomes the employer of the same farmer's son who steals from him. His thoughtful and humane method of handling the situation brings him again in contact with the girl who had long before helped him. In a natural way a means of recognition is furnished and another cross your heart promise is given and received and a pretty love story began. James Cruze plays the boy grown up; Marguerite Snow, the girl and Francis Newburgh her grown up brother. A very pleasing offering.

"THE SLEEPING BURGLAR" (Comet), Nov. 23.—A story turning on the sleep walking of a man who has some of his employer's money in his keeping over night and innocently and unknowingly hides it. As a situation, it lacks freshness, but the producer has made it serve as a farce. It is very light.

"AN OLD LOVE LETTER" (Majestic), Nov. 24.—A love story picture which has more farce than comedy in its action and loses thereby very nearly all its dramatic quality. It is not at all convincing and as entertainment is of the slightest.

"SHOCKING HER FUTURE MOTHER-IN-LAW" (Majestic), Nov. 26.—A love story told with clearness, smoothness and regard for things that make a picture effectively dramatic as far as the scenario permitted. It takes an unconvincing farcical turn which quite spoils a normal mind's sympathy for the heroine who plays she is vulgar in a way that quite persuades us that, at heart, she is and thoroughly so. She is the fiance of the son of rich people and is a singer. The man's mother persumes that she is vulgar before seeing her, so she plays vulgarity to shock that lady and succeeds. As entertainment it is fair; but it doesn't rise to the level of thoroughly commendable or humanly pleasing pictures. It lacks good taste.

"POOR FINNY" (Punch), Nov. 28.—A farce of limburger cheese and a lover who is called poor Finny. The girl's small brother uses the cheese; but Finny has a cold and can't understand. It it very slight; but on the same reel is a very funny picture and together they make a desirable release for brightening a program. Mr. Arthur Finn, Mr. Rice and Miss De Lespine play the leads.

"O YOU BABY" (Punch), Nov. 28.—A farce with a situation so ridiculous that it should make anybody laugh. It is very well played and a dandy offering. Mr. Rice is the baby.

"A DESPERATE LOVER" (Keystone), Nov. 25.—A very slow camera and consequent speedy entrances and exits are the amusing things in this film. Fred Mace's disguises also may make a laugh or two; but the reason for his disguise is not at all clear nor is the story clear. We should like to tell what it is about; but we don't know. We notice Mabel Normand in the cast.

"A BEAR ESCAPE" (Keystone), Nov. 25.—On the same reel is this farce in which we find our two friends the comical sleuths, Mace and Sennett. The bandit chains them to a tree in the bear country and bruin comes; but they manage to escape and then follows a comical train of happening in which our two friends accidentally win the reward for shooting the bandit. It is amusing.

"GRATEFUL HENRY" (Lux), Nov. 29.—Henry gets caught in a downpour and is loaned an umbrella. Henry is so grateful that his kind benefactor can't get rid of him and the result makes one of those delightfully and ridiculously droll farces. A good but light offering.

"THE DIARY OF A BAD BOY" (Lux), Nov. 29.—On the same reel is this series of farcical happenings pleasingly new. The two make a very fair offering.

"FATHER" (Reliance), Nov. 23.—A picture appealing to our interest by presenting a father's love for his son so strong that he steals from his employer to enable the young man to complete his law studies. Now the son doesn't know his father or even of his existence. The boy is cared for by a lawyer whom he supposes is his uncle. The father had been rich; but lost on Wall street. It was shown that "the blow killed mother." Titles are a part of a picture just as scenes are and a responsible artist ought to choose. It is the chief weakness of this picture that the reasons why the father hid from his baby son and supported him through a gardian are not made clear. No reasons we can imagine are worthy. This, to our eyes, spoils the picture's effect. It also lacks smoothness in its development. Every now and then some action was skimped and its meaning blurred. Yet there is plenty of good acting in the drawing of the characters and the picture by no means lacks interest. As a whole, it makes a fair offering. The father is played by Hector Dion; his son by James Cooley.

"THE ARMY SURGEON" (Kay-Bee), Nov. 22.—A two-reel melodrama of life at an army post where the post surgeon and a young captain are rivals for the colonel's daughter. Throughout the whole story the human interest is so sincere and fresh and worthy of men and women and the dramatic suspense when an Indian outbreak complicates the love episode is so vigorously created that the few minor defects are brushed aside. Yet, if the place in the story of the captain and the doctor had been made plain earlier, that feeling in the mind which comes only when the meaning of the story is completely grasped would not have been delayed till the end of the first reel when we first definitely and assuredly know who the doctor is. Now, seeing that the doctor was to be the one kept away from the girl by a duty so pressing that he couldn't send her word and reason for his absence, it also would have helped the story if she had shown him, in the first place, some clear mark of preference. He is the one shown as heroic, not the captain, it would have added to our interest if we had seen him taking his life in his hands for the safe of his friends at the almost deserted post and on account of it losing a love that would have been his. We needed to have it made plain that he was losing. It happens that we are left also in doubt whether the girl had definitely accepted the captain and also as to whether the captain had the message that the Indian chief sent to the post asking the doctor to come. We didn't notice the doctor giving this to the captain that he might give it to the girl. It may have slipped past us; it ought to have been so clear that no one could miss it.

The girl had promised both men the "answer" at her party. The outbreak came and called most of the force away. The captain was left in charge. The night before the party, the chief whose wife was sick sent for the doctor. The doctor's adventures are thrilling and very well pictured. It is he who saves the fort when it is besieged and the doctor wins the girl in the end. It is an offering that was enthusiastically greeted.

"A SEMINARY COMPLICATION" (Comet), Nov. 26.—There certainly is not a great deal of probability in this picture's idea of a girl's school; but the picture is unquestionably pleasing and entertaining. The dramatic suspense of most of the film and the prettiness of its scenes and photography keep it humanly interesting. It tells a refined, wholesome love story and its players are good company, a point that tells with audiences.

"THE CIVILIAN" (Broncho), Nov. 20.—There is only one fault we notice in this picture and that is its name. In the first place, it isn't a picture of the civilain, but of the lieutenant whose courage contrasts with the civilian's cowardice. These two men and the pretty daughter of the colonel (Mae Marsh) furnish a love story. The disentangling of this comes about when a band of hostile Indians reach that part of the country. The three meet them several miles away from the fort and the scene is set for a most thrilling chase, perfectly constructed and full of incident and strategy. The story fills two reels and needs every foot. As a thrilling offering it is a sure feature and likely to make any audience enthusiastic.

"THE INVADERS" (Kay-Bee), Nov. 29.—This three-reel picture of Indian warfare is one of the best of its kind. It tells a long, fascinating story of an army post in frontier times. The massacre of a surveying corps is graphic, though the after scene was a little too realistic. Do not such scenes shock average observers beyond the point of enjoyment? There is a tremendous sweep of mountain vista and fine reproduction of battle scenes. The burning of the telegraph poles, the attack on the depleted fort, and the young lieutenant's dash for assistance were admirably handled. The principals, including the Indian girl, gave creditable performances. A big story of the kind.

"THE HORROR OF SIN" (Itala), Nov. 29.—As the title suggests, this is not a very pleasant picture. It pounds in its moral so forcibly that the observer asks if it really isn't unnecessary, in a way. An Italian father, seeing his daughter reading romances, tells her that her mother had sinned.

"THANKSGIVING" (Reliance), Nov. 27.—A good picture of two Thanksgiving dinners, one of which is pulled off to the floor. Two child actresses, a doll and a real live baby all combine to bring about reconciliation between a quarreling couple. Very good from a photographic standpoint and has a seasonable interest.

"HER OWN COUNTRY" (American), Nov. 28.—A story with a Mexican hacienda as its locale, which contains a thrill for patriotic Americans. The clash between the American hero and the Mexican lover over the American girl, who had been adopted and reared by a Mexican family, is well worked out. There is romance a-plenty, some fine glimpses of the cactus country, and a coherent plot to hold the interest. A desirable offering. Played by the premier company in its well known good style.

"PALS" (American), Dec. 2.—This photoplay gets hold of the sympathies at once. The discharge of the faithful old cowpuncher is pathetic, also the manner in which he turns loose his horse on the plains and gives it freedom. His subsequent rescue of the child and restoration to his place on the ranch brings a feeling of general relief. A good film.

"THE ANIMAL WITHIN" (American), Dec. 5.—A peculiar story, winding up in a disappointing way, though very well acted throughout. The girl in the picture induces her lover to hold up a stage coach and rob the United States mails. His rival in love and his mother both learn of the holdup and there is a double killing at the end. The part of the weakling son is played by Warren Kerrigan.

"BLUDSOE'S DILEMMA" (American), Dec. 7.—This is one of those pictures best described as "gripping." It winds up with a series of decidedly sensational incidents. The mechanical nature of the plot is apparent throughout, and there are some bad pieces of "business," such as dropping the trap door with an unnecessary slam, and the attempt to hand the husband for shooting his wife, when she afterward recovers fully. Yet there is ingenuity in the picture also. The character work is good, the running duel with revolvers is exciting and the breaking of the rope over the cliff is well managed. Successful sensation.

"ON BOARD THE STEAMSHIP DUBUQUE" (American), Nov. 30.—An interesting view of Uncle Sam's naval training ship Dubuque. Inspection, hammock call, wigwagging, hospital drill, target practice, etc., are all well exhibited.

"THE HIDDEN TREASURE" (American), Nov. 30.—On the same reel with above. The "philanderings of Puddenfoot Pete" are somewhat on the usual order of tramp pictures. The lady of the house throws him a pair of old boots, one of which contains a roll of bills. Then follow scenes of Puddenfoot Pete spending the roll, which he does before night. The tramp's costume and characterization are good.

"THE GATEWAY TO AMERICA" (Champion), Nov. 25.—These very complete moving pictures of Ellis Island tell a graphic story of the manner in which new citizens are brought to this country. The medical staff, boarding house, hospital, etc., are all shown. Glimpses are given of various immigrant characters. A fine educational offering.

"THE INDIAN OUTCAST" (Bison), Nov. 26.—A one-reel offering, telling a compact, thrilling story. Some new tricks in Indian warfare are shown. The manner in which Brave Heart leads three pursuers over the cliff was well-planned. The bear trap scene is also good. There was just a glimpse of that famous old punishment of the Indians, called "running the gauntlet." Perhaps the Bison company will make a special feature of this some day. This reel as it stands is an attractive offering.

"THE TOLL OF THE SEA" (Gem), Nov. 26.—Jean McPherson and John Adolphi have the lead in this tragic story of the coast of Brittany. Their work is very good indeed, as well as that of the jealous girl The costuming and glimpses of the coast lend picturesqueness to the film, which will help vary the average programme.

"A GIRL FROM THE COUNTRY" (Eclair), Nov. 26.—Teddy thought it was going to be a bore to have to entertain his friend's sister, so he asked several of the boys to help him. When she appeared, she was pretty and he fell in love with her. But the boys insisted on entertaining her, at his expense, as arranged! But all ends happily for Teddy. A comedy of the quiet sort with a fresh idea and better than the average offering of the kind.

"FOR THE LOVE OF MIKE" (Rex), Nov. 28.—In spite of its rather breezy title, the story told here is a strong one. The injury of the boy in the quarry is realistically shown. The girl's fight with her selfish, unscrupulous employer brings about the sympathy of the observer for the love scenes with Mike, which follow. This picture will appeal to the average audience.

"THE DARLING OF THE MOUNTED" (Eclair), Nov. 28.—Little Clara Horton, the Eclair Kid, is an appealing figure in this picture. The work of Guy Hedlund is also excellent. The disappearance of the child in the boast, her rescue by the outcast, the empty boat riding down over the falls—these are all brought out well. And the last scene of all is particularly good, where the men give the outlaw the boat, weapons, food, etc., but refuse to shake hands with him. Altogether a good conception and a top-notch reel.

"HAWKINS MOVES" (Powers), Nov. 27.—There is a good comedy back of this picture, but it is not brought out strongly enough. The antics of the three drunken men are very tiresome and not worth the amount of film given them. As a split reel, with only a glimpse of Hawkins in his intoxicated state, this would have been much stronger. The point of the story, that he moved back into the same house, is good.

"A FRIEND INDEED" (Nestor), Nov. 27.—Families that have experienced the need of raising money quickly in a case of illness will appreciate this film. The husband tries to sell an old painting, thinking it is very valuable, only to find it an imitation. Then he is accused of stealing $500, but his son comes to the rescue and clears him. This is pictured in a natural and interesting way and has a good love story.

"THE MATRIMONIAL AGENCY OF ROARING GULCH" (Nestor), Nov. 29.—The boys at Circle K ranch put up a job on Bob Leland by advertising that he wants a wife. Through the manipulations of a matrimonial agency, established in the vicinity, many love affairs result. The agency's room is decorated with mottoes, reading, "When In Doubt Get Married," "Marriage Is Never a Failure with Us," etc. Well acted and up to the standard of interest.

"LOCKED OUT" (Crystal), Dec. 1.—Pearl White gives us a true picture of agonies from a lobster supper after one has retired for the night. Her husband, played by Chester Barnett, goes for a doctor, locks himself out, and in the ensuing misadventures both are arrested and taken to the police station. The lady reaches there attired in her robe de nuit with a fur cloak over it. Brisk without being offensive.

"A PICNIC IN DAKOTA" (Crystal), Dec. 1.—An amusing offering on the same reel with above, in which a white girl and an Indian girl exchange clothing. Complications of a laughable nature follow swiftly. The warm sepia tint makes this a restful and attractive film, and there are some good outdoor scenes. As a whole the film makes good.

"ROMANCE AND REALITY" (Nestor), Dec. 2.—A picture which illustrates very forcibly the havoc a graceless young man may play with feminine hearts if he is mean enough to do so. He turns down the Western girl in a manner that breaks her heart, and flies back to his lady love in the East. When the Western girl dies, and he is pictured as happy in the arms of his first love, we somehow feel that justice has gone astray, but this is probably what is meant by the word "reality" in the title. The work of the two leading characters in this is exceptionally good.

"MAMMA'S BOY" (Imp), Nov. 25.—King Baggot and Jane Fearnley are featured in this film. The former appears as a gay young Lothario, idol of all the cabaret girls. A note addressed to him creates trouble between his mother and father. Photographically good, but we have enjoyed this company more in stronger offerings.

"A MOTHER'S AWAKENING" (Rex), Nov. 17.—The story of an absorbed society mother awakening to the neglected state of her little daughter. True to life in certain phases, and worked out with strong appeal. The mother's part is well taken, and the forlorn little girl with her kitten arouses the interest of the observer.

"THE CHORUS GIRL" (Crystal), Nov. 17.—A film featuring Pearl White and Chester Barnett, which combines the elements of comedy and tragedy, with the former predominating at the end. A wife, finding a note in her husband's pocket, masquerades as a chorus girl, and she discovers her in this guise. The humor is rather broad at times.

"HER OLD LOVE" (Crystal), Nov. 17.—On same reel with above. Jack arrives from the sea and impetuously embraces his former sweetheart, now married, in the presence of her mother-in-law. Complications ensue, during which the husband appears and is locked in a trunk while Jack escapes. This is rather too broad, also, though well acted.

"REPTILES" (Kinemacolor).—We are given very interesting views of snakes found in Asia Minor, mountainous Asia, and Europe. Chamelions, lizards and tortoises are included. Colors come out remarkably well.

"OFIA, THE WOMAN SPY" (Kinemacolor).—A dramatic story of international intrigue, with very interesting backgrounds. The spy, a strikingly built woman, is sent for important papers. She fools the general who has them in keeping; but not a secret service man, who arranges things so that she flies away with dummy plans. The last scene shows her making away in her aeroplane—a scene as beautiful as a painting.

"ICE CUTTING ON THE ST. LAWRENCE" (Kinemacolor).—Gives one beautiful series of views of horses on the ice drawing the produce to shore. Its pictures of green ice blocks are fine.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

The Screen Question.

PERHAPS one of the most serious questions confronting the moving picture industry at this present time is that of screens, though this fact is not generally recognized.

In the earlier days of the business, the screen was either one of two things, viz: Cloth or plaster; and let us incidently remark that there has, to date, been no projection surface yet discovered which is superior to plain, white muslin for the projection of an artistic and beautiful picture, having the soft, mellow lighting and depth of perspective.

Hower, as the business began to grow, thousands of alert minds were quickly engaged in the problem of seeking avenues for improvement, and, among other things, the projection screen came in for its share of inventive consideration. The first noticeable attempt at improvement consisted of paints of various kinds, very few of which amounted to much, except in the over-vivid imagination of their producers. The colors of these curtain paints ranged all the way from white to various shades of salmon, light green and light blue, and many were the advocates of each particular shade. So far as the writer could see none of these tints served any purpose whatever other than to make stronger light necessary, and to detract from the beauty of the picture to a greater or less extent.

Next, following these efforts, came the aluminum screen, which was promptly heralded as a wonder producer. But in its first stage it was far from being that kind of an article, since it consisted merely of a smooth surface coated with size upon which aluminum was spread, and rubbed down to a polish. The result was an out-of-focus effect, a painful glare, an accentuated flicker and a metallic harshness in the color of the light. After some thousands of dollars worth of these freak screens had been sold the truth was discovered, viz: that they were of no value whatever. Soon their resting place was the scrapheap. The exhibitor charged up another bunch of dollars to his costly experience and promptly began to look for something else. But the aluminum screen had not completed its story. It was discovered that there probably was, after all, real merit in this kind of a curtain, provided it be rightly made. It was also found that aluminum could be mixed with certain other substances, with a probable improvement in general effect. The discovery was made that the surface should not be perfectly smooth and flat, but, instead, of rather a rough matte effect, if this type of finish was to be used.

While all this was taking place, Mr. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., was experimenting with glass mirrors, and through these experiments he finally produced the "mirror" screen, which has taken its place among the permanent fixtures in moving picture theatres. Mr. Rembusch passed through a strenuous experience. He made many serious errors in the finish of the earlier mirror screens, and these were exceedingly costly mistakes, since the mirror is itself an expensive article. He stood by his guns however, and fought the battle through, until finally he has evolved a projection surface which is giving remarkable results. The mirror screen, like its aluminum and amalgam brothers, has passed through the babyhood stage. It has withstood the experimental era, and is now, as I have said, a permanent fixture. It was not, however, to set forth the merits or demerits of the various types of screen that I planned this particular article. What I had, and have in mind, is the warning of all and sundry that the screen matter is one which should be approached with due respect and the experimental period should, so far as possible, be passed before a screen is finally introduced to the purchasing managers. The installation of a screen containing defects is an exceedingly serious proposition, and should, not only for the benefit of the individual exhibitor, but for the good of the business as a whole, be avoided just as far as it is possible to avoid it. One of the most serious things connected with the projection of moving pictures is the possible injurious effect, on the eyes of the audience, of what is termed "flicker." In this connection, let it be clearly understood that, ordinarily, the more nearly the surface projected upon approaches a reflecting surface, the greater will be the tendency to flicker. When the writer was a boy, such a thing as a child, or a young person wearing glasses was almost a curiosity. Today look about you and observe the number of young people sporting spectacles. The proportion is surprisingly large. Now, do not jump to the conclusion that I intend charging this condition to moving pictures. Far from it! But I do say that it is evidence that the human eye, in these days of artificial light and the turning of night into day, is being enormously abused and overstrained; so much so that the condition is becoming very serious. Now, add to that the harmful effect of flicker in moving pictures, and the matter becomes still more and more so. It therefore behooves moving picture theatre managers to eliminate, just as far as they possibly can, the flicker from their screens. This is a duty they owe to the public at large, and it cannot be fulfilled by experimenting with new and untried projection surfaces simply because somebody wants to sell them. Before a new screen is purchased, let it be installed in the theater, cover one-half of it with white muslin cloth, running your machine at normal speed, with a light film in. Observe the percentage of difference in flicker between the two surfaces. If the flicker is abnormal on the surface of the new screen, as compared to the cloth screen, then reject that screen. It is not a suitable one for projection.

Now, please do not misunderstand me. I am not hitting at any particular screen, or any particular patent surface. I am simply giving you, Mr. Manager, and you, Mr. Screen Inventor and Maker, a good plain talking to on the general proposition of projection surfaces, leaving it to you to apply what I have said with discretion and common sense. With modern, up-to-date projectors, there is little or no excuse for flicker on the screen.

Low Voltage.

Boston, Mass., propounds the following:

> I had an argument recently, in which I took the position that one cannot run a projection arc from 55 volts line pressure. My opponent said that if one hitched up in multiple one could get the proper amperage. I told him that was true enough, but the pressure was not sufficiently strong on 55 volts, so he said go and look in your motion picture hand-book, and I did, but could not see anything concerning that particular subject. I told him that the least he could use was 110 volts. He said he had 110 volts coming into his operating room, and by using a compensarc this voltage is split up, therefore he runs the machine on 55 volts. I told him that when I took my last examination, that was one of the questions they asked me, and the inspector told me that was right when I answered that a projection arc could not be run on 55 volts. Will you kindly decide this matter?

You are both badly twisted in your knowledge of resistance, Boston. I have explained this thing a great many times; I shall do so once again: The d. c. projection arc operates at from 45 to 55 volts, sometimes reaching 60. The a. c. projection arc operates at from 30 to 35 volts, usually nearer 35. All voltage in excess of this must be consumed in the rheostat, or else, where a transformer is used, it must be transformed from 110, or whatever the line voltage may be, down to the arc voltage. It would be possible to operate a projection arc on 55 line pressure, but it would be a highly unsatisfactory arrangement, and the light would not be good, since one could not use sufficient resistance to properly steady, or balance the arc. You must understand that in this connection there is a very large difference between "line" pressure, and the pressure at the arc, and that difference is exactly what the rheostat or transformer, or mercury arc rectifier takes care of; the latter also transforming the a. c. into d. c. at the same time.

Outside Shutter.

Manson, Iowa, propounds the following:

> (1) I wish to know if there is a three-wing shutter for Power's No. 5 machine on the market. If so, has it given satisfactory results? If not, can one make a really practical three-wing outside shutter for Power's No. 5? (2) What is it that determines the size of the picture on the screen? Can you furnish me with the back numbers of the Motion Picture World? If so, what price?

There is no three-wing outside shutter on the market for Power's No. 5, so far as I know, but several operators have made shutters for their own machines, and they have been entirely satisfactory. On page 710, April 1st, 1911, issue, you will find such a shutter illustrated by photograph, together with the address of the operator who made it, with whom I have no doubt you can communicate and get all necessary instructions. (2) The focal length of the lens and the distance of the lens from the screen. (3) Yes; the price is 10 cents per single copy. But why not get the bound volumes? They are neatly and substantially bound, and are furnished at $1.50 per volume, plus 80 cents postage. Postage will probably be lower after January 1st, when the parcels post goes into effect.

Aluminum and Blueing.

Grand Ledge, Mich., tells how he made a very satisfactory screen. He writtes as follows:

> I am using an Edison Exhibition Model machine, projecting a 14-foot picture at 82 feet. My machine is motor driven, upon a very simple plan. The motor connection is simple, and the whole thing is inexpensive. As regards aluminum screens, I have been using one for the past three years, with excellent results. I had a local dealer order me a 12 x 14 foot oil-finish window shade. This was of an apple green color. I stretched it on a frame and coated it with aluminum, as follows: I bought one pint of steam radiator aluminum, to which I added one-half pint of boiled linseed oil. I crushed eight balls of ball blueing, and dissolved the same in turpentine, adding the same to the aluminum. This gives the screen a very good tint, and does away with the glare; it also adds depth to the picture and will retain its color permanently. My three-wing shutter is very similar to the one in issue of October 19th, only the small wings are perforated, which gives an almost flickerless picture. My operator has a snap, and never kicks on running an extra reel or show. I hope I will be welcome to the department. My motor drive is made as follows: Twelve-inch fan motor sets on bracket supported by ¾-inch gas pipe through the floor. It is not attached to the machine table. Pulley on the motor is friction tape, wound on shaft ¾ inch in diameter, with a 5½-inch pulley on the take-up shaft, same being mounted by drilling three 3/16-inch holes in the take-up belt pulley, and bolting them together with machine screws. The belt is of ½-inch belt lace. Idler is made from fan guard arm, with a 1½-inch pulley bolted on side of outer end. A rubber band from arm to machine table gives plenty of tension. Use 10-point fan speed regulator to vary speed.

The brother sent a sketch, but I could not quite make out whether he sets the motor on end, with a pulley on end of the shaft, thus giving a half twist to the driving belt, or whether he mounts the pulley with a bevel gear arrangement; therefore I do not publish the sketch. The blueing in the aluminum for curtain coating is unique, and for that reason I have published this formula, though I have long since given up publishing curtain-coating formulas. As to being welcome to the department; my dear sir, you're as welcome as the flowers in May.

A. C. to D. C.

Carlisle, Pa., is puzzled as to which current is best. He writes as follows:

I intend opening a new theater, and will give data concerning it later. I have used a. c. and have had a Mercur Arc Rectifier, but now I can get 110 volt d. c. I have heard advocates of both currents claim superiority for their choice. Which is really the better; also what screen do you recommend, after the mirror screen?

I do not understand how anybody could put up an argument in favor of either a. c. or pulsating current, as against direct current. For projection purposes there is no comparison between a. c. and d. c. D. c. is far the better in every way. As between pulsating current, through a rectifier, and direct current, there is not so very much difference, though what there is favors d. c. As for the screen question, I see you have it in for me and want to get my block knocked off. If I recommend any one particular screen, dear boy, the rest of the screen men would camp on my trail with a gatling gun, two clubs, a revolver and whatever else they could lay hands on. Sorry, old man, but you see how it is.

Excellent Idea.

Mr. Jacob Merkel, New York City, supplies the accompanying photograph of his method of automatically lighting the interior of the lamphouse. The wire frame shown in one photo sets in the back end of the lamphouse, and carries a lamp socket and globe as shown. The globe is frosted. Now, unfortunately, Brother Merkel did not send in a written description, so that I am obliged tto guess at part of it, but the way I have it doped out is that 1 is a piece of insulating material which attaches to the lamphouse, beside the door latch, and that 2 is a stem sticking out perhaps a quarter of an inch beyond the lamphouse wall, so that in closing the door it is shoved in and automatically breaks the circuit, thus extinguishing the lamp when the lamphouse door is closed. The stem is probably held out by some kind of a coil spring, or through the natural spring of the wire, so that when the door is open the contact is remade and the lamp automatically lighted. Such an arrangement is one that would be of very great value, particularly where it is necessary that the operator work fast in resetting his carbons. We therefore thank Brother Merkel for its submission.

Patent Claim.

Mr. G. J. Gilmore, Chicago, Ill., makes the following statement:

In reference to the condenser protecting cone illustrated on page 557, November 9th issue, will say that I hold United States Patent No. 925,326, dated June 15th, 1909, covering the idea—"a lens shield for moving picture machines." The cone-shaped shield does not interfere with the rays of light. A straight line from the center of back condenser to crater of arc is 3¼ inches (7½-inch condenser). The light rays travel from a very small point (arc crater) diagonally to the condenser. The shield protects the thin edges of the rear condensers from the excessive heat of the lamphouse, consequently equalizing the expansion and contraction. It is the same as the theory of pouring boiling water into a drinking glass. Strike the center of bottom of glass and all is O. K., but should the water strike the sides of the glass it (the glass) will surely break. I make the shields from a clay which is an insulator. Tin would cause a ground, or short, in contact with the carbons.

I am afraid, Brother Gilmore, that I cannot support you in your contention. By this I do not mean to dispute your word as far as owning a patent covering the cone idea is concerned. However, there are 48 patents, all of which are claimed to be valid, on that humble article the washboard. Now, by your own statement, you have had a patent on a certain thing for more than three years; yet you have never, so far as I know, done a single solitary thing with it; therefore it may reasonably be presumed that you will not do anything with it. If this idea has value it should not be permissible that anybody tie it up with a patent and let it lay there in idleness. Moreover, because you have a patent on a condenser cone is no evidence that it prevents anyone else from using the same idea. The number of patents on washboards is an illustration. It is evident, too, that your patent does not cover the idea in the same way the idea of Oklahoma does, since his cone sets back a considerable distance from the arc, and is made of metal, whereas your cone evidently comes quite close to the carbons, and is made of clay. I do not propose to enter into the merits or demerits of either type of shield. I am merely pointing out the fact that because you have a patent on a condenser protecting cone, it does not necessarily prevent a dozen, or a hundred, other men getting patents on the same identical thing, or using the same idea in a different way. The only way in which you could tie up an idea is to get what is called a "basic patent," and then have the bankroll neccessary to fight the thing through the courts, and get a final decision in your favor. Personally, I am entirely opposed to the patent proposition as at present conducted. I believe the government itself should reimburse the inventor to a reasonable extent, and that all ideas should be free for the use of any person who can and will make use of them. As to the pouring of the water into a glass, you may be right, but I can say that I have filled hundreds of glasses with boiling water by simply refilling them up quickly, regardless of what particular part of the glass the water struck first. The point is fill 'em up, and do it quickly.

Chemistry.

Fort Worth, Tex., has prepared and sent in a somewhat elaborate article on the chemistry of certain things, particularly that property of certain plants called cellulose. After careful consideration I cannot see where such discussion would be of general benefit, though if it were carried out in such a way as to show the various steps in the formation of celluloid from cellulose, then it might be of considerable interest. However, we thank Fort Worth for submitting the article, although it is in its present form not available. We would have returned it, but no street address was given.

Raw Work.

As I ride down every day past Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, on the Elevated, I have noticed a certain theater front which is very pretty, and, noting that it was devoted to moving pictures, I have had it in mind to visit this house and see what I should see. One evening recently, when my better half was attending some affair over in Manhattan, and the house was dark, and the editor had nowhere, for the time being at least, to lay his head, we remembered this beautiful front and concluded the time was opportune to pass a pleasant hour, and at the same time possibly be able to say some kind words about a good performance. So I purchased my ticket—price, 10 cents—passed through the aforesaid "beautiful front" into what was indeed a nice little theater. There were plenty of seats, not more than 50 people being in the house. At this I wondered, but later was enlightened. The house was equipped with the regular stage, and the screen was located back possibly ten feet from the curtain line. Apparently, too, it was a good screen, and its location was ideal; but alas and alack, that was about all there was to it. I sat out the projection of two reels. I then walked up to the balcony and peeped into the operating room to see what kind of an outfit was being used. It was an old type machine with one of those little dinky lamphouses and a two-wing inside shutter mechanism. The operator was grinding away at the rate of about 50 a minute—certainly not more. The figures on the screen were floating through the air peacefully and calmly, and the flicker was enough to put your eyes out. I think the operator must have been half asleep, since four or five times during the time I was there a dense shadow crept half way up the screen before he adjusted his light. A very few times in the two reels I sat out was the screen clear all over. All this was due to absolutely rank carelessness or ignorance on the part of the manager who stood for such work, and on the part of the operator who put it on, because two or three times immediately after adjusting his light the screen was white and brilliant, and the light all that could be desired for a minute or so, until the shadows came again. Finally I got up and went out, as my eyes began to hurt from the excessive flicker. As I passed the box office I handed in my card and remarked that an hour of that kind of business would ruin my eyes entirely. It is such performances as this that injure the business permanently. It is such rank work that discourages people from attending photoplays. This "manager" will no doubt say, "Well, I am doing a good business, anyhow," which may be true enough, but how much better business could he do if he put up a decent show, or how much better prices could be obtained. I have no patience with this kind of work. It would be bad enough in a 5-cent storeroom theater of the lower class. You expect such things there, but you certainly do not expect them in a really nice house, charging 10 cents admission on week days and 10 or 15 cents on Sundays and holidays, as this house does. Why do I not name the house, do you say? Oh, well, what good would it do? Managers of this type are beyond hope; therefore it does not do any good to roast them by calling direct attention personally to their rank performances. They will eventually force themselves out of the business. This manager will know whom I am talking about, all right, and I hope I have made it strong enough for him to remember.

For Gas Men.

Mr. George Krauss, proprietor Midway Theater, Mogollon, N. M., contributes the following valuable information concerning the Model B gas-making outfit:

In the October 26th issue, under heading, "Calcium Light," a brother in Urbana, Va., sets forth the trouble he is having with his Enterprise Model B gas-making outfit. Now, I feel it is up to me to shy my hat into the ring in defense of this machine, which is, in my estimation, a very excellent device, indeed. The brother claims he cannot get an even flow of gas. I have never experienced any such trouble, though I have used my Enterprise Model B continuously for two years. I might add that in all that time I have never paid out one cent for repairs, which is, I think, more than can be claimed for most gas-making machines. Urbana says he cannot get a clear picture when located more than 20 feet from the screen. My throw is 41 feet 6 inches, and I am projecting a 12-foot picture which is as clear as a bell and good and sharp all over. The light is as steady as the rock of Gibraltar and has no flicker at all. My machine is a 1911 Motiograph, equipped with a double cone shutter. Urbana says he thinks his machine is using too much gas. Sixteen cakes of oxzone in half an hour! Holy smoke! what a waste. I have used the Edison gas-making machine, which Urbana is now using, or has used, and have never used more than 13 cakes for an entertainment lasting one and three-quarters hours, though with the Enterprise machine I beat that, as I am only consuming 9 to 11 cakes for the same length of time, and get very excellent results; but let it be clearly understood that to get good results from any gas-making machine it must be well taken care of. I wash my gas-making machine in three different waters after each entertainment, and am very careful that there is no water in the cooling jacket of the saturator. This jacket must be kept perfectly free from water in order to get results. Should there be the least bit of water present it would evaporate and be forced with the oxygen gas to the burner, thus causing an uneven flow and a flickering, which is very annoying. The filter cloth in the saturator should be taken out once a month, boiled in clean water (no soap), washed and thoroughly dried before replacing in the saturator. Keep the needle valve perfectly clean; also the tubing which carries the oxygen gas to the burner. If this latter is not cleaned frequently it will eventually become coated, making trouble at the burner. Use none but the purest water for oxygen tank, because the fine particles in impure water will, when the water gets hot in the oxygen tank, travel with the gas to the saturator, causing the needle valves to be partly stopped up with it, thus causing an uneven flow of gas. Should the particles travel on to the burner they will cause the light to flicker, or perhaps stop up the mixing chamber of the burner, thus causing the gases to reach the burner not properly mixed, the result of which will be a hissing at the jet and more flickering. I have a 1,100 c. p. burner, the finest thing out, using 1/16 bore jet, which is very large. I only use one more cake of oxzone with this burner than when I used 1/32-inch bore jet on 700 c. p. burner which came with the Motiograph machine. I use a 7½-inch and a 6½-inch condensing lens—the latter in front—the best grade of lens obtainable. Projection lens is a Gundlach Manhattan, which make I like the best. It gives a good sharp picture. I have three other projection lenses, in case of accident. Should any brother operator using calcium as an illuminant have trouble, let him read the foregoing carefully. It may be of assistance in overcoming the difficulty.

I extend to you, Brother Krauss, on behalf of our readers, my sincere thanks for your excellent letter. It is what I call very practical information indeed, setting forth clearly and concisely some of the various possible causes of trouble and their remedy. I have been looking for just this kind of a letter for some time. I am sure it will be appreciated by our gas-using readers. I take particular notice of one thing, viz.: The large bore jet you are using. You did not say, but I presume you are using 1¼-inch limes with that jet. I have another letter this week from a gas user, and I think, between the two, most of the troubles the gas maker is likely to encounter are taken care of.

A large manufacturer of a certain class of electrical devices for use in operating rooms propounds the following:

> We are frequently called upon to furnish customers using our goods with information in regard to water-cooled type of condensing lens. Will you kindly favor us with what information you have in regard to this type of lens, as well as advise us as to who manufactures same?

Never heard of any such thing. Has anyone else? I pause for reply—and I'm afraid it will be a considerable pause, too.

More Gas.

New York City helps out on the gas-making proposition as follows:

> I notice in October 26th issue you ask for dope on gas-making outfits. I have run the outfit the brother has for a long time, and if he will use good ether, or 88% gasoline, keep his saturator perfectly clean and not get too big a crater in his limes his light will be O. K., as far as brilliancy is concerned. On a short throw, with proper condensers, one can get a fine light, but you cannot go asleep on the job. Keeping the limes even is very important. And now as to the boiling over: The case for receiving the oxzone (not ozone) is divided into step-up cells, having a net bottom so the water can come up through. If the net is in bad condition and the oxzone breaks, it will fall through and, of course, start boiling. When this happens it shoots like a geyser. If the brother will see that the nets are all in good shape, put in new ones where they look worn, and keep his optics on the lower cells, his boiling pot will be out of a job.

All of which is very clear and very much to the point, except where he says, "Keeping the limes even is very important." I do not understand what he means by this, unless it is that it is important that the lime be placed in the carrier perfectly straight up and down, so that as it is revolved it will at all times be exactly the same distance from the jet. I recall, from my own experience, that a good deal depends on the lime itself, though I cannot remember just what it was, as it has been many years since I used gas. A little more information on that particular point would not be out of place.

Length of Throw.

Tiffin, Ohio, writes as follows:

> We are projecting a 13-foot picture, at 70 feet, and would like to increase the distance to 116 feet, same size picture. Would it make very much, if any, difference to our light? We now have the operating room half way down the auditorium, and want to move it back over the box office, but the manager does not want to make this change until he is sure he will get as good a picture at 116 feet as at 70 feet. I ordered a Handbook last week, and hope it is on its way by this time.

No, Tiffin, the Handbook is not on its way yet, but it will be before very long. The book is so big we ran out of paper and are obliged to wait on the mill for more. If the air is not smoky or very dusty you will not find much, if any, difference in light requirement as between 70 or 116 feet. Seventy feet is just a nice throw for a 13-foot picture, but 116 feet will be all right, too. To project a 13-foot picture at 116 feet you would want a lens just a little more than 7½ inches e. f., and with that lens you should have a 7½ and an 8½ condensing lens, with the 8½ in front. However, I believe you can get good results with two 7½ lenses. Try that first, anyhow.

Book Wanted.

New York City propounds the following question:

> Can you name any book on the subject of moving picture operating which commences right from the beginning? The writer knows how to operate a machine, but wishes to learn things more in detail.

Of course, this sounds like tooting my own horn, but nevertheless it is a matter of fact that I do not know of any real comprehensive work on projection, other than my Handbook, which will be off the press shortly. It will be almost a 450-page book (yes, its size has been increased since last writing), and its price is $2.50, which sum should be forwarded to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, 17 Madison Avenue, New York City, and the book will then be mailed just as quickly as it can be gotten ready.

In Error.

Dayton, Ohio, arises to make the following remarks:

> As to the resistance problem submitted in the October 5th issue, it is impossible to calculate the amperes at the arc when the size of the wire in the resistance is not given. The rule is: Amperes equal circular mills multiplied by volts, divided by lengths of wire, multiplied by 21.6.

I am sorry to inform Dayton that he is wrong in several particulars. In the first place, he has left out the resistance of the arc altogether, and if he wants to come down to fine points he would have to have the exact temperature coefficient. For instance: A change of .4 of 1% per centigrade degree in ordinary copper means a change of 1% in resistance, up or down, for every 2½ degrees centigrade when the temperature varies up or down. The temperature coefficient of alloys depends very much upon the composition of the mixture, and inasmuch as ordinary resistance wire is now made of nickel—steel composition, Dayton would have to have the exact coefficient of this composition in order to figure things out his way. I have only set this forth to show Dayton one or two of the many difficulties he runs into when he springs a proposition of this kind. As a matter of fact, in figuring resistance for projection circuits we do not pay any attention to these matters. The figuring as applied is quite rough, and the results are in the rough also, but they are nevertheless close enough, I think, for all practical purposes as applied to projection, and it would be entirely impractical to figure otherwise.

Carelessness.

Fort Worth, Texas, sends in a two-page kick on bad splices of certain makes of film, the whole thing being based on the sample which he was supposed to have sent me, but which is not in evidence. He asked me to take the matter up with the manufacturers. This I cannot do until Fort Worth does it all over again, and sends the sample along with the letter.

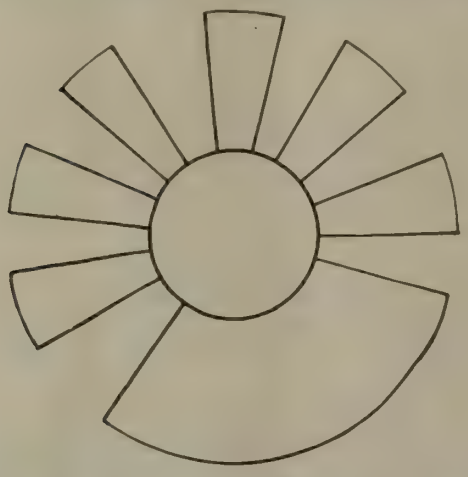
Quick Change Artist.

Mr. L. B. Adkins, Alhambra Theater, Lane and High Streets, Columbus, Ohio, claims to change reels in the following time: Power's No. 6 in 12 seconds, Edison in 15 seconds, and the Standard in 17 seconds. He refers to Mr. J. F. Potts, of the Arcana Theater, Portsmouth, Ohio, for reports on this record, he having been chief operator in that house for three years. That is some speed, all right, but after all, as I said before, I would rather have reports on perfect projection on the screen than reports of fast changes. Let somebody send me in a report that he has run for 10 minutes without a movement in the picture, and without a perceptible change of the light at any point on the screen, and I will say to him: "Hello, Bill! You are the man I want to meet." Let some one else tell me how he has studied his picture, and gauged his speed so as to bring out every beauty of the production in the best possible manner, and I will say, in the language of our ex-President, "Bully! De-lighted to meet you!"

Interesting Letter.

Mr. Bertram I. Williams, Ponca City, Okla., contributes the following interesting letter:

> It is some two years since I had the pleasure of introducing one of my efforts to the waste basket of the august head of our department, so I have now concluded to do it again. I have almost complete files of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD and Film Index, which I find of invaluable assistance in my work, as almost every happening associated with machine troubles is located either in one or the other of the publications, or else can be found in the "Bible." I am now handling three motor-driven Edison Model B machines, and find that they give excellent satisfaction. I have equipped each one with a shutter of my own design, a plan of which I hand you herewith. I find this shutter to be a vast improvement over anything in the line of an Edison inside shutter



I have as yet seen. We are taking advantage of our proximity to a glass factory, and are having electric light bulbs blown into various fantastic designs for use in interior lighting. I find that mercury vapor lamps of the Cooper-Hewett design are excellent for attracting attention for the front of the house. In my operating room I have a switchboard made entirely of asbestos, in the construction of which I used 65 pounds of the fibrous material, coating the same with pure shellac until a smooth surface was presented, which has given entire satisfaction. Am sending you herewith design of a film cleaner I have been using for some time. Since I started cleaning the films it has been the unanimous verdict of our patrons that the pictures have improved fully 50 per cent. in appearance. For a cleaning fluid I use the following: Tannic acid, 1 part; chloroform, 8 parts; grain alcohol, 8 parts, and glycerine, 1 part. I find, after cleaning and drying, that the film is more flexible and in better shape than before. Am using 110 volts, a. c., through a coil rheostat and transformer of my own make. What do you think would be the result of introducing the current into a quart of heavy oil before using it at the arc? By that I mean a jar of oil for each wire. Ten or twelve years ago I thought I knew practically everything to be known about operating. If I at the present time knew one-tenth as much as I thought I knew then, I would certainly be a cracker-jack. But by a continuous series of experiments I every once in a while run into some little thing which proves to be a help in producing good projection. By working together, and accepting advice from other experienced men, it will only be a question of a few years when moving picture productions will be exhibited with perfect projection—projection which is almost inconceivable to the present mind.

I do not remember, Brother Williams, your previous effort, which you claim was introduced to the waste basket, but that is only natural, since in two years I have received many thousands of letters. You must remember that I do not publish all the mail I receive. If I did there would not be much room for anything else in the paper; therefore I have to select what seems best, treating it as briefly as I can. Now, as to that shutter, I will say that the same design has been tried out and discarded long ago. However, if you are getting good results with it in your case, that is all that is necessary, as it is results we are looking for. I believe myself that the Cooper-Hewitt light would be quite a novelty in theater-front lighting. As to your film cleaner, it appears to be practically the same thing as the Mortimer Film Cleaner, a most excellent device, which is patented and has been on the market for some time. I intend to describe this device in this department in the near future. I do not understand what you mean by "introducing the current into a heavy oil before using it at the arc." If you mean simply to run the wires through oil, it would not make any difference at all. If you mean to run the current itself through the oil, why, it would simply have the effect of adding resistance, and a lot of it, too—in fact, I doubt if you could do it. I do not see any reason why it should make any difference at all in the current itself, except to consume a large proportion of the voltage in forcing the juice through the oil bath. I do not think I quite catch your idea. Yes, friend Williams, it is indeed a wise man who is able to realize how little he knows. That is the biggest curse we have to contend with today—the operator who has a swelled head and "knows it all," in his own estimation; whereas, as a matter of fact, he really knows very little. If this particular brand of idiot would start to study he would quickly discover his own shortcomings, and it would be a matter of immense and intense surprise to him to discover, even as you found out, how little he really knows, compared with what it is possible for him to know, concerning projection. The editor of this department probably receives more ideas on matters pertaining to projection than any other one man. His opportunities to learn are indeed exceptional, and have been for a long time; yet he fully realizes that he doesn't know all there is to know about projection, simply because there are many things still to be discovered, and they are being discovered every day. The operator who says he has not anything further to learn is a fool, and if he rests content in his folly he will drop behind, and in course of time drop down and out.

Tinted Film.

Albany, N. Y., propounds the following inquiry:

> I notice that some sections of films are tinted, without any apparent reason. In some instances the beauty of the film is enhanced by the tinting process, while in others there appears to be no advantage. Can you tell me why this is done?

You have propounded an inquiry which is difficult for me to answer with certainty, Albany. However, you must remember that the film duper is still abroad in the land, and you must also remember that the duper cannot operate successfully on film which is tinted. I presume this is the answer to your inquiry, though, to tell the truth, it is little more than a guess on my part. If one section of a dramatic film, which may have cost thousands of dollars to produce, is tinted, then Mr. Duper is knocked out, so far as that section of the film is concerned, unless he reproduces that particular scene, and I think if you watch carefully you will find that the tinted scene is usually one which the duper will have considerable difficulty in successfully re-enacting.

Up to Bartlesville.

Kansas City, Mo., hands Bartlesville one, as follows:

> I have never before asked for space in your "Bible class," but nevertheless I presume I will be permitted to make a few remarks regarding Bartlesville's three-wing shutter. Did he give you the correct dimensions? If he didn't, I guess he is sure having some nice times about now. I made one from the drawing, fastening it on the old shaft, but I guess it was too heavy. I then tried sheet aluminum, enlarging the two interrupters one-half inch on each one, and it does not suit me yet. There seems to be a travel ghost at the top of the leaders. This does not appear just at the upper left-hand corner, but clear across on each line of reading matter. But I am still pegging away, make changes here and there, and hope to perfect it so as to eliminate the troublesome flicker of the old two-wing shutter. When I do you will hear from me. And now, I think, seeing that Bartlesville was so kind in giving the department his idea, I will follow suit. There are plenty of operators in the country who are running two-wing shutter machines, who would be glad to discover some wrinkle which would ditch the flicker on 20-minute speed. Here is just one thing more, and I am through: Enclosed you will find three patches I cut from Lubin's "The Sheriff's Prisoner." Now, for the love of Mike, Mr. Richardson, see if you cannot illustrate these patches in some manner, alongside the right kind. If you can, perhaps the operators in this neck of the woods will discover their mistake and reform. I cut nine out of this reel after the first run in our house. I would send them all to you, but some one might get careless with smoking utensils, then sparks would fly around your office, and I want the paper too bad to have that happen.

I think very likely, Kansas City, that the fault does not lie in the pattern Bartlesville sent, but in the variations in the different types of machines Edison has put out from time to time. I do not quite understand. If your travel ghost is at the top of the letters in the title, and not at the bottom, it would indicate that the shutter is not set right. You say you have an idea to contribute, yet you do not contribute it, unless you refer to the patches. It would be impractical to illustrate the patch fault. The splices are not made by the manufacturer. They are operators' patches, which are very imperfectly made. They are stiff, and the sprocket holes are not well matched in any of them. They would therefore cause a jump as the film went through, and might also cause the film to climb the sprocket teeth. The most important things in making a patch are to have the emulsion scraped off perfectly clean, match the sproket holes absolutely perfect, and use cement which will not cause the film to harden or curl after the job is done.

The Picture and the Pulpit

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S.T.B.

THERE was once a conscientious young priest who had worked up his parishioners into such a state of dissatisfaction and antagonism that they sent a delegation to the bishop complaining of him and asking that he be removed. The bishop listened to all they had to say. The priest's moral character was all right, he didn't teach any heresy, he was a faithful, conscientious worker, and in his personal life set a noble, Christlike example; but, as one old gray-beard summed it up, "He do tell you what to do and why you must do it, till he makes you so mad you've got to differ with him if you're going to keep on being a man." The bishop then sent for the young priest, heard his side of the case, and finally asked him what he thought was the trouble. "Father," said the young man, "I honestly don't know. I've tried every way I can think of; and I've argued and argued in the pulpit and out—" "My son," the bishop interrupted him, "that's just the reason. Don't argue, convince."

Convincing vs Arguing.

The old bishop's advice is our answer to quite a number of requests that we have been receiving lately asking us to state our position as to the Sunday question and to offer any suggestions we might have as to the best way of settling the vexed problem. We have deliberately kept silent up to now, not because we have no definite ideas on the subject, but because we have very decided opinions. If we state them, we shall have to explain them and tell you why you ought to believe them and practise them—in other words, argue.

As this is a department in a trade paper it is not the place for a theological argument on any question, and especially on the most vexed and most insanely disputed theological problem of ecclesiastical history. Moreover, even if this were the place, arguing on the subject will only cause trouble. Arguing makes enemies, not friends. If you want to get a man to believe as you do, you must convince him you are right, not argue with him, and there is but one way in which you can do that. You can't make a man believe anything by compulsion, or reasoning, or in any other way than by moral suasion. Compulsion merely makes a man do something because he has to and can't help himself. Reasoning and arguing makes a man at once your opponent and antagonist; his self-respect forces him to take the opposite side, and though you may have the best of the argument and reduce him to silence, a "man convinced against his will, is of the same opinion still."

The first thing to do is to set the man in your own life an example of that which is cleaner and better and nobler. Then get him to want and try to live that kind of a life himself. Don't attempt to persuade him to believe as you do; you can't make a good Christian out of a bad anything (be he Baptist, or Methodist, or heathen, or what not) until you have made him a good something. Instead of striving to have him think your theology is the correct one, help him to live up to theology which he professes to have. If you do this and the man fails, you have a good chance of really persuading him that your life is higher and holier than his because of the things you believe in that he doesn't. The man will have found out by experience that he needs something he hasn't got and that you have; and he will be willing to listen when you tell him what that thing is and anxious to try it for himself. When he succeeds by following your advice, you will have convinced him you were right.

The Sunday Question.

Now as to the Sunday question: we have as we said very definite opinions, and those opinions are based on our theological beliefs as to what is right and wrong. Others have their opinions based on their theological beliefs. Others still haven't any definite opinions on the subject at all; and the opinions of some others are based not on real beliefs but simply on their appetites and desires. If any of these persons want us to help them to keep Sunday better individually, we shall be very glad to do all we can either as man to man or as man and priest; but as the conductor of the "Picture in the Pulpit" our only concern is to assist them in using the pictures so that they can themselves live up to their own professions and aid others in doing the same. Consequently what we ourselves believe or what we don't believe is of very little consequence in this place, and at present we see no reason why we should break silence on the subject further than to say that we believe there is a proper Sunday use for the pictures and that we shall have no hesitation in so using them whenever the need or opportunity arises.

As we said in a former issue, the pictures are morally good when they are used in the right way and at the right time, and they are morally bad when they are used in the wrong way and at the wrong time. What these right and wrong times and ways are, each man must settle for himself in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience and the beliefs he professes; all that we can tell him here is: Obey your conscience and live up to your belief in order to please God and not yourself and sooner or later in God's time and in God's way you will find out what is true and what is false on the subject for yourself.

The "Pulpit's" Point of View.

To sum up: the "Picture and the Pulpit" is no more the place for us to try to foist on our readers our own individual opinions, never mind how true and important we believe they are, than is a church pulpit the place to advocate the platform and principles of a particular political party. No preacher, whatever his rights are as a man, has any right as a church official to tell you whom you ought to vote for; but it is his business to tell you how you ought to vote and to help you make your own decision in accordance with what you yourself believe to be right or wrong on the subject. For the same reason, while we have no business to use this department as a means of persuading you to keep Sunday according to our own way of thinking; it is our duty, as well as our privilege and pleasure to help you make up your own minds as to how Sunday ought to be kept in accordance with your own principles of right and wrong. This doesn't mean that we believe The World has been wrong in printing editorials and articles on the Sunday question in other parts of the paper, because we don't believe anything of the kind.

In its editorials, The World is looking at the question from the general point of view of a trade paper; in its special and department articles, it is looking at it from the viewpoint of the special writer or of the department. The tradesman, the advertiser, the educationalist, each looks at the question as it affects him; the "Picture in the Pulpit" looks at it as it affects God and man's relation to God, in other words, from the moral point of view. We are therefore concerned not with any particular observance of the day, but with having it observed in accordance with the fundamental principles and universal laws that govern the relations of God and man. A knowledge of these laws is entirely independent of a man's denominational belief, they are a part of his make-up and constitute his religious nature. Even when he can't put the laws into words and tell you what they are, his conscience, if he hasn't abused it, tells him when he obeys them and when he breaks them; as conductor of the "Picture in the Pulpit" we are trying to aid men in training their conscience to judge aright all the time, and to help them to live up to what it tells them to do.

Laws and Law.

Consequently we have no business here to take sides either for or against any of the particular "Sunday laws." As a man and a clergyman we have the right to advocate or attack any or all of these and we do so whenever the occasion demands. These laws are legislative enactments made by man; they are human laws and they may be right or wrong, better or worse; if they don't suit, or if they prove vicious, men can and have the right to repeal them and substitute others in their place. That is a point for men to decide for themselves and the only thing we can do to help them is assist them in making up their minds in accordance with the dictates of their conscience and the universal principles of right and wrong, in other words tell them how they ought to do it, not tell them what to do. Here we are not concerned with human laws, but with moral laws and divine laws that are of universal application. We are dealing with the fundamental principles common to and binding on all men. We are advocating the observance of law, not of particular laws. No man has a right to break the law, although it is his bounden duty to break any particular laws that bid him do what is wrong. The early Christians broke the state-made law about worshiping idols; but they were law abiding. They submitted voluntarily and quietly to the penalties imposed by the state for such infraction. This was because the law must be obeyed and law (not particular laws) is divine, not human. If any legislative enactment orders you to do what your conscience tells you is morally wrong, then by all that is good and holy, break it and willingly and cheerfully pay your fine or go to jail or even be hung or shot or electrocuted; but if it doesn't tell you to do what is morally wrong, then see that you obey it yourself and by every means in your power see that everybody else does the same.

The Sunday Laws.

Accordingly, therefore, if the Sunday laws on the statute books of the different states and towns bid you do anything your conscience tells you you oughn't to do, evade or break the law every time the occasion arises; but we are bound to say, frankly and emphatically, that we know of no Sunday law in existence that does tell us to do what is wrong. They confine themselves to forbidding us to exercise our rights and privileges of doing certain things, all right and proper in themselves, at a particular time, namely, on Sunday. Consequently the Sunday laws simply say Sunday is the wrong time to do certain things. No man in his senses will deny that this is good moral law. Every one is agreed that Sunday is not the same as the other days in the week and that it should be observed in a different manner. Men do differ, however, as to their particular reasons for believing Sunday is not like other days and as to the particular things that ought or ought not to be done on that day. Therefore there is no question but that the Sunday laws as long as they are in force ought to be obeyed; it is simply a question as to whether those laws tells us the proper things to do or not to do. If you think the laws forbid your doing what it is all right and proper for you to do, don't break the law, but keep it; enforce the law as hard as you can and at the same time agitate for its repeal and its replacement by another law that will let you do the things your conscience tells you are permissible. Whenever and wherever the Sunday laws forbid the showing of moving pictures on Sunday, that time and that place are the wrong time and the wrong place to show them; and in accordance with the principle we laid down above if you show them under those circumstances, you are there and then making the pictures morally bad and vicious, because you are simply using them as a means of becoming a law-breaker, and law-breaking is wrong. The early Christians broke the law of man in order that they might keep the higher law of God, which commanded "Thou shalt have none other gods but Me," but in the case of the pictures we have no such excuse. On the contrary, when we break the man-made Sunday laws, which do not command us to do something wrong, we are also breaking the divine law which says, "The powers that be are ordained of God; whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God." Consequently, whatever you do, keep the law until it be changed.

Meanwhile.

Until the Sunday laws are changed remember that the way to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men is not by arrogantly breaking the laws and willfully going our own gait, but by well doing, that is by upholding with every means in our power the sanctity of law and convincing such persons, not by argument, but by the force of our example as we live up to what we believe to be true and right, that our way of thinking is truer and nobler than theirs; and when they find that our beliefs enable us to lead higher and holier lives than theirs, there will be no difficulty in getting them to see also that our way of wanting to keep Sunday is better than theirs. Meanwhile there are many ways in which the picture can be used on Sunday that does not come into conflict with the obnoxious statutes and by using them in these ways we can give others an object lesson on their real goodness and moral value that coupled with our law-abiding example will be more convincing than anything else we can do, because it will be using the pictures in the right way, at the right time.

AMERICAN FILM COMPANY AT SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

Mr. William J. Bauman, one of the producers at the Chicago studio, and Mr. Omer F. Doud, editor-in-chief of the scenario department, have been transferred to the coast. The future plans of the company are closely guarded, but from the activities encountered, both at Chicago and Santa Barbara, it is evident that "something big will soon be pulled off."

Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, who has been on the coast for the past month, has engaged an additional company to operate at that point. It is believed that the increased operations at the Coast studios will mean that Warren J. Kerrigan, the handsome leading man, will be seen in other than Western plays. During the past two years Mr. Kerrigan has only appeared in the wild and woolley West plays. Mr. Hutchinson spent considerable time in Los Angeles and it is understood that plans are being perfected for the erection of large laboratories and granite and glass studios.

ANOTHER MAX FILM.

Max Linder, the popular comedian, appears in another uproariously funny C. G. P. C. skit, entitled "An Escape of Gas." The film will be released on December 6th.

Aimee Rosette, a beautiful young woman, promenading with her father, strikes the fancy of the heart-free Max. He follows the couple, but his efforts to speak to the girl meet with a cold reception. They enter their home and Max lingers at the door. While he is arranging a plan of campaign, a gasman enters the scene with a ladder and a kit of tools. He has been sent to repair a gas leak in the Rosette apartments. For a consideration the gasman exchanges positions with Max. Max has some difficulty carrying the ladder up stairs, but he manages. Once in the house he lays siege to the girl's heart.

Scene from "An Escape of Gas" (C. G. P. C.).

Her father insists that he do his work, and in a quandary Max starts operations by tapping the wall rather heavily. His hammer connects once too often with the water pipe and a fine stream issues forth. Covering the break with a tapestry cushion Max calls for help. The adored young lady enters the room. Max, rushing to declare his love, leaves the leak unguarded and before he can get back both he and Aimee are drenched. As Mr. Rosette enters very angry the stream gets beyond control until he, too, is water-soaked. He goes to Max's assistance to help him prevent a further shower and Max leaves the job entirely to him while he proposes to the girl. Every time the father makes an attempt to attack Max the water calls him back to his duty and keeps him there until Max and the girl have agreed that they are in love with each other.

The film affords many opportunities for a good comedian and, of course, the part is well taken care of when Max plays the lead. It will be released on December 6th.

KINOGRAPH SELLS MORE TERRITORY.

Through the agency of the Pan-American Trading Company the Kinograph Company of America has disposed of its product in Brazil and Argentina for the coming year. The Kinograph Company also has sold Canada and the remaining Southern states, those east of the Mississippi, for the same period. This practically closes out the territory in this country. The office of the Kinograph will be the New York headquarters of the Hagenbeck Wallace Spectacular, the title of a new five-reel review of a great circus. Twenty-one thousand feet of film were taken, and it was then cut to the present length. It is the intention at present to rent these films, and not to dispose of them on the states rights plan. They will be ready on December 16. In billing this feature there will be something new in the way of advertising, as it is stated that there will be eighty-five different sizes and kinds of paper, ranging from a quarter sheet to thirty-six-sheet stands.

H. A. SPANUTH HAS NEW FILM.

H. A. Spanuth announces that he has taken the agency for Canada and the United States for the Cossack films, a brand from Russia, the first, as a matter of fact, from that country to be put on the market in the United States. The film will be of the feature sort, of two and three reels, to be released every fortnight, and probably later on every week. The Cossack will release through the new Feature Manufacturers' Association. It is said that the pictures will make especial appeal to those of the Jewish race.

"BIG ROCK'S LAST STAND" (101-Bison).

THOSE who have a fondness for Indian-military pictures will find much in these two reels to book their attention. Those who are indifferent to this class of pictures will be interested in "Big Rock's Last Stand." When we find a drama staged in an interesting and a pretty country and conveyed to us through the medium of excellent photography, the director who produces the picture has fought half of his battle. This story was written by Richard Willis, of the Universal staff. Frank E. Montgomery made it. Mona Darkfeather is in it. She is as usual—serious-faced, alert. Fortunate indeed is the producer who has the assistance of such undoubted native talent as is possessed by this talented native. William Bertram makes a real thrill when as Big Rock, the captured chief, he does a rear vault to the back of a horse and renders insensible the mounted sentry. The movement is cat-like and Indian-like. Art Ortego, as Eagle Eye, is the second Indian listed in the cast. His work is first-class. Virginia Chester is also placed with the Indians and has the role of Peach Blossom, the squaw of Eagle Eye. Roy Watson has the part of Johnson, the brutal trapper, and Jane Keckley that of Mrs. Johnson.

Scene from "Big Rock's Last Stand" (101-Bison).

There are many Indians in the drama. Some of the scenes are particularly picturesque, such, for instance, as when the troop of cavalry is seen at a distance, traveling rapidly in single file, or when the Indians, warned of the approach of the soldiers, all ride out of camp.

The story is a repetition of history—of the Indians and whites living in peace until one of the whites commits an overt act, which arouses the redmen. In this case Johnson, the trapper, finds Peach Blossom out in the fields gathering herbs and kidnaps her. The girl sees the Indians, out on a hunt, calls to them, the trapper throws her to the ground, and then escapes. Eagle Eye, in revenge, goes to Johnson's cabin and takes his boy, who is carried to the Indian camp and turned over to Mona. She becomes a little mother to the child, refusing to permit others to touch him.

Mrs. Johnson, discovering the loss of the boy, rides to the fort and informs the commander. He orders out a troop. When the Indians hear of the approach of the soldiers they break camp and take up a position in what seems a very poor tactical position in a hollow, where the soldiers can not only shoot down into them, but roll rocks among them. The Indians are captured and lodged in the stockade.

Big Rock and Dark Feather scale the fence. Big Rock steals up behind the sentry, throws him to the ground and with Mona gets away. The soldiers pursue. The chief, exhausted, is overtaken and shot. The Indian woman draws a knife and plunges it into her own breast. She creates a situation and competently sustains it. The end is dramatic.

"THE HEART OF A SOLDIER" (American).

A beautiful drama with a patriotic pathos taken from life and told in such perfectly natural sequence that every foot of it is bound to inspire the audience.

Scene from "The Heart of a Soldier" (American).

The excellent photographic quality and perfect dramatization are especially commendable. It will be released December 14th. Wm. Lee, the producer, shows marked ability in this production.

A MINING FEATURE FOR INTERNATIONAL.

Albert W. Hale is up in the mountains of Pennsylvania with a company of players, making a three-reel mining picture for the International Feature Film Company. Joe Graybill, formerly of Biograph stock, is playing the juvenile lead, and Miss Wedgwood, the only woman who ever drove a car in a Vanderbilt Cup race, is taking the ingenue role. The drama will be of the spectacular order.

EDITORIAL KIND TO "BETHLEHEM."

Never has a daily newspaper printed a more appreciative editorial on motion pictures than did the New Rochelle Evening Standard on November 20th. While New Rochelle is the city wherein the Thanhouser studio is located, and the picture commented on was a Thanhouser release, it will be readily perceived from the straightforward style of the article that all thought of closeness of the Thanhouser studio was forgotten. The editorial follows:

"Even those who witnessed the private production of 'The Star of Bethlehem,' which the Thanhouser Film Corporation regards as its crowning achievement, and received such a highly favorable impression of the motion picture as an educational force, do not fully comprehend the time, expense and people required for its presentation. For this production 200 people were required, a month was consumed in its preparation, and $8,000 expended before the picture was run off yesterday afternoon. It was a remarkable representation of historic events fraught with great interest to the Christian world. The characters, customs and dress of the large numbers of people acting the scenes were required to be carefully studied, in order that the representation should be kept as close to the biblical narrative and tradition as possible. Probably only those charged with the supervision of a production of this magnitude realize the labor and painstaking care required. Few realize, also, the extent to which this form of entertainment and instruction, although in its infancy, has reached. Outside of the press it has become, doubtless, the greatest educational force, for good or ill, in existence. The motion picture is instructing as well as entertaining, in which respect it differs from the stage, which enters the domain of instruction only in a slight degree. Like the newspaper, its mission is the daily dissemination of that which entertains and instructs. Both are great educational agencies, and the influence that each exerts depends upon the character and purpose of those responsible for their conduct. The character of motion pictures is undergoing a change. Their standard is being raised. The newspaper has relegated the lecture platform to the past, and the motion picture, a more advanced form of kindergarten teaching, is to share with it, to a certain extent, the obligation of public instruction. It is an up-to-date improvement on the stereopticon of boyhood days. There is no country too cold, none too hot, none too far away, and no obstacles too insuperable for the motion picture man and his camera. The schools, and even the churches, are utilizing it for the wholesome entertainment and instruction of their charges. This has been brought about largely through wholesome censorship and a demand from parents and teachers for a higher class of production. It would be invidious in this connection, to make comparisons, to say that the Thanhouser productions have been of a comparatively high grade during the evolution of the motion picture, and it is said that there has been no severer critic of reels offered for approval than Mr. Thanhouser himself. That is why the patriotic New Rochellean always feels proud of the fact, whenever he sees a Thanhouser picture, that it is 'made in New Rochelle.'"

R. D. Marson, until very recently branch manager of the General Film Company at Boston, Mass., has organized the R. D. Marson Motion Picture Company, which will be located at 597 Washington Street, Boston, Mass., to deal in exclusive features, machines and all kinds of supplies, and to conduct a general repair business for picture men. In the feature service Mr. Marson promises three exclusive features of the highest quality. A repair shop with adequate facilities will be something new for Boston, and Mr. Marson will supply a long felt want in this respect.

Mr. Marson's resignation from the General Film Company was the signal for his friends to come to the front with marked appreciation. He was summoned by a large assemblage of theater managers, who presented him with a substantial certified check and their best wishes. Later the employees of the General Film Company presented him with a gold watch of elegant design, suitably engraved. Commenting upon these events, Mr. Marson declared that he did not know he had so many friends in the trade.

Mr. Marson went to Boston several years ago to open an exchange for George Kleine. When the General Film Co. commenced business, the Howard and Kleine exchanges in Boston were the first to come under the new company's control, and Mr. Marson was the first branch manager to be appointed.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S LOVE AFFAIR" (Essanay).

Mr. G. M. Anderson certainly shows his ability as an actor of merit in this production, portraying the role of "Broncho Billy," his world-wide character creation.

The plot in this remarkable story is gripping, and the manner in which it is enacted is excellent. Winnie Allen, a pretty Western girl, is loved by Dan Wild, whose father owns the Circle C ranch. Broncho Billy, foreman of the Circle C, also loves Winnie and she favors his suit. Knowing this, and to make his way clear, Dan persuades his father to discharge Broncho. Broncho is unable to learn the cause of his dismissal from Wild. Dan now manages to secure Winnie's engagement ring from her room, forges a note in her writing, telling Broncho she is returning the ring because he has been discharged for dissipation, then pins the note and ring to the door of Broncho's shack. Broncho finds it and, unsuspicious of the trickery employed, leaves the country. Years later, young Wild, now a dissipated ruffian, is married to Winnie. Taking her meagre earnings, he goes to the town hall, becomes involved in an argument and kills one of the punchers. Broncho Billy now sheriff, is advised of the shooting and immediately starts out to find Wild. Mortally wounded Wild staggers back to the shack, and gasps out his story to Winnie who does everything possible to alleviate his suffering. Tracking Wild to the shack, Broncho recognizes Winnie. Realizing death is upon him, Wild makes a clear and full confession of the despicable way in which he won Winnie for his wife, secures Broncho's promise to care for her always and dies.

The dominant personality he has given his world wide character creation of Broncho Billy has made Mr. G. M. Anderson a great favorite in motion pictures and his splendid portrayal of his character in this story will only insure popularity with the hosts of his admirers. Evelyn Selbie portrays the part of Winnie charmingly and Brinsley Shaw gives his customary finished study of the dissolute Wild. This film is booked for release Saturday, Dec. 7th.

OPENS NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

Messrs. Manley and Roxberry, former proprietors of the Bijou moving picture theater of Chatauqua, Pa., have built and opened a $7,500 picture house in that city. The managers say that it is one of the prettiest little picture houses in the Lehigh Valley, and has a seating capacity of 400. The managers intend to run light vaudeville every now and then and played to 2,000 people the first night the place opened. Business continues to be good.

KIMBALL BUILDING TO BE CONVERTED INTO PICTURE HOUSE.

Mr. Henry Goldman, who operates three moving picture houses in the city of Green Bay, Wis., has leased the building owned by Charles T. Kimball in North Washington Street and announces that it is his intention to convert it into another picture theater. Mr. Goldman has leased the building for fifteen years and the transformation will begin about the middle of December. It is expected that the place will be ready for the public some time in February, 1913.

"Life in a Circus" (Great Northern).

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE comedy of the circus and its tragedy with all the mysterious glamor, which still hedges about the sawdusted arena is to be found in this two reel feature and it is all mixed in proper proportion. The circus is at once the oldest and the youngest of amusements, it drew its millions in the days of the Coliseum and it still has power to charm our modern audiences in the city and in the country. In other words it is sure of a welcome, at all times and places.

"The elephant goes 'round and 'round
"And the band begins to play."

"Life in a Circus" as produced by the Great Northern Company in two reels shows again the infinite variety of the motion picture. If we spent a week at the circus we could not get any more of those pleasant and sometimes prickly and creeping sensations which we enjoyed so much when the lure of the white tents drew us from the schoolhouse. It is at once apparent to the spectator that considerable time, skill and money were spent in the making of this feature. The plot is of the slenderest and we are glad of it, for it enables us to give full attention to the magnificent performances in the arena.

Is it possible, we ask in delighted wonder, that a man will dare what this tamer of lions and tigers dares? He looks to the audience as if he were flirting with the jaws of death, very aptly symbolized by the jaws of two fierce lions. No finer speciments of these kings of the desert were ever seen anywhere and making them do their prettiest in a small iron cage looks like the most dangerous of sports. In one scene the brave tamer throws a dozen lions and tigers to the ground as if they were so many harmless kittens and then jumps upon this perilous animated rug of wild beasts as if it were the most common thing in the world. There are most daring feats upon the trapeze; all of it done by professional athletes. One rarely sees such exhibitions of strength and gracefulness.

The most thrilling of all the adventures so vividly depicted in these two thousand feet of film is the escape of a huge python, its wanderings through the circus into the quarters of the performers, its intrusion into the room where the little child lies sleeping and the rescue of the child from the threatening coils of the monster. The contrast between the audience, eager to see, thoughtless of all save pleasure and excitement and the scenes in the quarters of the performers, where all is repressed anxiety and feverish expectation, is brought out with consummate skill in these pictures and cannot fail to impress the spectator. A word is in order too about the audience in the picture. It is a very large audience and it acts just exactly like a real audience. Indeed the audience is one of the finest things about this feature, so rich in fine things. The acting merits high praise throughout, but the heroine, who plays the part of the rope dancer is surely entitled to more than passing notice. She has a most charming personality, very sweet and womanly and she plays her part with uncommon cleverness and understanding.

The photography is beyond all praise, here and there the figures stand out with stereoscopic distinctness. "Life in a Circus," as presented in these reels, is bound to be popular with any and every audience. It pleases the eye from the first scene to the last, keeps our curiosity in constant questioning suspense and makes us regret that the "circus" does not last longer. In these days of spurious feature films it is refreshing to see a genuine feature, which keeps its promise to the audience by being markedly better than the average release.

COLES WITH PRECISION MACHINE CO.

Mr. H. B. Coles, who has been connected with the Nicholas Power Company for the past five years, has resigned his position with that company, to take the office of general manager of the Precision Machine Company, makers of the

MR. H. B. COLES.

Simplex projecting machine. Mr. Coles entered upon the duties of his new position on Monday, November 25th. His wide experience and knowledge of the machine business should be of incalculable value to the Precision company. The Moving Picture World wishes him success in his new field.

MARION LEONARD JOINS MONOPOL COMPANY.

ONE of the latest deals in the film world is the engagement of Marion Leonard by the Monopol Film Company. This bright particular star has been engaged by the Monopol people for what is perhaps the largest salary ever paid to a moving picture star. Her salary is said to be $1,000 per week. Her work will be done under the direction of Mr. Stanner E. V. Taylor, the well-known producer, formerly of the Gem, Rex, Reliance and Biograph companies. Mr. Taylor recruited a company of twenty competent actors and actresses, cameramen and laboratory workers, and on Sunday morning, November 24th, the entire company departed by train for Los Angeles. The company left the Lackawanna depot by special train, attached to which were two baggage cars tightly packed with picture-making paraphernalia costing many thousands of dollars. In the equipment was a complete set of Aristos Quartz lights, scenery, furniture, costumes, laboratory material and other equipment. On either side of the cars were posted long streamers bearing the name of Marion Leonard and the Monopol Film Company, to remain on the cars until the company reaches California.

MISS MARION LEONARD.

Before leaving New York, Mr. Taylor made arrangements with the authors of thirty of the most successful dramas of the past few years. All of these are copyrighted plays, and many of them are still being played by road companies. All of the Marion Leonard productions will be of 3,000 feet or more in length, and will be put out as features at the rate of two a month by the Monopol Film Company. These plays are all suited to Miss Leonard's winsome personality and her characteristic beauty. They will be of the romantic costume type. These productions will be begun immediately upon the arrival of the company at Los Angeles. The erection of the studio will be commenced at once, and will progress while the company is working in the open. This venture is backed by unlimited capital, and no expense will be spared to make the productions the very best in which Marion Leonard has ever appeared.

WILLIAM PALEY RELIEF FUND.

In response to the appeal for aid for the veteran picture man, William Paley, who is now seriously incapacitated at Los Angeles, Cal., The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a check for $100 from Nicholas Power, president of the Nicholas Power Company, which was accompanied by the following letter:

NEW YORK, Nov. 25, 1912.

EDITOR THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD,

Dear Sir: We learn with regret the misfortune that has come to William Paley, who has been so long and favorably known to the moving picture world.

We heartily agree with the sentiment expressed by you and we take great pleasure in inclosing you check which we would ask you to kindly have forwarded to Mr. Paley at once. We would be glad to see a fund established for the relief of one so worthy and we would suggest that you do all possible toward bringing it about.

Yours truly,

NICHOLAS POWER, President. NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY.

Supplementing the liberal donation of the Nicholas Power Company, The Moving Picture World has sent a check for $25 drawn to Mr. Paley's order.

Others who are disposed to render assistance to Mr. Paley may send their contributions to The World, with the assurance that they will be forwarded promptly. It is not likely that a great sum will be needed to put this old veteran on his feet again, but prompt assistance is the kind needed just now. Who will help boost the Paley relief fund?

HAL WILSON LEAVES VITAGRAPH.

It was with much regret that members of the Vitagraph Company said good-bye to their long-time associate, Mr. Harold Wilson, who recently left the company. Mr. Wilson was one of the early members of the Vitagraph Company and has always been one of the most popular men there, in a quiet, unassuming way. There are few better character actors than Hal Wilson. His work as "The Blind Miner" was a masterpiece. Mr. Wilson is at present considering several offers. He desires us to state that any letters will reach him at the Screen Club.

A PRINTER'S ERROR.

In the General Film Company's advertisement published on pages 850 and 851 of last week's issue, the printer gave the release date of the Lubin two-reel special subject entitled, "The Crooked Path," as being on December 3rd. The date should have been December 13th, the "one" dropping out when the form was being lifted to the press.

WILL SMITH JOINS THE NICHOLAS POWER CO.

Mr. Will C. Smith has associated himself with this concern as assistant general manager, and Mr. L. W. Atwater has been appointed sales manager, in place of Mr. H. B. Coles resigned. Mr. Smith has had a long experience as an operator and dealer and is especially well qualified for the position to which he has been appointed.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

GRACE CHURCH, Worcester, Mass., may rightly be termed a leading religious exponent of motography. A benefit was given in the church last week for Rev. W. B. Perry. The Men's Club of Grace church had the supervision of the entertainment, and chose moving pictures to do the honors. Five reels, four of which had a distinctly educational "flavor," and one of which was a comedy, made up a mighty pleasing program, and one that was well attended. This church had bought a moving picture machine last spring, and so the projection cost them nothing to speak of.

These columns recently stated that a well-founded report had it that Mr. B. D. Marson, for several years manager of the General Film Company's New England business, and with headquarters at Boston, was about to leave that concern. The rumor was found true and Mr. Marson is now taking charge of the business of the United Feature Film Company of Boston. Mr. Herbert Jacques, who formerly was with the Feature Film Company, is now manager of the Greene & Abrams enterprises, which embrace theaters in the New England section. Messrs. Greene & Abrams control the United Feature Film Company also.

The General Film Company's Boston offices have notified its customers that they will show no more advance releases. This means that first-run customers must pick their shows through the descriptions in the "World." Without doubt, this is a hardship on the theaters, who like to see what they pay for before the reels are exhibited in the theaters.

The R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company filed its certificate of incorporation at Augusta, Me., this week. The capital is stated as $15,000, with these men as the promoters: James A. Connellan, William A. Connellan, J. P. Connellan and another, all of Portland.

Gordon's Olympia Theater, Chelsea, Mass., is now in charge of Manager Sprague, who has just taken hold. The theater is a large and handsome one, and is reported to be doing a very nice business.

Manager Wats is no longer to be seen in charge of the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass. Mr. Wats remained at the Shawmut only a couple of weeks.

Mrs. Henry Coolidge Mulligan, president of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs, is an enthusiastic patron of moving pictures. Mrs. Coolidge Mulligan often manages to put in a word or two for motography when speaking in her official capacity. She recently stated that "we must encourage moving pictures, since there is so much to be learned from them." Geography, history and science can best be taught through the agency of the moving picture, and Mrs. Mulligan fully appreciates this fact.

On Monday, November 18th, the members of the North Cambridge (Mass.) Association, held an old-fashioned town-meeting in Bowers' Hall, to consider the advisability of sanctioning a moving picture show in Odd Fellows' Hall. The clergy of the district were invited to express their opinions. Up to the present writing North Cambridge enjoys what will appear to many to be the unenviable distinction of being one of the very few places in Greater Boston without a moving picture theater. Mayor Barry was present at the meeting, and refused to grant a license for the present project, and the manager sought the indorsement of the business men, hoping to overcome the mayor's objections. The directors declined to give their approval to the licensing of the theater until they had ascertained popular opinion. The matter was talked over, pro and con, and is now under consideration, with a good chance of the license being granted.

Mr. Peter J. Bowers reports that his Gem Theater, Bangor, Me., opened to good business, and that he is well satisfied with the general outlook.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," that great dramatic success of rural New England life, has been adapted for moving pictures, and a three-reel feature has been produced by the Special and Puritan Feature Company, of 211 Tremont Street, Boston. The reels embrace about 50 different scenes, and are true to life and remarkably well acted and photographed. This feature should be an unusually easy one to make money with, as it has behind it the cumulative effect of many years of advertising, done in the interests of the play of the same name.

Brown University, of Providence, R. I., has pounced upon moving pictures as the best way of teaching English. Recently at the Brown Union, a moving picture was shown, depicting Charles Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." Prof. W. T. Hastings acted as the lecturer, reading a synopsis of the play, and explaining the drama as it progressed. The writer believes this is the first time that this college has employed the cinematograph as an aid to its work.

The announcement in the "World" that the Keystone Co. had prepared photographs for the exhibitors, of Mr. Mack Sennett, Mr. Fred Mace, Miss Normand and others, was greeted with much enthusiasm. Many New England exhibitors got busy pushing pens or typewriters, to request a set of them. Keystone films are mighty popular in these parts, as they deserve to be.

Poli's Theater, New Haven, Conn., celebrated its seventh anniversary this week. Mr. Ollie Edwards, the local manager, took advantage of the fact to present an unusually large program, and advertised the anniversary liberally. An attractive brochure, outlining Mr. Poli's past, present and future plans was given away to the patrons.

Manager Al. V. Rosenberg of the Rockland Theater, Rockland, Me., believes in good, long vacations, he having just returned from a two-months' trip through New England. Mr. I. H. Rosenberg, his brother, states that he has been busy attending to the former's duties, and is glad that Al is again on the job. This house does a very big business, and captures the cream of the Rockland trade.

Mr. S. J. Breen, manager of Poli's Theater at Bridgeport, Conn., reports he has a new assistant manager in the person of Mr. Ted Holt, who formerly was employed by Mr. William Fox, in a similar capacity.

Mr. Oliver C. Edwards, Manager of Poli's Theater, New Haven, Conn., fittingly observed the seventh anniversary of his theater by taking unto himself a wife, Miss Imogene E. Brown, of New Haven. Mr. Edwards was a little ahead of the anniversary, having been married on October 23, but he just couldn't wait for another month to roll by.

The annual ball and show of local 84 I. A. T. S. E., Hartford, Conn., took place on November 21st, and was a great success. Fort Guard Hall was jammed to its limit, and the big vaudeville show went over big!

The Princess Theater, Hartford, Conn., is now well under way, and should be ready for its opening before very long. Another theater is about to be built at Hartford, which will be well supplied with photoplay theaters. The Empire, managed by P. S. McMahon, and manager Harris' Star Theater, are each doing very nicely.

The Dykeman and Carr Theater Company of New York announce that they have secured the lease of the Berkand Theater, Appleton Street, Lawrence, Mass. On November 23d the house opened for business under the new management, under the name of the "Bijou." The house has been carefully overhauled and improved generally. Nearly everything is now new, even to the projection machines. If run rightly, this theater should not find it too difficult to make a profit.

HENRY.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

THE moving picture has been treated very kindly in the Middle West, in the last few weeks by educators and ministers. The Decatur, Illinois, board of education fulfilled its desire, and a machine has been purchased which has been installed in the high school building and will be used for entertainment purposes, as well as for educational work. The film "The Fly and Its Disastrous Work" was shown to advantage in the City Welfare exhibit which was held at the John Marshall high school in Chicago, under the auspices of the Woman's City Club. Reverend Charles W. Savidge, pastor of the People's church at Omaha, Nebraska, has announced that he will install a moving picture machine in his church giving free picture shows as well as illustrated sermons.

The women managers of the photoplay house continued to be a great factor in the central states. Mrs. Musa Reese, proprietor of the Aereo in South Sixth street, Charleston, Illinois, has installed a new $700 Wurlitzer electric piano. She recently showed the three-reel Selig picture, "The Coming of Columbus." Mrs. H. W. Harper, wife of a well known photographer in Joliet and Miss Ethel Keene also of Joliet have purchased the Empire Theater at Morris, Illinois, from Charles Welshans. Their policy should be successful, for at the very outset, they announced that the vaudeville features would be eliminated and that they would make up the deficiency in the length of the program by substituting pictures and good music. Neither has had experience in the photoplay business. The personnel of the house staff will not be changed.

The new opera house, which is to be erected at Clinton, Illinois, by a stock company, will be known as the Clintonia. The name of the company has been changed to the Clinton Opera House Company.

Two Illinois moving picture shows have been given the approval of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which is comprised of a representative class of men. While the grand lodge was in session at Peoria, Illinois, the De Luxe Theater made a special feature of the three-reel production "Leah, the Forsaken." The Star photoplay Theater at Lincoln, Illinois, acted as host to 150 children from the Illinois Odd Fellow's orphant home in that city.

Among the moving picture houses opened in the Middle West, were the Gaiety, at Kankakee, Illinois and the Pastime at Holmer, Illinois. Frank Smith of Springfield, Illinois, owner of the new Kankakee house, gave the residents of that city a novelty in having the first performance made up of industrial pictures showing their home town. Manager C. B. Burkhart, of the Homer Theater, made his opening on Thanksgiving night and did a large business with the holiday crowd.

Two of the leading middle west universities are to appear soon in films. The cameramen were at Urbana, Ill., November 16, and took pictures of the Chicago, Ill. football game and the festivities at the annual Home Coming celebration of the University of Illinois. The publicity bureau of Iowa University at Iowa City, Iowa, was quick to recognize the possibilities of moving pictures as a business aid in recruiting students. Arrangements were made for taking pictures of the Wisconsin-Iowa game on November 23d.

The moving picture show which is being installed in the old New York building at Galesburg, Ill., by Hufe, Johnson and Sullivan, will be known as the Princess.

The Princess Theater at Springfield, Ohio, has been remodeled.

An ordinance has been introduced before the Mattoon, Ill., city council providing for the standard construction of operating rooms.

Pictures of local scenes were recently made in East St. Louis under the direction of Manager Redmond of the Lyric Theater.

City beautiful pictures which were made by the National Cash Register Company were recently exhibited at tthe Joliet Theater in Joliet, Ill.

The Lincoln Theater Company has been incorporated at Springfield, Ill., to establish a negro theater at 1021 East Washington street in that city. The capital stock is $3,000. The incorporators are, Robert A. Byrd, Toddie L. Bradbury and Abraham M. Williamns.

The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows at its meeting in Peoria, appropriated $300 to be used for the installation of a moving picture machine in the Odd Fellows' home at Mattoon.

The Colonial Theater Company of Fort Wayne, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The directors are, Herman C. Heisler, Beatrice M. Heisler and Harriet Heisler.

Ira C. Thorpe of Clinton, Ill., has purchased the Gem Theater and the Smoke-House cigar store in that city.

James J. Reilly Manager of the Princess Theater at Alton, Ill., contracted for the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, to take a series of pictures in that city.

The Capital City Film Manufacturing Company of Des Moines, Iowa, recently made plans to take a series of local views in Des Moines.

Miss Caryle B. Hall of Rockford, Ill., has accepted a position as piano player in the Colonial Theater in that city.

M. Schlessinger of East St. Louis, Ill., has succeeded A. C. Best as Manager of the Majestic Theater at Fort Worth, Texas.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

THE recently organized Moving Picture Operator's union, No. 2, at Milwaukee, has installed officers as follows: President, Herman Hammer; Vice-President, Joseph Shansky; Secretary, Joseph Arnold; Treasurer, John Held; Financial Secretary, John Richards; Business Agent, Louis Schinsky.

Robert Vining, a commission merchant of Fairbanks, Alaska, has opened the Orpheum Theater, a modern picture house, seating 400. It has been leased to Dick Thorne, an experienced show man.

The Dream Theater at Seattle, Washington, cooperated with the Theodora home, November 27, in a tag day to raise a fund for the erection of a new building. Tags sold upon that day for ten cents, admitted the buyer to any performance from November 27 to December 2.

The Grand Theater in Seattle, featured two numbers of the Animated Weekly, which showed a Washington forest fire and the reception at Vancouver to the Duke of Connaught. The films were made by Will Hudson, staff photographer of the Seattle Post Intelligencer.

The committee on streets of the St. Paul, Minnesota, assembly, has voted favorably on an ordinance, providing for women inspectors for moving picture shows, dance halls, and other places of amusement.

The use of the "personal" want ad in the newspaper has an effective rival in locating missing persons—the moving picture show. Frederick Poudler, 20 years old, a singer, disappeared from his home in Minneapolis, October 3, and his father sent to all the photoplay houses in the Northwest, a slide, bearing the message, "Frederick Poudler COME HOME."

The moving picture and the school child will be studied in the northwest for a year. The decision is the outcome of a conference between the civic committee of the Minneapolis Grade Teachers' Association and the Womens' Welfare League. The committee in Minneapolis, will compile data which will be added to that of other cities throughout the country. Dr. Albert Hillivig, Berlin, Germany will furnish data secured in Europe. A Board of censorship may be included on the plans.

The Aurora Amusement Company of Seattle, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are, H. O. Allen, John E. Franklin, and T. C. Nichols.

The Last Performance

Pathe 2 Reels

Rose Mailand, the celebrated equestrienne of the famous Barnon Circus, awakens the love of Count Hans von Harten, and they are ideally happy until the Count's father angrily forbids the marriage, which compels the Count to adopt the circus for a livelihood. His spectacular thriller, "The Platform of Death," wins him the title of the "Greatest Horseman in the World," and because of the public admiration his wife becomes jealous and plans revenge.

She drugs his horse, and as he mounts the Platform of Death the horse becomes frightened at the first explosion of fireworks and plunges forward, bringing with him the Count to death in the ring below.

Dec. 16, 1912

The Red Man's Honor

CINES-KLEINE 2 Reels

June Dew, a pretty Indian maiden, is betrothed to Red Hawk, the bravest warrior of the tribe. Seated Bear, another brave, also loves the dark beauty and his savage heart is inflamed with jealousy at the success of his rival. One day he surprises her alone and forcibly carries her off to his canoe. Red Hawk appears just in time to see the act, and springing into the stream soon overtakes his rival. A desperate struggle follows in which Red Hawk's arm, strengthened by the "Great Spirit," mortally wounds his treacherous enemy. Red Hawk and the maiden return to the village and the wounded Indian painfully makes his way to shore, where he tells a greatly distorted story of Red Hawk's crime. The accused warrior is ordered before the great chief "White Eagle," and the death sentence imposed: "He that kills a brother must die. Twelve moons hence his spirit shall join that of the dead warrior." Red Hawk's heart is filled with bitterness and he leaves his tribe to join the army of the pale faces. His bravery in surmounting indescribable difficulties to destroy a mountain bridge, thus checking the advance of the enemy, gains him the high regard of the army, but his happiness is short lived as he remembers the sentence and returns to his tribe to pay the debt of a red man's honor. With his beloved June Dew he is taken to the funeral pyre and their souls go forth to join the Happy Hunting Ground of the "Great Spirit."

THE CROOKED PATH

A STORY OF THE UNDERWORLD

LUBIN 2 Reels

A valuable watch and money stolen from a banker by Dan Lyons results in the arrest and conviction of the crook. While his sweetheart, Nell Harris, sits alone in the park reading of the long prison sentence given her lover, she is approached by a young clergyman, William Kimball, who questions her regarding her trouble. Nell admits her wrong deeds and tells him of her desire to follow the straight and narrow path. Kimball takes her to his blind mother and soon grows to love her. They become engaged and Nell is very happy. Dan Lyons in his prison cell succeeds in communicating with his pals by means of a note tied to a rat's tail and receives a supply of saws with which he effects his escape. He changes his convict's suit for the old clothes of a scarecrow and arrives in the town in which Nell lives. He sends her a note asking her to return to the old life, but she refuses, and in revenge Lyons plans to rob the home of William Kimball. He and his pal are discovered and handed over to the police, and the minister accuses Nell of assisting in the robbery. She confesses her former associations with the crook and is forgiven by her fiancé, who promises to shield her from all future evils of the Crooked Path.

Dec. 9, 1912

The Harem Captives

PATHE 2 Reels

The story is concerned with the adventure of Fatima and Ourida, two Arabian sisters, although widely different in dispositions. Fatima is beautiful, passionate and petulant, while Ourida combines with a lovely face a charming, peaceful nature. Arthur Budlong, a westerner, is in love with Ourida and has won her heart, which kindles the spark of jealousy in Fatima's breast. Rather than see Ourida win the affections of her handsome lover, Fatima bribes a tribe of nomads to kidnap her and her sister. The Nomads succeed in carrying off both the willing and unwilling captive before Budlong is aware of the happening. With his Hindoo servant, Arthur follows the trail until it reaches the City of Tunis, where it is lost. The sisters arrive in the city, are sold to a wealthy merchant and accordingly enter his harem. After ceaseless efforts, Budlong finally learns of the abode of his beloved and her sister and despatches his servant with a note to them, giving the details of his plan to effect their release. Ourida is overjoyed and Fatima feigns to be, but instead, turns informer, and when they come to the gate to await Budlong's arrival they are met by servants and brought back to the harem. Arthur and his servant reach the gate and after a desperate struggle with the guard they rescue the girls. Finding that Fate is against her, Fatima gives vent to her jealous anger, and while the outburst shocks the lovers, they offer to assist her to escape, but she refuses. They hurriedly leave her, to act as principals in a wedding ceremony.

General

Features

THE DAWNING

December 6, 1912. Vitagraph. Two Reels.

Helen Mason, beautiful, high-strung and self-willed, prefers the love of Victor Gardier, a young artist, to the attentions of Henry Pendleton. The latter declares his love for Helen and asks her hand in marriage, but she refuses. The young artist visits Helen, but instead of proposing, he acquaints her with the fact that his uncle offers him an opportunity to complete his art studies in Paris. She begs him not to leave her, but he turns a deaf ear to her pleadings, and after his departure she gives way to her anger and disappointment and in retaliation she promises to marry Pendleton. They are married, but not mated.

They visit Paris and Helen conceals the joy to her of a visit to the artist's studio, and her vanity is flattered by a request to have her portrait painted. She appears for the first sitting, when Victor alone with her, vehemently expresses his burning love, though knowing she is the wife of another. She repulses him and flees to her husband. The artist and husband meet on the field of honor and Victor is seriously wounded.

At NAPOLEON'S COMMAND

December 2, 1912. Cines-Kleine. Two Reels.

This is a story laid in the time of Napoleon's great triumphs. A Lieutenant, on leave of absence, bids farewell to his sweetheart and rejoins his army. Two years elapse and the Lieutenant has not returned to his sweetheart. She becomes impoverished and marries a Sergeant, who sends her to his mother's home in Paris. Years afterwards the Sergeant has been promoted to Field-Marshal, and he, together with his wife, is now in the court of Napoleon. During the court ceremonies the wife of the former Sergeant meets her false sweetheart, who has also been promoted from Lieutenant to Marshal. Her husband and old sweetheart meet on the field of honor. Napoleon hears of the intended duel and orders the officers to their commands. During a battle that follows soon after both the Marshals are killed. The wife, in searching the battlefield for her husband, finds near him her old sweetheart. The husband, dying, begs forgiveness of his wife for her old sweetheart, and the picture closes with Napoleon and his army passing by and the woman kneeling beside her husband and old sweetheart.

THE GREAT STEEPLECHASE

November 29, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

A thrilling race that is sure to send the blood tingling through the veins of every human is the principal feature of this extraordinary offering. As the race nears completion startling falls become frequent. Coming into the stretch the first and second choices are but half a length apart. The favorite makes the last barrier with ease, but the next horse tops the hurdle, turns a complete somersault, crushing its rider beneath it, and leaving the jockey-lover to win the race—and the girl.

THE STOLEN SYMPHONY

November 25, 1912. Lubin. Two Reels.

A beautiful story of a poor young musician who has composed an exquisite symphony.

A famous musician obtains the score of the symphony and adds new laurels to his already great triumphs. Upon denouncing the great artist as a thief, the young composer is sent to an asylum; later he obtains his release and appears in a concert where the famous artist is playing the now world's great symphony, demonstrates it is the genius of his brain and is proclaimed to the world.

BILLY'S BURGLAR

November 22, 1912. Two Reels.

A daring capture of a notorious burglar by a brave boy. This is a thrilling adventure in a fast speeding automobile and a funny predicament of a negligent policeman.

The Stars of the Vitagraph Company are cast very happily in this splendid production.

KERRY GOW

November 18, 1912. Kalem. Three Reels.

This is a play that the Kalem Company has gone to Ireland for and brought back with the true atmosphere and every real characteristic of the Irish soil and Irish heart. The plot of the play is a regulation one, wherein the villain's efforts are frustrated at every turn, and the story ends with him on his way to jail and the lovers preparing for the wedding. The Irish landscape is produced and the remarkable attention to details makes the picture a really great one.

THE GROTTO of TORTURE

November 15, 1912. Pathe. Two Reels.

The persistence of an English lover wins him a bride from the recesses of a Hindoo temple, a woman who, knowing the punishment which will follow her action, still listens to her lover. Her whereabouts are unknown for a long time to the High Priest, but one day he finds her home and sees in its cradle her infant son. The Hindoo departs with a piece of the baby's wrap. This he uses to give the scent to a vicious leopard which is set free and hungrily picks out the trail back to the cradle and steals the child.

The mother gives chase, and her husband with an armed guard, boards an elephant and follows her trail. The mother tracks the leopard to the secret entrance to the Grotto of Torture, where she is seized and hurled into the torture room. Her husband reaches the cave a few moments later and rescues the mother and infant child.

KINGS OF THE FOREST

November 11, 1912. Two Reels.

A Wild Animal Sensation, by Selig, presenting a thrilling story of life in the Transvaal Jungles. This is one of the greatest animal pictures ever produced, and there are enough exciting moments, hairbreadth escapes and daring ventures to interest the most blase. This is a picture that is sure to attract and hold the interest of your patrons and to remain fresh for a long time in their memory.

THE MILLS OF THE GODS

November 4, 1912. Three Reels.

Signore Lorenzo, a very rich plebeian, seeks to dethrone Prince Gian of Milan. Lorenzo becomes enamored with Maria, a beautiful peasant girl, who repulses his attentions and is protected by Miguel, whom she soon marries. Through Lorenzo's influence they are driven from home into direct poverty, and Maria's death soon follows. Miguel later acquires wealth. Lorenzo's attempts to steal Miguel's beautiful daughter and usurp the throne are foiled, and he is betrayed by Pano, Miguel's servant, into a vacant house; the place is fired, and his life ground out by the Mills of the Gods. A Vitagraph production.

FRENZIED FINANCE

October 28, 1912. Three Reels.

A Pathe story. Claude Rodgers, a gambler, falls heir to a banking business. Rodgers immediately launches a "Get-rich-quick" scheme and starts a campaign to get depositors by promises of fabulous interest. The bank soon becomes the largest, although not the safest, in the East. But good things cannot last forever, and with his wife's sickness Rodgers' luck turns. A run on the bank is the next misfortune, and because of Rodgers' extravagance it cannot stand the strain. A mob of ruined depositors storms the home of the banker and finds that a bullet from his revolver has brought his reckless career to a close.

OLYMPIC GAMES

Pathe shows World's greatest athletes in action at Stockholm meet.

THE LION TAMER'S REVENGE

October 21, 1912. Two Reels.

A Cines-Kleine Sensational Story. A story in which lions play an important part. A jealous lover, with the assistance of a clown, lures his rival and the girl into the den of lions. The woman manages to escape, later to accuse the murderer, but the lover is mangled to death by the infuriated lions.

THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO

October 14, 1912. Three Reels.

Selig Release. A wonderful and tragic story of Edmond Dantes, a young Frenchman, who is intrusted with a message to the exiled Napoleon on the Isle of Elba forms one of the greatest themes ever written upon. There are over 300 people in the cast and shows the wonderful scenes, gorgeous costumes and elaborate stage setting. This is one of the most fascinating pictures ever produced by Selig.

THE MAN HUNT

September 30, 1912. Two Reels.

A Pathe production, showing Kilborne, a poacher who is loved by Rose, the daughter of an old charwoman, whose cabin is in the dense forest. Kilborne is sought by the police and Rose, suspecting that he is at the house of a farmer whose daughter he is in love with, hurries to warn him of the impending danger. The police surround the house and as Kilborne steps through the door he is ordered to surrender; he refuses and the officer fires to kill him. Rose steps in front and receives the deadly bullet.

IT is crowded with effective incidents from beginning to end, and the continuity of the story as told by the talented director and sympathetic actress is perfect. There is no lapse of interest at any stage of the production. . . I rose from the exhibition as I might after watching and hearing a great stage performance.

Helen Gardner

IN

Cleopatra

Charles L. Gaskill

Director—Manager

The Critic Says.

Miss Gardner is artist enough to conceal her art and merge mimicry with realism so delicately that she seems unconscious of the fact that she is acting or has any other individuality than that of Cleopatra herself. I think her performance will rank as one of the greatest ever shown on the screen up to the present time. . . The play is strong throughout. . . Mr. Gaskill has proven his case beyond the shadow of a doubt. . . It does not require any special delicacy of perception or exceptional cultivation of taste to discern the intensity of Miss Gardner's impersonation. It is full of varied moods as the character of Cleopatra must have been, at one time the incarnation of tigerish ferocity, at another imbued with the seductive languor and delightful enervation of tropic temperament. With all the witchcraft of a worldly woman and all the wondrous charm of a naturally beautiful one, she holds the eye every moment she is on the scene. . . The general cast is good. . . Miss Gardner is moulded for the part in feature and form and she depicts the great queen as one not relying upon physical appeal to the senses alone. She exhibits Cleopatra in her lighter moods, a creature of tremendous vigor and wayward passions, but this is all changed as the tragic end approaches. She is no longer a girl of caprice, but a great woman dominated by a passion that sweeps the strings of her heart with overpowering strength. . . I hardly know whether I am talking of Cleopatra or Helen Gardner—they are one and indivisible in this rare production. . . Whatever Mr. Gaskill's system, Miss Gardner has put soul into it.—Louis Reeves Harrison in the M. P. World, Nov. 30.

The scenic effects are beautiful, the costumes are gorgeous, and the acting as a whole is excellent, all blending together into what is probably the most stupendous and beautiful picture ever produced. . . Miss Gardner fits the part so perfectly with her personality and rare charms that one almost feels oneself back in royal Egypt watching the sport of kings. . . The picture is of high educational character . . is one that will not jar the finer tastes, nor does it seek to meet that demand which requires horse-play. . . Each of the five parts is in itself a beautifully conceived picture.—Warren Hastings Abbott in the N. Y. Dramatic Mirror, Nov. 20.

FULLY aware that all managers who handle this mammoth production will make big profits, nevertheless it is the purpose of the distributers to place the cost of every State at so reasonable a figure that no prudent manager will hesitate. It is realized that this production is not the last one to be made by the Helen Gardner Picture Players, and that the only way to secure the future is to take good care of the present. This is business sense. For this reason all managers of first-class theaters and managers and buyers of territory are urged to be prompt in making their wishes known. It is not even necessary for us to say a word respecting the tremendous merits of this remarkable and transcendently beautiful motion picture—all that we could have said for the production has been said by the great authorities and critics. Everybody knows what Miss Gardner has already accomplished in motion pictures, and this six thousand feet of pictorial and dramatic beauty represents her at her very best—as Mr. Harrison says "her performance will rank as one of the greatest ever shown on the screen up to the present time." And this includes Madame Bernhardt's work as well as Madame Rejane's. A full line of superb advertising matter is furnished, namely:

1-24 sheet stand (pictorial), 1-6 sheet stand (pictorial), 2-3 sheet pictorial, 2-1 sheet pictorial, 4 page herald. Handsome booklet and postcards. Handsome photo-lobby display. Special music. Wire at once for particulars, stating the territory you wish to own.

VITAGRAPH.

THE SIGNAL OF DISTRESS (Dec. 9).—Dolly Dillard jumps at the conclusion that George Gordon is playing her false, as he affectionately greets his sister at the train when she comes to pay him a visit. Dolly, who is not acquainted with his sister, sends back her engagement ring.

Sad and disconsolate, she saunters to the cliffs overlooking the seashore, trying to forget her imagined wrong. As she is climbing down the side of the rocky prominence, her foot slips and she falls into a narrow crevice. She finds herself helpless with a sprained ankle.

Remembering George's returned match-case, she tears a piece of cloth from her skirt; writes with a burnt match a note, telling of her accident. She ties it around her shoe and throws it over the cliff to her collie dog Jean, who carries the missive to George, who at once, after summoning aid, goes to her rescue, accompanied by his sister. After a dangerous descent by the aid of a rope, he succeeds in bringing her safely out of her peril. It is then she learns that the innocent cause of all her unhappy suspicions is George's sister.

DOCTOR BRIDGET (Dec. 10).—Suffering with too little to do and too many to help him do it, Freddie, the son of wealthy and indulgent parents, develops into a regular mollycoddle. He enjoys being petted and waited upon and to indulge this tendency, he claims to be sick. His parents engage the services of all the specialists in town, but their dear Freddie grows more peevish and threatens to go into a decline, although he constantly insists upon smoking cigarettes and reading trashy literature throughout his illness. His solicitous parents are suddenly obliged to leave town and leave him under the care of a doctor and nurse.

Bridget, the cook, has diagnosed Freddie's case and concludes that she will take him in hand and administer a little physical culture to him. Taking Freddie by the back of the neck, she sets him to work about the kitchen, scrubbing the floor, washing the dishes, and cleaning the stove. With her mental and physical dominion, this treatment gives Freddie an enormous appetite, and speedily he recovers from his sickness.

NATOOSA (Dec. 11).—Sauntering through the Three X Ranch, Red Hawk and his daughter, Natoosa, are accosted by some of the cowboys, who try to take liberties with the young Indian girl. Jack Bangs comes to her rescue and drives off her tormentors. He earns the thanks of Red Hawk and Natoosa falls deeply in love with him.

Upon their return to the Indian encampment, Natoosa confides to her father that she is in love with Bangs. Red Hawk, filled with the pride and traditions of his race, goes back to the ranch, tells Bangs he would honor him by giving his daughter to him in marriage. Bangs frankly tells the chief that he is engaged to another. Red Hawk, disappointed and angry, sullenly departs. He tells his braves that they must capture Jack and his sweetheart, Lillian, and bring them to the Indian encampment. Obeying their chief's command, they await a favorable opportunity and lie in wait for Jack and Lillian, whom they seize and carry away. They tie them to stakes with the decree that on the morrow they must both die. Leaving them for the night, the Indians return to their village. Natoosa overhears them arranging for the execution of the prisoners. In spite of her rejection, her love is too sincere for Jack to see him die or to wish him any unhappiness. In the darkness of the night, she goes in search of Jack and Lillian. When she finds them, she releases them, urging them to escape, which they do with all possible speed. When Red Hawk accidentally learns that his daughter has freed them, he determines that she shall be put to death for the deed. Natoosa wanders to the transparent pool which she was wont to frequent and sadly viewing the reflection of her face in its mirror-like depths, she despondently drives a dagger into her breast and drops lifeless. Her father, who is searching for her, reaches the pool and finds his daughter has carried out the execution of his own intentions.

ADAM AND EVE (Dec. 12).—The man, Adam, not content to be alone, unto him was given a woman, Eve. They are happy and content, until one day, there comes to their home a tempter. They take him in, feed and house him over night, and during his stay, he shows them many trinkets, laces and other finery, which appeals to the woman's vanity, and she begs her husband to buy them for her. His scant earnings as a gardener cannot cater to the indulgence of luxuries, and he refuses. She pleads with him and when the peddler retires for the night, Eve persuades Adam to steal from the pedrier's pack that she may possess that which she craves.

Adam succumbs to her enticement and the seeds of sin are sown and their happiness and peace of mind depart from them from that time henceforth. In the morning, when the peddler leaves, they would believe that their unhappiness had gone with him, but not so, they must reap that which they have sown and the disquieting spirit of evil hath taken possession of their hearts and home. When the pedler discovers that he has been robbed, he is fired with the spirit of revenge and immediately reports his loss to the town authorities, who hasten to apprehend the culprits. On their way, the news spreads among the townspeople, who pretend to be inspired with righteous indignation, but in reality they secretly rejoice in the downfall of their weak and foolish neighbors. Brought face to face with the peddler, Adam and Eve confess their guilt and the discovery of the stolen property at once convicts them. Imprisonment is the penalty of their crime, but through their appeals for mercy, they are condemned to banishment.

THE SONG OF THE SHELL (Dec. 13).—Suffering with ennui, bored by society, Annie Bradley, a wealthy girl, is anxious to make her time more profitable by doing something worth while. Alice Godfrey, a nurse on the Floating Hospital of the local Guild, pays Annie a visit and suggests to her that she interest herself in settlement work among the poor and accompany her on a tour through the tenement districts. Annie consents and she soon finds herself so interested in the work, she makes application for an appointment as a visiting nurse. She is accepted and joins in the work of attending the sick children on the Floating Hospital. Her tenderness and efficiency is noticed by Dr. Ferguson, the physicism in charge, and her compliments her on her work. This courtesy leads to a friendship between her and the Doctor which ripens into love.

They are obliged, by the rules of the Hospital, to do their courting in secret, while on shipboard. The Doctor proposes to Annie, and finding him so different from the men among the wealthy set with whom she is acquainted, she readily accepts him. They are secretly married. Annie continues her labors among the poor and it is not until some time after they are married that the Doctor learns by accident of Annie's wealth and social prominence. She tells him that she appreciates his ambition but he can rest assured that her money will contribute very greatly to their comfort while he is rising to a high position in his profession. He is encouraged by her willingness to assist, but convinces her that he will value her love and sweetness of character in the future, as he has in the past, above the wealth of all the world.

ALL FOR A GIRL (Dec. 12).—Billy Joy, a young reporter, is told by his chief, if he will secure certain letters connected with a prominent divorce scandal, he will raise his wages $10 a week. This increase will make Billy rich enough to marry Claire. He learns that Mrs. Gardner, who is seeking her visit Mrs. Gardner shows Claire the letters Billy disguises himself as a milkman and makes love to Mrs. Gardner's cook to induce her to help him get a look at the letters in the case. While holding the cook on his lap, in the kitchen, Claire Taylor, his sweetheart, calls on Mrs. Gardner. During her visit, Mr. Gardner shows Claire the letters and explains to her their connection in the divorce case.

Wishing some refreshments, Mrs. Gardner rings for the cook, who does not respond. She hurries to the kitchen, accompanied by Claire, and there they discover the cook sitting on Billy's lap. Claire, who still has Mrs. Gardner's letters in her hand, is so astonished at seeing her finance in such a compromising position, drops the letters upon the floor and will not listen to Billy's explanations; leaving the kitchen thoroughly disgusted. Billy has his eyes on the letters, snatches them from the floor, places them in his pocket and makes for the Editorial Rooms of his newspaper. His Chief, delighted with Billy's work, gives him the promised raise of salary, and straightens things between him and Claire, clearing up his attentions to Mrs. Gardner's cook.

MR. DAWSON TURNS THE TABLES (Dec. 14).—The Senior Clerk of Brown Brother's office thinks himself irresistibly fascinating. He is very fixy and fussy, constantly prinking before the mirror. The rest of the clerks decide to play a trick on him, sending him a mash note from a fictitious young lady, making a date for the following Sunday. He gets wise to their game, and arranged with a young waitress at the restaurant where he eats to keep the date and put one over on the boys. She agrees. The next Sunday, the whole office force is waiting at the appointed place to see his discomfiture. They are surprised when they see the classy little waitress, stunningly dressed and betwichingly pretty, appear upon the scene, take Dawson's arm and proudly saunter away with him. With gaping mouths and staring eyes, they ask each other, "Can you Beat It?"

SAVING THE GAME (Dec. 9).—In the school we find jealousy in the shape of a substitute who is jealous of a half-back who is to play in the big game of the season. At the practice game the day before, Jim Ralston, the half-back, gets a telegram from his mother saying it is imperative for him to be at his home the next day to sign some papers for the settlement of an estate. Ed. Hobart, the substitute, looks over Jim's shoulder, reads the telegram and sees an opportunity to play in Ralston's place. Billy Hanks, one of the boys of the college, loans Ralston his car to drive to his home, thirty-five miles away, so as to be back in time for the game. Ed. Hobart gets a pal of his, Fred. Owens, to follow in another car, telling him to let the gasoline out of the tank of Ralston's automobile. The gasoline is emptied and he, Fred. Owens, stops at a road house for refreshments, confident of his success.

Upon the discovery of the loss of the power in Jim's car, the old lawyer starts to drive by a short cut to the nearest garage. Accidentally they run across Fred's automobile in front of the road house. Ralston tries to bribe the chauffeur. He refuses to accept but by the dint of muscular persuasion he is soon speeding along. In the meantime the game is very close. In fact it looks bad for Ralston's side and when he reaches the oval the score is six to six and four minutes to play. Ralston gets a big reception and proves to be just in the nick of time to save the day.

HARNESSING A MOUNTAIN STREAM (Dec. 9).—This film shows how power is extracted from a mountain stream and converted into electricity. It shows this same mountain stream through its various courses from one lake to another, until at last it reaches the great Salt Sea. From there its waters are converted into rock salt, which is refined and finally goes to the dinner table where the man who planned the harnessing of this mountain stream quarrels with his sweetheart, caused by his upsetting the salt cellar and the old tradition of throwing salt over the shoulder is introduced in order to end the quarrel. The spectator is taken from the waterfall in the mountain up to the building of the dam, the harnessing of he stream by wooden troughs carried miles over the mountains where it is converted into electric power.

ANNIE CRAWLS UPSTAIRS (Dec. 10).—Annie, the daughter of the janitor, who wears a brace and is three years old, is neglected by her parents. They quarrel. She finds the door ajar and crawls out and up the stairs.

A young girl on the first floor is tempted to go out for a wild night; her mother has been unable to dissuade her. As she opens the door to go, Annie crawls in. In a few minutes the girl goes back to the mirror and takes off her finery. Annie, neglected again, crawls out and up stairs again.

On the second floor an ex-convict is contemplating a burglary. He is making ready when Annie knocks at the door. When she comes in the man takes her up and kisses her. He puts away his burglar's kit and Annie crawls out and up again.

On the third floor there is trouble between a pair of lovers. The girl does not want to marry, she wants a career, so the young man says goodbye but as he opened the door, Annie crawls up. He picks her up, shows the lame leg to the girl. The girl hugs Annie and Annie hugs them both together. Naturally the young man puts her down and turns his whole attention to the young lady. Annie crawls out.

ELECTRA

HUGO REISINGER, 11 Broadway NEW YORK

On the fourth floor, a seamstress is sewing at the machine and her little girl, a child of about Annie's age, is trying to attract her attention. The woman gives the child a slap and the child cries. Annie crawls in and the two begin to play together. The woman notices this, picks up her own child, hugs her and feels her little limbs which, unlike Annie's are sound and whole, and so neglected. Annie has to go out and climb on.

By now she is so tired that she can hardly crawl up the remaining stairs. On the top floor a young man, a stranger in the city, is contemplating suicide. He is alone, without friends and in despair. Annie comes sleepily in. He picks her up and she falls asleep in his arms. Very gently he carries her downstairs again. The janitor and his wife are still quarreling but when the young man appears with Annie fast asleep, they are silent, look at the sleeping child and draw each other close.

A SUNDAY AFTERNOON IN RURAL ENGLAND (Dec. 11).—This scenic film carries us into the beautiful rural district of England, through quaint little villages and past wayside inns and speak of Shakespeare and Dickens. Along the river and past some of the flower decked locks whose blossoms rival California's garden spots. Then there are delightful little, old, flat cottages with rose vines climbing all over them and half hiding the diamond-paned windows.

NO PLACE FOR A MINISTER'S SON (Dec. 11).—In a letter from college Cyrus Brent tells of a play to be presented by the fraternity. His parents, a country minister and an old fashioned wife, determine to pay him a visit and be present at the rendition of the play. They arrive at the college town the evening before the play is to be presented and manage to locate their son's boarding house only to find that he and his chums are attending a dress rehearsal of the play. The landlady, however, ushers them into Cyrus' room where they decide to await his return.

In the meantime Cyrus and his college chums are struggling with their final dress rehearsal at the local Town Hall where the stage carpenters are very busy building the scenery. Their hammering finally becomes unbearable and the stage director calls off the rehearsal for one hour in the hope that by that time they will have finished their hammering.

Cyrus and is chums avail themselves of this opportunity to finish the game of cards at his room in the boarding house where the old folks, unbeknown to him, are patiently awaiting his return.

At the sound of the boys' footsteps on the stairway the old folks conceal themselves in an adjoining room in order to surprise their son. They see Cyrus and his chums enter, and throw off their overcoats, disclosing their stage costumes. One young man represents a gay young thing in a harem skirt and another a ballet dancer with a short gauze skirt. They resume their game of cards, the old people watching them from their hiding place. When, however, they see the "ladies" smoking cigarettes, they are filled with indignation at their son's downfall and burst into the room upbraiding him and his brazen associates. Explanations follow and wigs are removed to the satisfaction of the old people who decide that college life is too deep for them.

FOG (Dec. 13).—We are introduced to Liz, an East Side vender of vegetables and we see her driving her moke through the East End of London. The next scene shows Lady Cecily of Park Lane breaking a pearl necklace which the Honorable Jack Penderberry offers to have repaired for her. As the Honorable Jack leaves the house and travels past Hyde Park Corners and down Picadilly, a London fog begins to fill the air and soon he finds himself wandering helplessly in its obscurity.

A member of the under world, familiarly called "the rat," who has been talking with Liz and her father, hears a sound in the distance and following the scent, comes up behind the Honorable Jack and bowls him over with a blow on the head. The handsome young man falls at the feet of Liz and when "the rat" comes to complete his work and rob his victim, Liz, who has been struck by the looks of the stranger, protects him. Her father backs her up and "the rat" is sent about his business while Liz and her father take Jack home. They find that he has entirely lost his memory of the past and Liz decides that she will keep him and make him learn to love her, so she hides the pearls in what she considers a safe place and Jack begins a different life which continues until Lady Cecily joins a slumming party one night and stumbles into a restaurant where Jack and Liz are having supper. Then the cloud clears from Jack's mind but Lady Cecily seeing him with Liz cannot understand the situation and refuses to hear any explanation. That night in the wharf cottage, Liz realizes that she has really lost the man she loves and that his happiness depends on her making his peace with the girl he loves. She makes the sacrifice and finding Lady Cecily at home, tells her how it all happened.

A CHRISTMAS ACCIDENT (Dec. 14).—The Gilton's are next door neighbors to the Biltons. The houses are exactly alike and adjoin each other; the back yards are even unseparated by a fence. Gilton is a crabbed old money-maker and childless while his wife has grown submissive through years of continual nagging.

The Biltons are a happy family of seven; poverty and scrimping have not soured them. The struggle to maintain his wife and the little ones has left Bilton threadbear, it is true, but the loving wife and five pairs of little arms that crept around his neck each morning and night were worth the fight. The fact that old Gilton fumed and fussed about the children sometimes stepping over the line of his back-yard, bothered him only in so far as he disliked discord; and when Gilton's dog was poisoned Bilton was as sorry as though it had been his own, yet old Gilton accused him of having been the poisoner. Even the heart-broken sobs of Cora Correlia, Bilton's sweet little daughter over the death of her canine playfellow, failed to convince the crusty old man. When the grocer's boy delivered Gilton's order to Mrs. Bilton and she cooked the dinner, thaiking her husband has sent the things home, Gilton was almost ready to commit murder.

As Christmas approached the Biltons were hard pressed but gave their little store to the children to buy presents, telling them that Santa Claus was too poor to leave them a turkey.

On Chrismas eve old Gilton staggered home in a blizzard, the turkey for Christmas dinner under his arm; on the porch that led to the twin doors of his house and Bilton's a teriffc gust of wind and snow closed his eyes and horror of horrors, he entered the home of the hated neighbor. Blinded and cold, his entire figure snow covered, be stepped into the midst of the Biltons, gathered as they were about the table laden with the cheap presents listening open-mouthed to Bilton reading "The Night Before Christmas." The children's vision of cheery Santa was rudely interrupted by Gilton's snow covered figure. To them he was a real Santa Claus.

In a beautiful closing scene old Gilton's flinty eyes filled with tears and the breach between the families is closed as though the spirit of Santa Claus himself had welded it.

THE LION TONIC (Dec. 10).—An old chemist invents a marvelous remedy and calls it "Lion Tonic." He proudly displays the medicine to his wife, but cautions her to be careful not to take an overdose. Womanlike, as soon as her husband departs, she determines to test the potion with a good, plentiful drink, whereupon she immediately assumes alarming proportions. Their little son Tommy follows suit, and is at once transformed into a stalwart man.

The chemist is horrified when he witnesses the terrible results, and hurls the bottle out of the window to the ground where the little pet dog licks up what remains, and immediately is changed into a monstrous lion.

Numerous other startling complications ensue which make it necessary for the inventor to discover an antidote which shall put everything right again.

PICTPRESQUE ITALIAN SCENES (Dec. 10).—Spreading before us some of he most picturesque spots in all Italy, especially in the vicinity of Naples. A visit to the beautiful valley of the Treia concludes the subject.

TRAPPING THE CONSPIRATORS (Dec. 14).—Stealthily, in the dead of night, the conspirators meet and select one of their number, Sir Reginald De Lancy, to kill Cardinal Richelieu. After swearing eternal loyalty to the cause, De Lancy sets out for Paris on his dangerous task.

Debois, a spy in the employ of the Cardinal, having learned of the plan, orders the arrest of the conspirators, and then goes in pursuit of De Lancy. The clever fellow persuades Richelieu to disguise himself, after which, by means of a decoy letter, he brings De Lancy before the Cardinal, who extracts from him a full confession of his terrible purpose.

Upon hearing this, the Cardinal throws off his disguise and angrily orders his soldiers to arrest De Lancy. They are about to carry the prisoner off, when suddenly the door opens and Louise, the Cardinal's niece, who is secretly in love with De Lancy, enters the room, and, throwing herself upon her knees, beseeches her uncle to spare the life of her sweetheart. Her earnest pleading finally causes the Cardinal to be merciful, but De Lancy refuses to accept pardon unless it is extended to his comrades.

The Cardinal, after a pause, even agrees to this, and De Lancy rushes off to prevent the executions, but, alas! arrives too late. Making his way upon the scaffold, he gazes at the lifeless bodies of his comrades, and, drawing his pistol, discharges it at his breast with the words, "Better death, than life at such a cost!"

A RACE WITH TIME (Dec. 9).—President Manson of the O. R. & N. R. R. is advised by the Acting Postmaster General that a test for the mail contract will be held December 17th and that a pouch must be delivered at Stevenson at two o'clock or the contract will be forfeited in favor of the Union Central R. R. The next day at the office of the superintendent of the Union Central word is received that the O. & R. is likely to secure the contract, and Thomas, the vice-president, wires to the superintendent of the Union Central that he must stop at nothing to thwart the competitor. The superintendent of the Central calls in one of his tough section hands, who schemes to disable the engine on which the trial mail pouch is to be carried. The station agent's daughter discovers the plot and taking the mail pouch from the wrecked engine, runs to a nearby locomotive and sets forth to complete the journey. A wild ride takes place but just as the clock is striking two, the plucky substitute arrives at Stevenson and delivers the mail.

CONWAY, THE KERRY DANCER (Dec. 9).—Conway, "the Kerry Dancer," is known all over the Emerald Isle. Our picture shows him in one of his many characteristic dances.

TOLL GATE RAIDERS (Dec. 11).—Stark, a man of the Kentucky hills, believes it is unjust that he should be obliged to pay toll while Judge Randolph, the owner of the road, rides free. He therefore succeeds in arousing the people of his community to such an extent that the Judge is petitioned to sell his road. Randolph, however, refuses to consider the proposition.

A band of toll gate raiders is organized by Stark and a notice is placed on the toll house, warning the Judge that unless he sells, the house will be burned down.

Millie Brant, the daughter of the toll gate keeper, is taken ill and Charlotte, the Judge's daughter, comes to spend the night with her, as Brant has been called to town. That night the raiders set fire to the house and the two girls are rescued by Charlotte's sweetheart, James Staunton. The Judge, realizing that the community is against him, agrees to sell the road to the county.

THE MUMMY AND THE COWPUNCHERS (Dec. 13).—Rant and his daughter, Julia, two stranded thespians, pick up an old newspaper and read of a wonderful mummy, discovered by a European scientist in Egypt, which has retained its remarkable beauty for centuries. This gives Rant an idea. Julia is to represent the mummy and Rant, as the professor, will deliver a lecture. They secure the co-operation of a medicine faker, who has found business dull, and his tent is used as an auditorium.

The scheme works splendidly until one of the boys falls in love with the mummy and the constable concludes that the professor is disturbing the peace. Dr. Quack, the faker, runs off with receipts and only the timely interference of the cowpunchers prevents Rant and his daughter from being arrested.

STRANGE PLACES AND QUAINT PEOPLE IN NEW YORK (Dec. 13).—A visit is paid by the motion picture camera to the various foreign sections of New York City and interesting views of the Syrian quarter at Battery Park, the Italian and French districts, picturesque Chinatown and the famous Jewish section in Hester Street are presented.

IRELAND THE OPPRESSED (Dec. 14).—During a rest at the harvest dance, Marty is requested to tell of the days when he was young. The good-natured Irishman consents and tells the following story: "In those days we got our larnin' frum th' hedge school and whin I grew up, tolmes bein' worse, like many another spalpeen I tuk to courtin'. Just about thin Lord Kilhannack, the divil take 'im, took to evictin' his penniless tenants by the way of a little divarsion. Con Hanley made a gallant run wid the news to Father Falvey. His Riv'rince, attimtin' to protiet the Morans, was put under arresht for his trouble. Bein' a knowin' lad an' a mimber of the White Boys, I blew the horn as a signal to call the boys together, an' there in the glen we took on the rescue av th' holy man. T'way a grand place for the wurk, but it cost us dear. Wid' the Red Coats scourin' th' countryside. His Riv'rince lived for weeks on the food secretly passed him, in the cave where he was hidden. Rewards were posted ivrywhere. A dhirty agent named Michael Dee discovered the hiding place of His Riv'rince an' sold him to th' crown, but Peggy overheard a drunken soldier's boast, and very tolmly too, brought the news, an' disguised, the good priest shipped to sea. He kissed the shore of his native isle and sailed him away to Amerikay An' tho Frough dear served sivin long years, she's here herself to tell it."

ECLIPSE.

JUST MISSED HIM (Dec. 11).—Sam Slick is an extremely slippery fellow, and leads his pursuers a long and arduous chase. They first stealthily attempt to surprise him in his room, but just when they are most certain of capturing him, he manages to wriggle out from their grasp. The minions of the law are persistent, and at last their efforts meet with success. Wishing to take no chances, they carefully place him in a cell and fasten the bars, but later the sly fellow even makes his escape from there in a most extraordinary manner.

THE MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL (ENGLAND) (Dec. 11).—We are taken upon an interesting trip along this busy ship canal from Eastham to Manchester, during which we are shown many flourishing towns along the way and several marvelous feats of engineering.

THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS (Dec. 10).—Leandre and Jacques, two young Italians, are in love with Francesca Tonelli, a beautiful girl. Leandre is favored by Francesca. One night a dance is to be held and Leandre writes Francesca pleading with her to wear a red rose if she returns his love. By chance Jacques secures possession of the letter and, in a frenzy of jealousy, changes the word "red" to "white." All unknowing of the trickery involved, Francesca innocently wears the white rose and Leandre leaves the town with a broken heart. Taking opportunity of the chance offered, Jacques wins Francesca for his wife. The years pass and Le-andre has become a monk. One day a poor girl falls exhausted at the cloister door and Leandre is horrified to discover it is Francesca. He cares tenderly for her, and then learns for the first time of Jacques' perfidy and that he has deserted her. Francesca dies, and Leandre swears to have revenge on his false friend—though bound by his eternal vows. Years pass and one night a stranger falls senseless at the monastery door. Leandre carries him to his room and there, by the flickering light of a candle, recognizes the wasted face as that of Jacques. Whipping a knife from Jacques' belt, Leandre raises it aloft. Suddenly the candle is dashed to the floor and the room is left in blackness. Gradually a shaft of light penetrates the gloom and falls upon the crucifix on the table. Then the form of Leandre, with repentant face, crawls to the table and bows before the crucifix, while his lips move in silent prayer.

TIME FLIES (Dec. 11).—Reed desires to get out of helping his wife hang pictures in order to join in a "Kelly pool" game with the boys. So he sends himself a telegram advising there is important business at the office and orders the messenger to deliver it at seven that evening. Of course the messenger forgets, and poor Reed puts in an evening of torture hanging pictures and waiting for the message. About midnight the message arrives, Mrs. Reed reads the fake business meeting, routs poor Reed from his good sleep, throws his clothes on, and despite his vehement protests, hustles him out of the house and commands him to go to the office at once. Reed finds peaceful sleep again on a park bench, and, a moment later, an escaping crook throws a bundle of loot beside him, an officer discovers the package and Reed is dragged to the station as being the thief. Unable to obtain bail, poor Reed stretches out on the hard bench and groans miserably as he sees visions of his buxom spouse snoozing peacefully on her downy couch.

THE PROSPECTOR (Dec. 12).—Jim Clayton, a prospector, strikes gold, stakes out his claim, and starts for the nearest town, some miles away, to file the property. Overtaken by night, he stops at the shack of Sam Dunn, a surly old squatter, and asks for shelter. During the course of the evening, Jim discovers that Dunn is brutal toward his widowed daughter and her little girl, and resolves to aid her if he can. Dunn and his son now give up their bed to Jim and leave the shack, supposedly to sleep in the barn. Late that night Anna, Dunn's daughter, overhears her father and brother plotting to rob Clayton. She sends her little girl down to warn the prospector, and, when the plotters enter, Jim wounds the son in the arm and is struggling furiously with the old squatter when Anna enters, rescues Jim at gun's point and, with her little girl, rides away with the young prospector to town. Jim now marries Anna, in order to protect her for life, and next morning they ride back to the shack. Old Dunn is persuaded to give his blessing, then Jim offers him a partnership in the mine. Thus matters are happily adjusted.

THE ERROR OF OMISSION (Dec. 13).—Tommy Lawton is born into the world and his father, one of the common type of careless parents, neglects to register his birth certificate in the flurry resulting from having a young bull pup sent him from a friend. The dog is registered at once, however, and the contrast of the two registry offices is startling. Before the dog registry office a huge crowd clamors for attention from the overworked clerks, while at the birth registry counter the clerks yawn and nod over their neglected books. Tommy grows into a sturdy lad, and his father has the greatest difficulty in securing him a place in the public school because of his birth never having been registered. At the age of fourteen Tommy is left alone in the world by the death of his father and attempts to secure work. A truant officer intervenes and Tommy, unable to prove his exact age, is unable to look for employment. The years pass on and Tommy is now a young man, in love with pretty Eva Cushman. Feeling himself of age and desiring to cast his vote for a staunch friend of Eva's father, Tommy tries to register at the polls, but is challenged because of his youthful appearance and, not being able to prove his age, is turned away. Later he endeavors to secure a marriage license, but it is the old story—he cannot prove his age and is rejected. One morning he receives a letter advising him that he has inherited a fortune if he can prove his identity. Again the neglect of registering his birth almost loses Tommy the fortune until he happens to discover his father's old dog registration paper, on the back of which is carelessly scribbled: "Also became the father of a fine, bouncing boy on this date." With this scrap of good luck, Tommy hurries to the lawyer, proves his identity by revealing an odd birth-mark on his neck, and is rewarded with the money.

ALKALI IKE'S MOTORCYCLE (Dec. 14).—One night all the boys of the Seven Up Ranch are invited to the house to meet Bud Simpson's niece from Lizardhead. After hours of brushing up his dusty best clothes, Alkali Ike finally rigs himself out and, with a freshly washed rubber collar roped about his neck, chases into the ranch house where he finds the lovely Soffe seated at the organ, surrounded by the boys, who are industriously screeching their heads off in an endeavor to sing. Alkali Ike vainly attempts to elbow his way through and get a sight of the fair Soffe, but in vain, and is finally thrown out of the house by the boys. But his wooing is not in vain, and the next morning a motorcyclist arrives at the ranch and stops for a while. Alkali immediately sees possibilities in the machine, buys it outright, and invites Soffe to take a spin with him along the trail. She delightedly agrees—and then the fun begins. Of course Alkali loses control of the mechanism and the wildest of rides ensues. Finally the machine lands in the creek, and there we leave Alkali in the hands of the enraged Soffe, who does things good and plenty to him.

LUBIN.

A LUCKY FALL (Dec. 9).—Jack Hollingsworth and Kate, wife, came to Placerville with the gold seekers. One day when Jack was in town, the stage drove up and deposited an old chum who had been his school mate in the East. They renewed friendship and became partners. They made trips together over the mountains in quest of gold, frequently remaining away weeks at a time. One of these trips seemed longer and more lonesome to the little wife, so she donned a suit of Jack's clothes and started on a prospecting tour. She stumbled onto a grizzly bear. She backed away fearing to disturb him. Failing to see a nearby precipice, she went down tumbling and rolling, until she reached the bottom. Getting on her feet she was about to start for home again when right before her lay the unmistakable sign of a paying claim—gold bearing quartz in abundance. Putting a few samples in her coat pocket she trudged along until she reached home. Wishing to surprise her husband when he comes home, she recorded the claim and had the ore assayed, but had not counted on a dishonest assayer, who told her the ore assayed only $30.00 to the ton instead of $3,000. He offered her $150 for her claim which was willingly accepted. She went with the assayer to show him the location of the claim and while away Jack and Will returned empty handed to the cabin. Kate was not there but they found the assay sheet on the table, showing $30.00 for each 2000 lbs. Thinking she might be in town, they dropped into the assayer's office. There they saw the entry under her name of $3,000 to the ton. Suspecting the truth they hurried out, informed the sheriff and started in pursuit to prevent the sale. They reached there just as Kate was about to sign the assignment. The sheriff took the assayer in charge. It was the biggest gold find the town had ever heard of, and happiness reigned ever after in the little family of gold seekers.

THE WONDERFUL ONE HORSE SHAY (Dec. 10).—Parson Burroughs who owns the shay, spends much of his time courting widow Hubbard. The parson discovers that he has a dangerous rival in the person of Abe Hobbs. Meanwhile, the widow's daughter, Ethel, falls in love with Harry Smith. The widow's objections to Harry lead to clandestine love meetings between the young people. At Aunt Dinah's quilting party the parson "puts one over" on Hobbs by escorting the widow to the party. After the assemblage breaks up, Hobbs hurries outside to invite the widow to ride home in his rig. But the one horse shay stood right in front of Aunt Dinah's house, and when the parson asked permission to drive the widow home she accepted. Hobbs, not to be outdone, invites the village Justice of the Peace to jump in his rig and drive with him to the latter's office. Here he secures a marriage license and starts back to the widow's home. The parson and the widow arrive ahead of him to discover that Ethel and Harry have just eloped. A farm hand tells them the direction the runaways have taken and the old folks start in hot pursuit. Hobbs, armed with a marriage license and wedding ring, arrives immediately after their departure, and decides to follow them. Ethel and Harry speed down to the Justice of Peace office. The widow and parson are almost upon the elopers when "all at once the horse stood still." The parson and widow find themselves seated in the roadway, the parson half-stunned, holding on stupidly to the horse reins, while the widow, her back to his, is sprawled, half dazed, in the road. The widow staggers to her feet and starts up the road to return on foot to her home. With the widow in this frame of mind, Abe Hobbs overtakes her in his buggy. He proposes, is accepted on the spot, and he persuades the widow to go to the parson at once. They retrace their steps in the buggy to where the parson, surrounded by the villagers stands gazing foolishly at the little heap on the ground. He nearly drops dead when Hobbs and the widow drive up, display ring and license, and ask to be married. But the old lovers insist, and the Parson digs down into the wreckage to find his Bible. Then with the widow and Hobbs standing in their buggy, he marries them. As he pronounces them man and wife, Harry and Ethel enter, with the announcement that they have been to the Justice of Peace and have been married. It is up to the old folks to forgive them, and they do so.

HIS FIRST SKATE (Dec. 13).—Jack Cole gets an invitation to go skating. He buys a pair of skates and from the moment he gets on his feet he never stops until he has wrecked a kitchen, a dining room, knocked down a crockery stand, made several persons take a tumble, and finally lands in the river, knocking in four fishermen with him and frightening the life out of the fish.

THE CROOKED PATH (Dec. 13).—A synopsis of this two-reel special subject by the Lubin company was published in the advertisement of the General Film Company on page 850 of the issue dated November 30th.

KITTY AND THE BANDITS (Dec. 12).—Dorothy and Kitty Budd, daughters of Col. Budd are giving a ball to introduce Kitty into society. Senor Yaro, a visiting Spaniard of the diplomatic corps, is in love with Kitty, who in turn is secretly in love with Harry Mitchell, a captain at the post. At the ball Senor Yaro's jealousy is aroused by Kitty's attention to Harry and believing that Kitty has encouraged himself, he calls her to account. Losing his temper he is about to lay violent hands upon her when she is rescued by Harry who orders Senor Yaro to leave.

The next evening Harry and Kitty are out riding when Harry receives a letter from an officer who is arriving by the evening's train. As a joke he and Kitty plan to hold up the ambulance on its way from the depot. She helps Harry and some of his companions to disguise themselves as bandits. Senor Yaro overhears the scheme and seeing a chance to revenge himself he persuades Colonel Budd to send a troop of calvalry to shoot down the bandits who, Senor Yaro tells him, are the real thing. Bob Wilson, a friend of Harry's and in love with Kitty's sister Dorothy, is sent in command accompanied by Senor Yaro. Kitty returns home and tells her sister Dorothy of the joke. Dorothy in turn tells Kitty of Yaro's report. Fearful that the troop will shoot before the truth is discovered Kitty rides after it and arrives just in time to save her lover and his friends from being shot to pieces.

BUSTER AND THE CANNIBALS (Dec. 13).—After Henrietta has eaten all of Buster's candy, Brooks appears with a story book. The fickle maiden puts Buster out of her hammock and invites Brooks to sit in beside her. Buster runs home crying. His father to comfort him takes him on his lap and shows him pictures of cannibals. Buster falls asleep and dreams that he is an explorer and has been wrecked upon a desert island. Being weary he lies on the sand to sleep. Fijiwiji, a cannibal girl, discovers Buster and awakens him. Buster, while he is making love to her is surrounded by cannibals. The cannibals tie him and lead him before the throne of King Kaliko. Calling his cook, the king told him to put Buster into the fattening pen. In the pen, Buster decides that he'd better make the most of his last moments and takes out his watch to see how many last moments he has.

Fijiwiji who has been hanging around to comfort Buster, sees the watch and hears it tick. She is astonished. She calls the cannibals. They release Buster and declare him king. Fijiwiji leads him to the throne and all the cannibals bow low before him. King Kaliko returns and Buster orders him prepared for dinner. Buster now reigns supreme and orders elaborate preparations for his marriage to Fijiwiji. But alas!—although a savage, Fijiwiji is "a female of the species" and curious. Her curiosity is so aroused by the watch that she cannot keep her hands off it and at last she lets it fall. When they pick it up it is silent, it is broken. When the cannibals come again and bow before Buster's throne asking him to let them hear the watch, Buster tries to bluff it off. When Buster fails to make good on the tick-tick proposition, his subjects begin to mutter and finally Bolo Bill gets it into his head that Buster would be of more service to the island community in the pot than he would on the throne. He leads the others to the pen where they release King Kaliko. Buster is wise enough to know that his reign is ended and the jig is up, so grasping Fijiwiji's hand he cries, "Let's beat it." They do. They both run down the beach. Brandishing spears and emitting ear splitting and blood curdling cries, the cannibals pursue them until Buster wakes up on his father's lap and hangs on to his necktie for dear life.

WHEN LOVE LEADS (Dec. 14).—John Morden, a manufacturer, has an only son whom he wishes to take into his company. He plans that David shall marry Josephine Claggett, daughter of his partner. On the day of David's return from college, Morden takes him to his office to make his proposition. Just as the two ascend the steps a beautiful and refined looking girl appears in the doorway. Her eyes and David's meet for a second. Then he recalls her as the little girl he used to play with when a child. Morden makes his offer and David declines it.

Several days later he meets Josephine Claggett at the party. She is pleased with David, but he is thinking of Madge. David goes to the city, and gains a position on one of the newspapers. Later Madge loses her place in the factory, and she too goes to the city, knowing nothing, however of David's movements. One day she and David meet in the office of David's newspaper. They get married. For awhile David and Madge are happy. Then ill-health overtakes David. Madge is the sole support. One day she puts their little boy to sleep and starts back to her work. David, still ill, insists upon going with her. In the crowded street the two are separated. Madge starts back to him. An automobile bears down upon her and she is killed. David is rendered insane and committed to an asylum. His memory has become a blank, and his identity is unknown. The boy is found by an old scrub-woman, and carried to a Children's Home. One day a sorrowful lady appears wishing to adopt a child. It is David's mother. She is attracted to the noble-looking boy of unknown parentage and she selects him. In the home the child works a transformation. Morden, remorseful, having tried unsuccessfully to find David, has taken to drink. Through a renewed interest in life, brought about by his love of the child, he reforms and becomes a changed being. Finally reason and memory return to David. He seeks his child. Wretched and penniless, he determines to go to his mother for money. One night he stands outside of his old home. He sees his mother, and indistinctly, his father, holding a child in his arms. He draws nearer. His heart leaps. He dashes into the room. The child sees him and reconciliation and peace follow.

SELIG

THE VINTAGE OF FATE (Dec. 9).—Pietro, a handsome young Italian, in love with Maria, the village magnate's daughter, refused by the father after swearing eternal love to her, with her rosary about his neck, goes to America to win fortune that shall win her. Eventually he makes a great success as a grape grower in California, and in rescuing a lovely young lady from a dreadful death, falls in love with her, discards Maria's rosary and appears to continue well favored by fortune.

The faithful and overfond Maria takes her scanty savings and, guided by Pietro's last letter to her, goes to America, and reaches her destination in California on the evening of Pietro's wedding fiesta. At first she decides to kill him, but resolves to humiliate him by tossing on the table in front of him the token he gave her in the o'd days in Italy. Death seems the only relief for her despair, and it touches her with a merciful finger.

THE RANGER AND HIS HORSE (Dec. 10).—A story dealing with a band of outlaws that are holding the sheriff's niece a prisoner to insure their own safety. The sheriff sends for the girl's sweetheart, a Texas ranger, to come on and help him find her. The ranger first creates for himself a reputation as a bandit, and when he arrives is welcomed to the outlaw camp as one of their own kind. He locates the girl, and through a bit of strategy, manages to make the outlaw chief a prisoner. With the aid of his horse, he then sets about getting the girl out of her prison. The outlaw camp is so situated that to enter by force is an impossibility. The ranger, however, goes to the top of an overhanging cliff, makes his rope fast to the saddle, and lowers himself into the gulch. By taking big chances he gets the girl out, and the horse, as he feels the tugging at the rope, pulls them to the top in safety. They are pursued by the outlaws, and are hard pressed, but the ranger will not give up his prisoner. He sends the girl after assistance, and holds the band off until the posse arrive. Then he turns the chief over to the sheriff, goes to the girl and claims his reward.

THE GIRL OF THE MOUNTAINS (Dec. 11).—Tess Sutton, the daughter of a miner, who is likewise a miser, dutifully dwells with her father by a lonely mountain farm, where his little mine and flume are located. She is loved by Hank, an uncouth mountaineer, in a primitive way; but her thought centers about a young doctor in the faraway settlement. He saves her from some embarrassment by calling at her cabin when Hank is an unwelcome visitor, and incurs the everlasting enmity of that bellicose individual. He tries to waylay and assassinate his rivel, but the girl shows him the other way at the pistol point. The sudden death of her father and the discovery of Hank, allows him to lead a drunken lynching party after the doctor. Again the bravery and resourcefulness of the mountain lass comes into play and they escape by the perilous way of the timber flume.

THE GOD OF GOLD (Dec. 12).—Five young men, hopeful and glorying in their strength, began buckling on the armor of the work-a-day world. The artist is for creative things: the doctor is aflame for science: the soldier observes the glories of the conquest: the hardy, wholesame farmer observes the advantages of useful life in supplying the world with substance: but, the financier tells how he will surpass them all in the accumulation of gold. With this engrossing incentive the picture follows his feverish ambition as he forgets his wife and family and soils the escutcheon of an honored name, with all joy in life subordinate to mere groveling after gold. He loses family and friends and grows more mean and miserly, until he finds himself in age, utterly alone, save for the valet he has schooled in his own mould. As he dreams alone by his fire he sees the group of early friends, and sees their success in the wider things of life. It so moves his conscience that he flings into the fire his only friend, money, and falls back dead. Then his miserly valet rushes in and wailing, snatches the charred remnants of a wasted life from the flames.

A NEAR-SIGHTED CUPID (Dec. 13).—Dr. Eli Brown, who is as eminently scientific as he is visually near-sighted, on his way to the lecture, collides with Miss Myra Simms, a busy shopper, and they exchange valises in the mix-up. When the doctor opens up his anatomical wonders in the classroom, it causes vociferous merriment. When he begins to draw out female frippery instead of skulls and bones. In contrast Miss Simms is horrified into hysterics when she finds a bag of bones, mute revealers of some terrible tragedy. Mutual explanations lead to mutual regard, and the near-sighted scientist gets a true insight into love.

MELIES.

A WOODLAND CHRISTMAS IN CALIFORNIA (Dec. 19).—It is Christmas Eve. At the Miller's home John and his little sister are sitting around the old Delft stove, an old curio that has been in the family for years. John tells the story of Cinderella, how she met the prince, came into a fortune, etc., and little Ethel's mind is set to wondering—wondering what that wonderful mysterious person, Santa Claus, has in store for them on the morrow. Mr. and Mrs. Miller come in and shake their heads at one another in silence. It has been a poor year for them and they have no money for Christmas presents.

A Jewish curio dealer in passing the window catches sight of the Delft stove, and, ascertaining from Miller that he would be willing to sell it, goes to a wealthy customer, Mrs. Leeds, with the proposition. It is just what she wants to present to her husband, a lover of antiques. The bargain is closed, the movers come. But little Ethel has always loved that old stove and cannot bear the thought of parting with it, so she decides herself in it.

Mr. Leeds is overjoyed with his wife's gift. He inspects it top, bottom, sides, and then inside. Ethel runs into his arms and tells her fascinating story. It touches the hearts of the wealthy but childless couple. It fires in them the desire for that which was denied them—a child. Ethel leads them to her humble home, where, next day the Leeds see to it that Christmas is a merry one. Then they propose to adopt Ethel to love and cherish as their own, to which the Millers finally consent.

BIOGRAPH.

JINX'S BIRTHDAY PARTY (Dec. 9).—Housecleaning interferes, as housecleaning is wont to do, with Jinx's birthday party. His wife writes a number of letters postponing the affair, but Jinx, true to the tradition of man, fails to mail them. The guests begin to arrive that afternoon, and Jinx is seized with the happy thought of pretending illness in order to evade them. His hoax is discovered, and, well—Jinx has a birthday party.

SHE IS A PIPPIN (Dec. 9).—No one can touch hubby but herself. He is strictly her own. She even interferes with his business until hubby hits on a plan to cure her. He writes a letter to himself, "She's at your office now. Pretty as a picture. She is a pippin." The wife finds the letter, which was left behind on purpose, and rushing to the office, discovers a pippin, not the kind she expected, but one that made her think.

MY HERO (Dec. 12).—Stern parents have ever been relentless obstacles in love's young dream, but it is perhaps quite doubtful if ever love could equal the accentuated bliss and anguish of these two. She refused to eat for her hero and for her he bore the marks of battle, an eye made black by a cruel parent's fist. Tired of such an unsympathetic world, they sought the wilderness, where, had it not been for Indian Charlie, these two "babes in the wood" would have ended their dream in a manner quite too disagreeable to think of.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 49 (Dec. 2).—New York, N. Y. President Taft and Ambassador Jusserand of France, visit the College of the City of New York.

Breslau, Germany. Her Highness, Princess of Saxe-Meiningen, reviews the 11th Regiment of Grenadiers of King Frederic III.

San Miguel, Cal. The Franciscan Fathers dedicate the "Camino Real" Bell with appropriate ceremony.

Hot Springs, Ark. A breeder of ostriches is training his 36-year-old trotting ostrich to ride or drive for the mid-winter races, where he will enter in competition with the thoroughbred horses racing here.

At Sea. The Atlantic Fleet gives a fine exhibition of marksmanship with the moving target 10,000 yards away.

Archangel, Russia. The antarctic expedition organized by the great Russian newspaper Novole Vremia, leaves on its long voyage.

The Balkan War.—Smyrna, Turkey. The inhabitants of this city hold a mass meeting to show their approval of the war.

Cettinje, Montenegro. The King, Nicholas I, receives the homage of the representatives of foreign volunteers.

Touzi, Turkey. This town is held by the Montenegrin army under the command of General Dussau Gjuraskovic.

Vranica, Turkey. The Montenegrin troops guard 6,000 prisoners captured in their victorious battles in Abania.

HIS LITTLE INDIAN MODEL (Dec. 4).—Frank Russell, a celebrated artist, is painting an Indian subject and has for a model an Indian girl around whom there seems to hang some mysterious suggestion of English ancestry. As the days go by the kindly disposition of the painter wins the heart of the Indian maiden. Mrs. Russell pays a visit to her husband's camp and is greeted affectionately by him. This enrages Silver Cloud so much that she attempts to kill her rival, and nearly succeeds. While this thrilling scene is being enacted, Russell has succeeded in learning from the Indian woman who claims to be the mother of the girl that Silver Cloud is really a white girl and that many years before, two children were saved from a shipwreck, one of them being adopted by white settlers and the other taken by the savages. This knowledge completes a chain of circumstances which convince Russell that his wife and the little Indian model are sisters, and the very interesting, finely photographed film ends happily.

THE TENACIOUS LOVER (Dec. 5).—It needed somewhat extraordinary persistency for Tom Jenkins to win Myrtle Townsend over the prejudices of her family. But Tom was always a master of strategy. When he learns that his prospective sister-in-law has been ordered by the doctor to secure the services of a nurse for her baby, he masquerades as a woman and gets the job. An English lord is anxious to win the hand of Myrtle, and while at the house Tom has an opportunity to prove the worthless character of the favored suitor. Of course, the duties of his new capacity place Tom in many predicaments, and his efforts to avoid discovery are highly amusing.

THE SPENDTHRIFT'S REFORM (Dec. 7).—Dan Steele, a "man-about-town," is a consistent loser at cards, which compels Mrs. Steele to ask for money of her father, with whom the Steeles make their home. The stern old gentleman refuses to give her money for any purpose other than to educate her son. From this allowance Mrs. Steele saves a little for a rainy day. The rainy day arrives. Steele returns home late one night and his patient wife is waiting for him. He confides to her that his creditors have driven him to the wall. Mrs. Steele offers to secure the necessary money from her savings in a strong box which she keeps beneath her father's safe. Steele's heart is touched by this and he takes an oath to quit gambling forever. Her father, awakened by Mrs. Steele passing through his room, secures his revolver. In the darkness he sees a figure crouched near the safe and he fires. There are troublous times in the Steele household until Mrs. Steele is pronounced out of danger. When she is well again she keeps her promise to pay Steele's present debts, and Steele keeps his promise.

FATE'S DECREE (Dec. 11).—The necessity for illness is explained by the case of the Martinez family. Senora Martinez, although guiltless, is found by her husband in a compromising situation. With a bitter denunciation he orders her from his home, and even the pleading of their little daughter does not soften his heart. When it is finally proven to him that his wife is entirely innocent, Martinez is unable to find her to ask to be forgiven. Next his little daughter becomes ill from a peculiar complaint. The physician orders that a nurse be engaged and Martinez advertises. Senora Martinez, seeking employment, reads the ad and violates her decision never to return to her old home again. Reaching the house she rushes, unannounced, to the bedside. The heart-broken child is overjoyed and is resting happily in her mother's arms when Martinez enters the room and begs forgiveness. The happy family is united and the physician gives it as his opinion that the child's illness was fate's decree.

THE COMPACT (Dec. 12).—John Blair, the District Attorney of a large city, is a drug fiend, and on the day he is to sum up the People's case in a celebrated murder trial, he finds that he is unable to continue. A young lawyer, named Gary, who has followed the case, calls upon Blair, seeking employment. The following scene is achieved by a double exposure which is perfectly accomplished. Confronting each other, the similarity of their countenances astounds them both and it gives Blair an idea. He offers Gary $1,000 to exchange positions with him. Gary agrees and they exchange apparel. Blair goes to the poor lodgings of Gary, while Gary, accompanied by Blair's wife, who has not detected the substitution, goes to court. With an eloquent summing up Gary wins the case. It is then he breaks the news to Mrs. Blair. She is at first unconvinced, but finally they both go to Gary's boarding place where they find the real Blair—dead. His good name and the reputation of his family are at stake, so a compact is arranged, whereby Gary becomes Blair and the real Blair is buried as Gary, the unknown.

THE RISE AND FALL OF MICKEY MAHONE (Dec. 14).—Mickey Mahone was the laziest man in town and, try as she might, his good wife could never stir him to moving lively. Mickey gets away with a large portion of the family's rather meagre income, and is pursued by his wife and daughter and a few neighbors. The trail is lost at the railroad station and the pursuers return home, with the exception of Mickey's daughter, who lingers behind long enough to observe Mickey about to emerge from a baker's barrel. She locks the lid on the barrel with Mickey inside. A truckman claims the barrel among other freight, and swings it onto the tailboard of his truck. At the top of a hill the barrel rolls off and continues merrily on its way until it drops, with a thud, in the Mahone's back yard. But you can't keep a good man down, and Mickey admits that he is a good man, although a little sore after his journey.

THE ELECTRIC LAUNDRY (Dec. 9).—A blessing to all housewives! It does away with Monday's drudgery! Place the soiled clothes in a basket, turn on the current and they are, automatically, taken to the modern laundry. They are washed and ironed by electricity, and, while you wait, they are returned to your home. Great idea! And so simple, it's wonder no one ever thought of it before.

PARIS AND ITS MONUMENTS (Dec. 3).—A series of views of the artistic beauties of Paris, its churches, its memorials, Eiffel Tower, Alexander Bridge and the tomb of the great Napoleon.

AN ESCAPE OF GAS (Dec. 6).—When a maid makes a hit with Max nothing can keep him from telling her of his love. The versatile comedian intercepts a gasman who is going to repair a leak at the home of Max's sweetheart and takes his place. Fortunately, Max mistakes the waterpipe for the gas pipe, and in the deluge that follows, the objections of the girl and her father are drowned.

THE OCTOPUS (Dec. 6).—A close observation of this much-feared inhabitant of the seas.

A MARKED MAN (Dec. 10).—An escaped maniac and infanticide, who is being sought by the police of a small town, wanders, in search of food, into a shoe-maker's shop in which is the cobbler's little daughter—alone. The child offers him some food and the maniac struggles with himself to overcome his desire to kill the little one serenely unconscious of his upraised knife.

THE CAPTURE OF MR. SOFTLY BEATIT (Dec. 13).—Mr. Beatit has a mania for appropriating any sort of a vehicle. His first adventure is with a bicycle on which he is discovered by the police, who reach for him, but as they do so, he mysteriously disappears. Next he finds an automobile in which he unceremoniously breaks in upon dinner parties and other family gatherings. A trick film and a very good one.

A TANGLED MARRIAGE (Dec. 8).—Pearl has broken her engagement to Chester after a quarrel. The next day Chester receives a letter informing him that his late Uncle's will, just found, provides that he receive a legacy of $25,000, conditioning, however, that he marry within a year from the date of his uncle's death. He learns that the year expires that very day, and immediately rushes to Pearl so as to induce her to marry him at once.

Meanwhile, Second Story Bill, who has escaped from jail, enters the house of the minister who is to marry Pearl and Chester. Bill makes the minister change clothes with him and locks the reverend gentleman in the clothes closet. Pearl and Chester enter and Bill, disguised as the minister, marries them. He gets some of Chester's money and then escapes. The minister, meanwhile, is making a terrible noise in the clothes closet and Chester lets him out. Explanations are in order and Pearl and Chester are more than dismayed when they find ehat they have not been legally married. However, with but one minute left before the expiration of the year allotted to him, Chester induces the minister to marry them, and all ends happily with Chester in possession of the legacy.

THE BLACK PRINCE (Dec. 8).—"Ragtime" Simmons, a colored gentleman, gets a job with a Hindoo fortune teller. Adorned in Hindoo raiment, he parades around the street, with a sign on his back, advertising the great occult powers of the clairvoyant. Tired, he falls asleep in the garden of the house where his wife is housemaid. Edith, the daughter of the household, and Mrs. Simmons' mistress, read in the newspaper of the arrival in this city of a Hindoo Prince, a multi-millionaire. She strolls in the garden and sees "Ragtime." She invites him into the house, thinking him the Prince, and entertains him. He makes love to Edith and is recognized by his wife, who chases him all over the house with a carving knife. Edith's father protests and she chases him up into the garret, where, after having been stripped of his glad raiment and wearing an old bag, Simmons is hiding. Father hits 'Ragtime" over the head with a mallet and brings him downstairs, where Mrs. Ragtime explains that he is no Prince, but her husband, and takes him home to deal further with him.

ECLAIR.

THE BONNIE, BONNIE BANKS O' LOCH LOMOND (Dec. 3).—McDonald is incapacitated by a serious illness, and his little family is obliged to resort to the interest of a small deposit which they have in the bank. The invalid, with his wife Clara and their baby, was being entertained one day by a friend who, to the accompaniment of his bagpipe, was singing some native ballads. Mr. and Mrs. Sloan, while touring through Scotland in their automobile, are attracted by the plaintive Scotch airs and stop to listen. Clara draws the attention of the tourists who see in her a probable nurse for their child. They propose that she come with them to America, but the little woman does not wish to leave her husband and baby.

The following day the McDonalds learn that the bank in which their savings were deposited has failed and that they are left destitute. At the same time, the tourists write to Clara and again propose that she go with them, offering the inducement of $500.00 a year if she consents. In their dire need Clara feels it her duty to accept and tearfully she parts from her husband and little one. Clara is in her new home and proves a conscientious nurse. One day the neighbor's children place a phonograph near the garden hedge, turn it on, and Clara, started, recognizes the familiar strains of "The Bonnie, Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond." The children leave the phonograph for a while, and, Clara, leaning over the hedge, takes the instrument to her side of the garden. The children, returning, miss the phonograph and see Clara disappearing with it. They rush in and tell the story to their grandmother. Enraged, she immediately notifies the police and then hastens to inform Mr. and Mrs. Sloan that Clara is a thief. The police arrive in the meantime, and they all depart to the garden in search of the culprit. There the poor homesick little woman is listening to the strains of the old Scotch ballad.

As the police make a move forward, Mrs. Sloan, recognizing the air, restrains them; her husbnd, too, understands, and they explain. That same evening Clara found in her room a beautiful, new phonograph, ready at all times to play for her the old song.

DICK'S WIFE (Dec. 5).—On page 885 of the issue dated November 30, an illustrated synopsis of this subject was published.

THE FLY (Dec. 8).—This film discovers the dangerous little insect swarming about the dead and decomposing, body of a hog which has succumbed to cholera. There it is seen feasting on the foul flesh and then crawling under this carrion body to lay its eggs.

We are shown the generation of its larvae into life and the peculiar phenomena which it has of liquefying the decaying flesh that it may obtain its nourishment.

Under highly microscopic conditions, its dangerous physical parts such as the hooks about the mouth, the respiratory cord at the other end are clearly depicted.

Then as maggots, which is their common term, they are shown crawling into the decayed recesses of the flesh, there to remain till they break their shell and issue forth as flies.

THE MENDER, THE PIPE AND THE VASE (Dec. 8).—Gontran has a model wife. His wishes are hers and her wishes are his. "Ah! If I only had a good pipe." "O! If I only had a pretty vase." She loves flowers and he liked to smoke a good pipe.

The following day Mr Gontran surprises his wife by giving her a vase, while she gives him a pipe. Later Mrs. Gontran complains that he is trying to smoke her out and she throws the pipe out of the window. Mr. Gontran finds that his wife is trying to crowd him out with her flower mania and throws the vase out of the window. Pipe and vase come crashing at the feet of a porcelain mender, who is passing on the street. He mends the broken articles. Mr. and Mrs. Gontran regret, however, their hasty action. The mender brings the mended pipe and vase up and becomes a medium for reconciliation. Mr Gontran presents his wife with the vase and Mrs Gontran offers her husband the pipe, and the mender has mended their shattered joys.

THE GREATER LOVE (Dec. 2).—The hunchback is an inspired violinist. His brother also plays. He is strong and handsome and is the leader among the hardy fishermen of the coast. He protects his weaker brother and they love each other. One day the girl arrives at the fisher village. She is beautiful but the world is dark to her for she is blind. Her old father obtains work with the fisher folk and they find strong friends in the two brothers. The hunchback grows to love her and she revels in his music. To her blind eyes all the world is beautiful. She does not realize that deformity exists and she tells the hunchback that he must be as handsome and as wonder inspiring as his violin playing. This saddens him for he realizes his ugliness. The strong brother admires her beauty, but does not give her a second thought for to him she is merely a poor blind girl. A great eye specialist comes to the village for his vacation and treats her eyes, but not with much hope. The hunchback prays that her eyesight will be restored although he realizes that if she can see his deformality she will shrink from him as from evil. The operation is performed and is successful. With her first impulse she calls for him; sees the strong brother with his violin and thinks it is he who was so kind to her. He at last realizes her beauty and loves her. They embrace. This is seen by the deformed who creeps away to the sounding sea. Playing his violin in a last sad requiem he wanders into the depths, unthought of, while the lovers are relating their hopes and experiences. Suddenly the strong brother sees the hunchback at the mercy of the waves and rushes to him and bears him to the shore. But it is too late. The storm swept soul has passed away.

THRU SHADOWED VALES (Dec. 5).—Roy Erlynne, a young husband, is a sport. His wife, reared in puritanical surroundings disapproves of the society butterfly friends that flock to his elaborate dinners. She is essentially a home body. This displeases him and he draws comparisons with the ladies of their set. They are not strict tetotallers as his wife. They are not averse to a game of bridge for rather high stakes. They do not object to their husbands having all night poker parties. In short he tells her that he is displeased with her narrow ideas. One night at a banquet given by him in her honor he after long persuasion insists that she drink a glass of wine. He is obeyed, but with such poor grace that he is further angered at her. That night he dreams that the first glass has made her a drunkard, that he has been discovered embezzling at his bank and hurries home for her to fly with him only to learn that she has eloped with his best friend. He disappears in the whirlpool of a great city. He is a tattered, bearded outcast begging for a drink. She is an even more pitiable object, and, is about to seek refuge in the river when he finds her and is appalled at the wreck he made her. Then he awakes and hurries to her room and he tells her she was right and that he will never drink again.

THE ELECTION BET (Dec. 7).—The oldest members, Messrs. Hopkins, Perkins and Simpson have the floor at the Club. Their warm arguments in favor of the Bull Moose candidate outvie the Wilson parade which is passing. They ridicule the idea of anyone but the hero of an Juan Hill winning the election. Mr. Hart who is an ardent Wilson supporter becomes annoyed at their conversation and the following bet is arranged. Hart is to give each one thousand dollars if Roosevelt is elected and if Wilson is the fortunate candidate they are to dress as small children about the age of eight and play a succession of juvenile games in the open. This is rejected as a ridiculous proposition, for the three old men are bald headed and long bearded and being men of great means they feel that such an exhibition would be a blow to their dignity. However, the arguments of the other club members and the certainty of Roosevelt's election, induce them to consent to the bet. Wilson is elected and the conditions of the wager are insisted upon, and one old gentleman is dressed as a little girl with a doll carriage, another is a Buster Brown and the third a venerable gentleman with a beard descending to his waist, is dressed as a Little Lord Fauntleroy with a toy drum. The school children descend upon them and they are arrested as madmen, but are rescued by the club members and borne to the club.

APARTMENT NO. 13 (Dec. 3).—Jack Downs goes on a motoring trip and locks up his apartment in the city, dropping his keys in the operation. A tramp comes on at this time, picks up the keys and takes possession of the apartment in the owner's absence. He adorns himself in Jack's clothes and then decides to rent the apartment. Nancy Butler meets Jack on the road and they become acquainted. On her arrival she seeks an apartment, and by one of those peculiar turns of fate answers the tramp's ad. She is shown the apartment and rents it, the tramp leaving happily after consummating a clever deal. One night Jack returns and then complications arise. Nancy recognizes him and claims the apartment, but Jack convinces her it is his. She decides to leave, but he, pleading illness persuades her to remain. She in sympathy, telephones a D.D., mistaking him for a M.D. In the meantime, a maiden aunt calls and Jack in desperation, claims her niece as his wife, and then at last the D.D. arrives in time to straighten out the tangle.

ROMANCE AND REALITY (Dec. 2).—Robert Milbank, a rich young New Yorker, is in love with Claire Rich. Claire is secretly engaged to another man and secretly regrets the step, for Robert appeals to her greatly. One evening, returning from a ball, he tells her of his love and she is obliged to admit that she is promised to another. Robert takes the news hardly and leaves her, going on a hunting trip to the West.

Robert secures a little cabin upon the Green Ranch where he becomes intimately acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Green and their daughter Dorris. Robert makes love to her and she falls under his spell readily. The process of this love passage is watched by a cowboy, Dick Miller, who would readily give his life to make Dorris happy.

The wedding is near and the pretty dresses have been duly admired when Robert received a brief note from Claire. It tells him that she has broken off her marriage with her fiance and that she is free again. All the old love for the girl who is in his own stage of society surges up and he writes a brief note to Dorris and rides away. The cowboys ride after Robert and catch him and bring him back unharmed at the request of Dorris. Mr. Green would shoot the man but Dorris tells them that if he is harmed she will kill herself so he is allowed to go. Robert marries Claire and finds a handsome but cold partner, while Dorris pines and dies with faithful Dick near at hand.

THE SILENT CALL (Dec. 4).—Col. Gray who is bankrupt is told by his doctor that a change of climate is imperative. John Seaton a young man who hopes to marry his daughter, Jessie, insists upon the old Colonel accepting a loan sufficient to take him to the mountains. They leave for the mountains, where they meet Robert Thorne. The young people are mutually attracted, and it is not long before Jessie had forgotten John and promised Bob to be his wife. John becoming worried at her silence goes to the mountains. The regular carriage for the inn has gone, so John secures a horse from the livery stable, which the ALMOST A SUICIDE (Dec. 6).—They are newly married and all is as merry as a marriage bell until wifey leaves some sewing, and a needle, upon the chair and hubby sits down and gets up hurriedly. Hubby forgets himself and says a word which wifey says stamps him as no gentleman. Hubby leaves the room in a huff and wifey, deciding that life henceforth is a perfect blank, practices hysterics.

Hubby gets nervous and wify keeps it up for the brute's benefit until he discovers she is perfecting her art for his edification. He resolves to teach her a lesson and going to the dressing room he washes out a bottle with "Poison" on it and pours some soothing syrup into it. He drinks it and staggers out. Wifey seeing the bottle runs for the first doctor, makes him alter his regular visiting list and drags him and his stomach pump to the beach. She likewise commandeers two officers, and they track hubby to the beach.

Hubby repents too late, and after the officers have shrunk two perfectly good costumes "rescuing" him from the ocean, the doctor gives a vigorous performance with hubby and the stomach pump as the chief actors. Hubby confesses upon an empty stomach and wifey takes him home, indignant at the remarks made by the crowd, the officers and the doctor.

BRIDES AND BRIDLES (Dec. 6).—Ranchman Alston gets a good fat check from the sale of some steers and decides to take Ma Alston, his daughter and some of the cowboys to a circus which is visiting the village near by. Off they go! Ma Alston has her hands full preventing Alston from visiting the hoochy-coochy and other side shows. She is annoyed at his mild flirtations with the snake charmer, who gives him a souvenir in a box. This is opened at home, disclosing a small snake with disastrous results.

Two of the boys are passing the performance tent when they hear a girl's shriek. They clamber under the canvas in time to punish the bullying ringmaster and to rescue the two girls, who are promptly discharged. They are invited to go to the ranch and the boys propose and are promptly accepted. Various other complications occur and the party have many experiences to talk about and laugh over later.

THE RIGHTS OF A SAVAGE (Dec. 7).—A gambler is caught red-handed cheating at the old trick of short cards, and, though wounded, he gets away, eludes pursuers, seeks shelter and is cared for by a semi-civilized Hopi Indian who takes the man to his pueblo, and in return, the gambler induces the squaw to elope with him. The redskin takes his loss stoically. Three years later, it is the fourth of July at Circle City and the ranch hands from the surrounding country are whooping things up, roping, tying steers, riding bucking broncbos and the world famous cowboy pastime called "Bulldogging a Steer" are being indulged in, right in the main street of Circle City when we see our trio meet. Events from now on move quickly to a logical conclusion and the redman claims the inherent right of his race to revert to savagery and repay the gambler in his own way.

PAUL AND VIRGINIA (Dec. 5).—A full description of this subject is published elsewhere in this week's issue.

THE WHEEL OF DESTINY (Dec. 6).—At the opening of the story Giles leaves home to go to a gambling house, the Major admonishing him to return early. Giles gambles and comes home drunk. Eph, who knows the habits of his young master, is waiting at the gate and helps him into his cabin. The Major, still waiting, goes to the cabin and finds Giles drunk. He disowns him and drives him from the cabin, despite the entreaties of the old couple. Giles goes. At the close of the war the Major is impoverished, and his plantation is sold for debt. He takes leave of his old home and Eph and Chloe beg to go with him, but he declines their assistance. He has no home and is a widower.

A number of years later Chloe and Eph are living in the North. Eph has a job as a street sweeper, and is working on the street when the ex-Major, his old master approaches. It is the day before Thanksgiving and Eph and Chloe have been saving money which they have deposited in a can or jar, which rests on the mantel. Eph quits his job on the street and takes the ex-Major to his home. Chloe has gone out to deliver a washing. Eph is shocked to see his old master in such a plight, so he takes the money saved for the Thanksgiving dinner, goes out, and buys him a cheap suit of clothing. He returns to his job and is fired for quitting the work. He decides to obtain a turkey by hook or crook and goes to a typical turkey raffle, participated in by colored men, and spends his last nickel in an endeavor to win a turkey, but is unsuccessful. Rendered desperate, he resolves to steal a turkey and climbs a fence and approaches a chicken. His conscience smites him, and he turns away to be arrested by an officer who has followed him, attracted by his suspicious movements, and he is in despair. Arrested just as he has found his old master, renders him dumb with grief. The copper takes him to the police station, where Giles, his young master, is judge. Eph recognizes him and there is a happy reunion. Eph is in a quandary as to apprising Giles of the presence of his father at his home. The copper explains that he caught Eph in the act of entering a hen-coop, and Giles laughs. He enters the police station and soon explains matters to the officer in charge, to emerge with Eph a free man. He takes Eph in a motor car to his home, stopping on the way to buy trimmings for a Thanksgiving dinner. Eph remains silent and they go to the cabin where Giles finds Chloe, his old mammy and his father, and there is a happy and highly dramatic reunion, with the tables turned—the son rich and able to support his father, and the two faithful old servants.

MILANO.

DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND (Dec. 7).—Nando, a member of the Italian coast guard, has just been married to a lovely young girl with whom he is greatly in love. They are living a very happy life in their humble home, Nando attending to the duties of the government and his wife her duties at home.

One day Nando sees a man and woman in an open boat, and when they land on a barren section of the rocky coast, his suspicions are aroused and he decides to follow them. He comes on a band and is told they are sightseers, but he recognises one as an ex-convict. Thinking that perhaps if he appears to fall in with this he may learn more of their purpose, he readily consents to row Rita, the queen of the band, along the coast, so she might get a better view of it.

After they leave, Nando explores the rocks to find what brought them there. He comes upon the entrance to a cave, where the band, in their hurry failed to replace the stone which covered the entrance. He is astonished when he finds money they have coined, for he thought they were a band of smugglers.

Nando goes home to think it over. His mind is so full of his discovery that he pays little attention to his young wife. She, of course, not knowing what has happened, imagines that he is tiring of her and gives way to her grief.

Nando realizes that it would be better to catch them actually making the money, so waits his chance. In a day or two he is called to the door of his home by a man, who hands him a note. It is from Rita, asking him to meet her at the lighthouse that evening. Nando's wife watches him read the note with interest and resolves to see what is in it. Nando lies down to sleep before going to meet Rita. His wife takes the note from his pocket, and feels that she has been right in thinking that she was neglected. When Nando goes out she follows and sees what she thinks to be a very affectionate meeting between Rita and Nando. Broken hearted she returns home. In the meantime, Rita has induced the coast guard to come to her house the following evening, as the band desire to get him out of the way. He promises to come.

This will be a chance to capture the band, so Nando goes to the police after leaving Rita and tells the chief everything. He is advised to keep the appointment, so as not to arouse the suspicions of the counterfeiters.

The band go to the cave and work hard to make up for the time wasted trying to put the guard off their track, but are suddenly confronted with revolvers. They have been followed and captured.

While all this has been taking place, Rita has been doing her utmost to fascinate Nando, trying to keep him with her until such a time as she knows the band will be on their way back. When Nando's wife enters with the police and hears the story of Nando's loyalty to the government, she is very much ashamed of her suspicions and very, very sorry, but Nando, with his bigness of heart, freely forgives her and they return to their former happy life.

BILLY JONES OF NEW YORK (Dec. 9).—Mario Bartini, a barber, sees a newspaper article about a well-known Italian Count marrying a rich heiress. This gives Mario an idea, which he decides to work out. He sells out his shop and goes away, leaving behind him a girl whom he is about to wed. The girl's father, enraged at Mario's treatment of his daughter, swears that if ever he should meet Bartini he would pay dearly for his action. Several years elapse when we are introduced to Billy Jones, a typical youth, who is going the pace too strong to suit his rich father. Billy quarrels with his father, and the boy's independent spirit asserts itself. He tells his father that he will make his own way. Billy, with but a few dollars in his pocket, decides to spend the money for a ticket to some small town. He arrives in Bendersville broke, but regardless of that, he registers at a first-class hotel. He catches a glimpse of Mary McCarthy, the daughter of a wealthy contractor. It is a case of love at first sight with the boy; he is determined to remain in town and make an acquaintance of the girl. Billy secures a position as time clerk on one of Mr. McCarthy's contracting operations, but does not realize that he is working for the girl's father until one day she rides up to the works in her auto to visit her father. Billy has an opportunity to get acquainted with Mary, and receives encouragement from her. Count Carloni is paying attention to Mary and is encouraged by the girl's mother, who welcomes the count as a prospective son-in-law. The father is indifferent, but the girl rebels and declares that she will marry a man of her choice and not a titled fortune-hunter. All arguments are of no avail. The girl promptly falls in love with Billy, which is opposed by the mother. At Mr. McCarthy's works is an Italian foreman—no other than the father of the girl whom the barber deceived. Both father and daughter have made their home in Bendersville. The father is hurt by a premature explosion, and, being assisted by Billy, is brought home. Billy becomes acquainted with Rosa, and later, when Billy meets Rosa at the works, he accompanies her on her way home. Mary sees them together, becomes jealous and refuses to listen to Billy's explanations. But things are put right. When Mr. McCarthy brings his daughter and the count to look over the works the Italian foreman recognizes in Count Carloni no other than Mario the barber. Billy prevents the foreman from killing Mario, who later escapes terrified. The Italian and his daughter explain the deception and the McCarthys are thankful that the bogus count has been exposed. This paves the way nicely for Bill and Mary.

OLD MAM'SELLE'S SECRET (Dec. 4).—(2 reels) When the soldiers attacked the old home of the Von Hirschsprung family, the father buried his family treasure in the garden. In the fight that followed he was killed but his two sons survived. Having no money, and supposing their fortune stolen, the sons sell the old home to the Hellwig family. Cordula, daughter of old Hellwig, falls in love with Joseph, the younger of the Von Hirschsprung boys. He returns her affection, but her father will not permit the marriage, because of Joseph's poverty. One day Cordula, digging in the garden, unearths the Hirschsprung treasure and tells her father, who makes her vow never to tell of the finding of the money chest. Joseph deprived of his sweetheart, dies in poverty. Broken-hearted Cordula removes her things to an upper apartment and vows she will never enjoy any of the ill gotten wealth.

Years later, the only surviving member of the Von Hirschsprung marries a strolling player. Ten years later she is killed by accident during her act in the circus and her husband, to save his child from a similar fate, turns her over to the care of Nathan Hellwig, brother of Cordula. The child Fay, finds no welcome in her new home until she meets Cordula now known as Old Mam'selle. She and Old Mam'selle have adjoining attic rooms and spend much time together. Everyone knows that Old Mam'selle has a secret, but no one knows just what it is. The years pass. John, son of the Hellwigs, returns from the Medical University to fall in love with Fay. He is expected to marry Hortense, a rich widow with one child. Fay saves this child from an awful death by fire and wins John's admiration as well as his love. His mother refuses to accept Fay as a daughter. In the midst of all this confusion Old Mam'selle is taken ill. Before she dies she tells Fay that her diary contains her secret and it must die with her. Fay promises to destroy the little book. After Old Mam'selle's death, Fay finds the book and is about to destroy it when John enters the room and sees her. He demands that she give him the diary. She refuses at first but finally yields. Then she goes to her room to pack her things. Feeling herself very unwelcome at the Hellwigs she thinks she had better go away. John opens the little book and reads the whole story of the Hellwig wealth and how it all belongs to the Hirschsprung family. He rushes out of the room with the book and finds Fay ready to leave. She has her grip in her hands. He takes it from her and begs her to remain. As he takes the grip he notices the name Meta Von Hirschsprung, with a crest printed across it. He stares at Fay and asks her whose grip it is. She replies it belonged to her mother who took it with her when she ran away to be married. Then John knows that Fay is the sole remaining member of the once famous Von Hirschsprung and that the money being enjoyed by the Hellwigs belongs to her. He tells her and she realizes that she is rich, feels free to accept his heart offered to her in the days when he did not know she had a single penny to her name.

AT LIBERTY—GOOD PRESS AGENT (Dec. 8).—He limped along the Rialto, so badly banged up that a friend felt impelled to ask him if he had been playing a bomb on the Mafia Circuit in the "Big Time."

"It is just another case of the man getting the worst of it for making good," he explained. "I consented to go out with The Whirling Dervish Company, and I told the Governor that he would get something new in the presswork line. That big doll of a star wanted her name in the papers, but there is nothing to her, nothing at all."

"They won't fall for the old stuff any more, and I had to be up to date. We struck one town where they had a smallpox scare, and they fell for my dope alright. I told them how one of our chorus dames had smallpox, and how the star passed the night nursing her when all the others were afraid, kissed her fevered brow and all the rest of the sob stuff. They fell for it like wolves, and that big false alarm got her picture on the front page."

"Was she grateful? Not a bit of it. She blamed me when the Health Department sent around and rounded up the company, quarantining them in a vacant house. Look at the ad. Why my story was reprinted all over the United States."

"They'd have got out in a few weeks, and it saved them from losing money on those rotten kill-duff one-night stands, yet they 'beefed' awfully. So I showed them how to escape by scaring off the guards by pretending to be ghosts. I led them safely through the town to a freight train, so that they could make a getaway to the next town. Were they thankful? Nothing like it. The leading comedian and props beat me with clubs and kicked me off the train. And that big dub of a star cheered them as they were doing it."

"So I've left the company. Wouldn't care to work with a company like that, for you never are appreciated. Doubt if they will stay out long, for the company is rotten, the printing punk and the bookings the worst ever. Now I am back again, and say, old man, do you know anyone who wants a press agent, a good press agent?"

AURORA FLOYD (2 reels) (Dec. 10).—Aurora Floyd was the daughter of a rich banker. While a schoolgirl she contracted a romantic attachment for her father's groom, James Conyers, and eloped with him. Her married life was unhappy, as her husband was vulgar, cruel and a drunkard. Her father, when he found how affairs were going, offered Conyers a large sum of money on condition that he leave England never to return. Conyers eagerly accepted the proposition, and Aurora returned to her father's home, not even her friends being aware that Aurora had been married. Six months later a newspaper account told of the death of the worthless groom. Aurora was now free and when John Mellish, the young squire of Feldon Park, paid her attentions, she consented to become his wife, much to her father's satisfaction.

Aurora entered Feldon Hall as the squire's bride just about the time that Mellish engaged a new trainer for his race horses. In this man, Aurora, to her horror, recognised Conyers, her first husband and she realized that the story of his death was only a cruel trick. Conyers boldly blackmailed her, explaining that unless she yielded to his demands for money he would have her prosecuted as a bigamist. The note containing his threat was brought to the Hall by Steve, a half-witted stable boy. He suspected something was wrong, spied upon Aurora, and while she was out of the room returned to the room through the window, picked up the note she had dropped in her agitation, and armed himself with the squire's pistol, meaning to use it to subdue Conyers.

The helpless Aurora met Conyers at a place agreed upon and turned over to him all the money and jewels she could get together. She then returned toward the house to decide her future plans. Steve, who had tracked them, now confronted Conyers and demanded a share of the spoils. Conyers refused, and started to beat Steve. The boy, wild with rage, shot him down, took the satchel of jewels and money, dropped the pistol beside his victim and escaped. The shot had been heard in the house, and Mellish and Mrs. Powell, his housekeeper, started out to investigate. Their path led them toward Aurora, and she, to elude them, retraced her steps. Thus she came upon the body, and when the others arrived she was bending over the body, the pistol in her hand. Mrs. Powell, who always hated her young mistress, denounced Aurora as a murderess, and the case against her was black. Her gallant husband, however, stood loyally by her, even when the secret of her marriage was revealed to him. In court, he was at her side, fighting desperately to save the life of the woman he loved.

Aurora was convicted of murder, and was about to be sentenced, when Steve, the real criminal, was dragged in and confessed. The spirit of the man he had slain haunted him, he declared, and practically drove him into the hands of the law. Aurora, humble and contrite because of her terrible experiences, meekly asked her husband to forgive and forget her, but he clasped her in his arms, telling her she was the one woman he loved, and that in the happiness of their future life they would forget the sorrows that had been.

THE HATER OF WOMEN (Dec. 11).—Bob Burton, a confirmed woman-hater, meets his chum Harry. On their way from New York Harry asks him to come to his home and introduces him to his sister. She teases the woman-hater, pins a rose in his button-hole and gets him to sit down on a sofa beside her. Harry says joshingly, "You are not such a woman-hater after all."

Harry arrives at the club and tells his friends what a joke he has played on Bob. Thinking of a scheme, he makes his friend still more uncomfortable. He writes a newspaper ad saying that Bob wants a wife. Harry inserts the ad in the newspaper and two of his chums go to Bob's house to watch this out to the end.

The first arrival in answer to the ad is an old maid. Harry directs her to the house, while he and his friends arrange a board so that they can look into the window and watch the proceedings. Bob Burton is very much surprised when the old maid shows him the ad in the newspaper. She tries to make him marry her but he protests. The old maid goes out and discovers the boys looking in the window, hits one of them with an umbrella, and they all fall over the bench.

The second arrival is a tough girl who gets into a wrangle with Bob, and he brows her out of the window, and she falls on top of the boys who are seated on the plank. She has her scraps with them and exits.

The third arrival is a very buxom middle-aged lady, who on refusal of Bob to marry her, exits angrily, discovers Harry and chum outside and gives Harry a thrashing.

The fourth arrival is a young eccentric girl, who has sworn that she will never marry a man unless she falls in love with him at sight. Bob Burton has read this eccentric remark in the paper, and has seen the picture, so instead of refusing her he proposes and is accepted much to the chagrin of the boys outside. He exits from the house with the young lady and discovers the boys in the act of sneaking away. Finally he turns the tables on them. He sends Harry and Bob a note inviting them to his wedding.

THE GIRL IN THE ARMCHAIR (Dec. 13).—Frank Watson was spending a mounth in New York when one day he receives a letter from his father requesting him to come home and also that a surprise awaits him on his return. This aroused Frank's curiosity, so immediately he made preparations to leave at once. One arriving home he went at once to the drawing room and there to his surprise he saw a very attractive girl sitting by the fire-place seeming to be perfectly at home with her surroundings. Frank coughs. The girl turns around and then nods to him but leaves the room at once. Just then his mother and father come in and greet him. At once Frank begins to question them about the girl. For an answer Frank's father walks to the desk and brings Frank a letter. There he learns that this girl is the daughter of his father's best friend who has just died and has made his father guardian. The girl's name is Peggy and she has been left a large fortune. Frank does not approve of this and begins to offer his objections. At the same time Peggy is seen coming down the stairs at the back of the room and accidently overhears what Frank is saying. She then comes into the room and they are introduced.

Six months later we find Frank in bad company. He has started gambling and has hard times settling all his debts. At present he owes $500 to a very miserly Jew who has Frank's promissory note to pay in a week's time. Poor Frank is almost a nervous wreck, for he has no means by which he can lift this debt. The day has come and we now see Frank nervously awaiting the Jew's arrival. The Jew is ushered in and at once starts business. He then learns that Frank is unable to pay and then swears that he will go to Frank's father for payment. Frank pleads not to tell his father. The Jew looks around the room in order to find some plan with which to force Frank to pay. Suddenly he notices a small safe in the desk marked EMERGENCY SAFE. He calls Frank's attention to it. After much arguing the Jew has persuaded Frank to get his payment from this safe with the hope of winning it back and then replace the money before the father finds it out. Frank takes the money, gets a receipt from the Jew and orders him out. Frank leaves the room at once. Suddenly we see Peggy getting up out of the large chair by the fire-place. She has accidently overheard all that has passed between them without their knowledge and she realizes Frank's position at once. She decides to help Frank out of his trouble and starts to think of a plan. Later we see her coming into the drawing room all ready for a journey, carrying a suitcase in her hand. She puts a letter on the table for Frank's father and then leaves the house.

The girl makes a splendid sacrifice to save Frank and later, in an impressive scene Frank admits his guilt and asks for forgiveness of the girl he has grown to love.

THE LAW OF GOD (Dec. 9).—In the course of his wanderings Jim Gleason had come to Montecito, where Vera Bradley, the daughter of the minister, attracted his fancy. In her innocence, she confides to her father and he, with the welfare of his daughter at heart, consults the young man as to his religious beliefs, and is horrified to learn that he is an Atheist. The following Sunday a wandering cripple stops at the church and endeavors to sell small religious pamphlets. The minister examines them and finding the Ten Commandments and other religious quotations in the book, procures a copy and urges the congregation to do the same. Vera gets a copy and meeting Jim Gleason, she shows him the book and is so horrified at his blasphemous remarks that she refuses to see or hear from him again.

Disappointed in love, Jim Gleason falls in with the lawless element of the town and becomes a great crony of the leader, Bud Black. One day Bud Black plans on a crime of large dimensions. If he can get Jim to throw the derailing switch outside the town at the railroads yard limit they could wreck the Sunset Limited and secure a large booty. In Bud Black's gang one member, who has always been timid, in thinking over the magnitude of the proposed crime, began to fear for his safety and determined to notify the sheriff. So it was that when Jim arrived at the scene of action his every movement was watched by Bud Black and his gang to make sure of no weakening, and the sheriff and posse was on the way to surprise the outlaws and save the train.

In waiting for the train Jim consulted his plans which were drawn on a page of the pamphlet sold by the cripple and then having fixed it in his mind turned over the page and found "THE LAW OF GOD." And in the Holy Writ he finds "THOU SHALT NOT STEAL." And a vision of Vera's horrified face comes to him as she looked when he uttered his remarks about the pamphlet. "THOU SHALT NOT KILL." He starts away just as the Limited goes shrieking by. Bud Black and his gang watch for the expected wreck and in their anger at the failure of their plan they decide to wreak vengeance upon Jim. They start in pursuit of the fleeing man and thundering at their own heels is the sheriff's posse. Bud Black is soon within shooting distance of the intended victim, his gun barks and Jim falls. But now apprised that the posse is after him he rides with his gang for his own liberty. They are soon captured and the posse start on the return trip. Picking up the wounded man they return to town where Jim is left to the tender mercy of the Rev. Bradley and his daughter. When Jim sees Vera his face lights up and extending his hand he places in hers the bloodstained "LAW OF GOD." And when Jim is able to be out again he visits the church as the accepted suitor of the minister's daughter, for he has "come into the light."

NELL OF THE PAMPAS (Dec. 12).—Down among the pampas growers Nell, the daughter of old Pedro Villiar, has many suitors. In the kindness of her heart she has been generous to an orphan idiot who lives off her father's bounty, and she becomes the idol of his eye and he follows her like a faithful dog. Among all her suitors Juan Cardoza is the favored one. But Juan's personality has unwittingly aroused the affections of another woman, a half-breed who has desired to win him. She watches the lovers with jealous eye and one day, seeing Juan giving Nell a bracelet of silver, she waits until he leaves Nell and when he passes her she throws herself into his arms and implores his love. All this is witnessed by Nell and sick at heart she throws the trinket away and starts home. Juan renounces the woman but the harm is done. Enroute to her home, Nell encounters a stranger and takes him with her and he engages board with her parents. But Jim Beverly soon shows his true colors, abusing the poor idiot thus securing the enmity and lording it over the simple pampas-growers. He over-reaches himself when he insults Nell. Juan sees the attempt and gives him a trouncing. Smarting for revenge he plots with the half-breed woman to kidnap Nell, thus securing her and leaving Juan for the half-breed. Watching his opportunity, Beverly sees Nell leaving her home one evening for her accustomed stroll in the pampas field and getting his horse follows her and is in turn followed by the idiot. Juan starts out in hope of seeing Nell and is followed by the half-breed woman. Jim sees Juan coming and raising his gun attempts to kill him but the half-breed anticipating the treacherous act springs in front of him and receives the bullet in her own breast, giving her life for her love. Jim hurries back to his horse and finds the vindictive idiot waiting for him. In the fight that follows both are mortally wounded, Nell, startled by the sounds of shooting in the night air, hurries in the direction of the sound to find Juan kneeling over the body of the woman. All is explained and the lovers are re-united.

THE HEART OF A SOLDIER (Dec. 14).—In the twilight of his life, John Menton, an old veteran, finds himself alone and destitute. In desperation he turns to the statue of his old commander, General Grant, then to that of President Lincoln, hoping in vain that one or the other might offer an inspiration, but in both cases the marble statues look upon his misery in mute silence. Disconsolate, he wanders down the avenue in quest of aid. At the Revere mansion he pitifully begs for alms from the wealthy owners, who are about to enter their automobile. His plea is to be refused by this man of means, when Bob Lucas, the young suitor of Ruth Revere, moved by the old man's evident want, offers him substantial alms, which incurs for Lucas the animosity of Mrs. Revere.

On the return of the parents, young Lucas makes a strong appeal for the hand of the daughter, but his suit is refused and he dejectedly leaves the house. In due course, a locket of the madam is missing and she recalls having placed it on the library table at the time of her talk with Bob Lucas. All search proves unavailing and she summons Lucas by telephone and on his arrival, brazenly accuses him of having stolen the locket. His earnest and strong assurance of any knowledge concerning the loss is totally disregarded. Sorrowful and dejected, he wanders away to grieve over the multitude of catastrophes that have befallen him.

In the meantime, the missing locket, which accidentally fell into the waste basket, passes along the route to the city dumps. Through force of circumstances the old veteran has hied himself to that quarter as was his custom when in dire distress, to seek in the refuse of the city something that might be of value. Lo, and behold! this trip is not unrewarded. Debating with himself the course to pursue, he finds a seat in the park, where the fates fortunately guided the heart-sick lover. Recognition is mutual, but what service can the old soldier render our friend? The newly found token of wealth is uppermost in the soldier's heart and he tells his former benefactor of his lucky find. Young Lucas looks, then stares at the locket, he scarcely can believe his eyes. Is he awake or are the fates taunting him? He tells the old soldier of the cloud resting over him, and together the two hurry to the Reveres, where joy over the recovery knows no bounds. Old Revere liberally rewards the needy old veteran and young Lucas could almost mortgage his future prospects to pay the good fortune this vindication means to him. The heart of Mrs. Revere is softened, the barriers are broken down and Bob Lucas is to have the hand of Ruth for his keeping for life.

The old veteran slowly repairs to the statue of President Lincoln, his heart too full for utterance. The shock of this unexpected joy is too great and at the base of the statue his frail stature falters and his soul passes on to join the army in the great beyond.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE QUEEN OF THE SEASON (Nov. 30).—Mrs. Blanc is an attractive young matron whose husband has brevailed upon her to take a trip to the seashore while he remains at home to care for their little child. Upon arrival at her destination she is immediately showered with attentions from the gallants of the summer hotel, and in a spirit of fun, she says little about herself, and permits her admirers to dance attendance upon her. There are three in particular who are constantly in her train, and as a result, Mrs. Blanc is the recipient of all manner of favors.

Her shopping expeditions find her with three ardent bearers of parcels, and it is with much difficulty that she finds it possible to pay for any of her purchases. Rivalry becomes so keen between the lovesick swains that physical encounters are narrowly averted. She manages to evade them at times, but her movements are so closely watched that she seldom finds herself without a trio of escorts. When she boards the train for home she is followed as usual, and by means of strategy, the three take passage on the same coach and escort her to her destination. On the platform she is met by her husband and child and an affectionate scene is enacted while the three seashore gallants stand in amazement. Introductions follow and the trio return on the next train to seek new conquests at the seashore.

MAJESTIC.

THE HYPNOTIC CHAIR (Dec. 1).—Professor Henrick has invented a wonderful hypnotic chair which, when the proper current is turned on, possesses the power of mesmerising dozens of people at the same time. His friends give him a banquet, and after he drinks a great many toasts, he decides to finish the night on the Great White Way, instead of returning home. Miss Gaylife accompanies him and in his friendly mood he invites many extraordinary people to visit him. His wife, discovering he has not come home all night, starts out for his office and arrives just as the professor and his assistant, Professor Scardon, are trying to persuade Miss Gaylife to leave the office. She refuses and they get an idea. They place her in the hypnotic chair and when the furious wife enters she is told that Miss Gaylife is a patient. Just then the bell rings and a street-cleaner is shown in. To quiet him, the professor pushes him toward Miss Gaylife—he touches her gown—the current turned on and he stands powerless also. The scientific commission visits the professor and come in contact with the others and are immediately electrified. But the doctor's assistant puts on rubber gloves and proceeds to release them one by one. General confusion ensues and as Mrs. Henrick still shows fight she is pushed back into the chair while the professor, his assistant, with Miss Gaylife, start back to the White Way, leaving a sign on the door informing all callers that they will be gone for six months.

IN OLD TOWN (Dec. 3).—Peggy Milton returns to the old town from a fashionable boarding school. She is met at the depot by her affectionate parents and her old sweetheart, Tom Harland. But Peggy has been spoiled by the fashionable school. She is cold to Tom, and snubs her parents. When she gets to the house she begins to cry because it is not like the swell residences of her classmates. She finds fault with her room and decorates it with college flags, photographs of athletic teams, etc.

Tom Harland comes to call and sees her reading a pile of novels. He is disgusted and goes to talk with her father. In Peggy's room, Tom gets an idea and whispers it to the old man. Tom leaves, carrying with him the scrap book of photographs. That night, he and the fellows get together and dress themselves up to look like the college boys in the scrap book. Tom leads the practice and is so successful in the rehearsal that the town constable comes to find out the cause of the noise. When they tell him, he enjoys the joke too. As there is a ball at the Lodge Hall that night, the fellows start out to call for their sweethearts. Tom goes for Peggy. She is disgusted at his costume and refuses to go. But her parents make her go.

At the dance hall, the fellows all come in, and get in the middle of the floor and give college cheers, etc., to the disgust of the girls. Tom shows Peggy home, and afterwards the boys give her a serenade in true college style.

The next day Tom borrows an automobile and a chauffeur from a friend, and comes to take Peggy for a ride. He has it filled with champagne bottles, and pretends to be half drunk. He carries this on until at last, she is disgusted and begs him to be himself, whereupon he tells her the truth, and they end up with an engagement party.

A TELEPHONE ENTANGLEMENT (Dec. 8).—Lyon Hart, with nothing to wear but clothes, nothing to eat but food, nowhere to go but out, nowhere to come but back, finds life a deuced bore. He reads a newspaper article which tells of a young woman "too pretty for anything" who wishes to meet a perfect dear of a man whom she would like to marry very much. Lyon Hart telephones to the "advertisee," tells her that she has a voice musical as a boiler factory and that he wagers that her affections are warm enough to fry onions. He tells her to meet him at four o'clock next week and confides that he has nothing to breathe but air, nothing to comb but hair, nothing to weep but tears. The pretty girls in the telephone exchange overhear the conversation and learn of the appointment. They decide to play a joke upon the romantic couple by themselves appearing at the place and make it impossible for the Dear Hart to discriminate between them and the lady of the advertisement. Lyon Hart, armed to the lips with a mustache and with his hand full of cane arrives at the trysting place and finds instead of one lady that there are several all of whom wear the flower of distinguishment. She of the advertisement is present and is a person whom persons might be so credulous to believe that when a baby she was young—but had outgrown it. Lyon Hart is accosted by this faded delectable and is told that it is she of the yearnings. Lyon Hart is not lion hearted enough to be seen with this antique and he walks quickly on to the musical titter of the telephone girls. He has been attracted by the well-groomed appearance and pretty face of one of the "Hello Centrals" and hopes that the girls will separate and give him opportunity to accost her. This is done and he walks up blithely, makes a little bow and utters the conventional platitude about having met her before somewhere to which she archly replies. "Yes, she often goes there." They stroll back past the place of the sweet tryst where still sits the disappointed old maid. Her reproachful eyes follow the young couple as off they trip to a motion picture show.

'TWIXT DEVIL AND THE DEEP SEA (Dec. 5).—Mr. A. Catastrophe Catsup, in a moment of wild extravagance buys an overcoat to shelter his fair form. So long does he stand admiring himself before the mirror that all the employees have gone home, when the proprietor seeing him there, not knowing that he had paid good cash money for the garment, believes him a thief and chases him out into the cold world. The police take up the scent with the idea of putting Catastrophe where his sartorial repertoire will consist only of stripes.

Mr. Catsup in his efforts to escape arrest, enters the apartment of a maiden lady old enough to be married several times but who by some freak of nature has not. Catastrophe tells her that if she will save him from the police, he will become a brother to her. She saves him, quite a good deal, buts demands an awful price for her services—that he marry her and become her favorite husband. He breaks from the detaining arms thrown around his neck and dashes for liberty with the villainess still pursuing. In the course of his flight he again runs into the policemen who had been seeking him. He wavers between awful alternatives—arrest and matrimony. "If I marry her I get a life sentence on a diet of cold kisses and conversation. The police can do no more than give me ten years," he cogitates. Taking refuge in the lesser of the two evils, he enters the arms of the law, telling the officers that the maiden person has pursued his name for six miles.

THE MISSION OF THE CAROLS (Dec. 10).—The privations of poverty have soured the milk of human kindness in the breast of the mother of little Gene and Marie. As she sends them out for their evening occupation of singing in the cafes the racy songs of the boulevard, thereby earning their meagre fare, her manner is unkind and unmotherly. The song-bird fledglings are liked by the Countess de Grace who hears them sing in the cafe and she invites them to come to her house on the eve of the Christ Day. The children go there and hear the Countess's children sing the olden yuletide carols. The simple beauty of the music touches the heart of the sophisticated urchins in whose street life had never been heard such melodies so nobly exquisite. They feel their songs to be profane compared to the loveliness of the carols and tell the Countess that they cannot here sing their rude ditties. The spirit of the urchins is admired and the Countess and her friends teach Gene and Marie the carols, which, they being good musicians, are quickly learned. Generously the Countess rewards them and laden with presents, back to their hovel trudge the tiny troubadours. Their mother is dosing upon her pallet and the children arrange the offerings of money and creature comforts around the room, singing the carols they had just learned. Upon the waking ears of the parent come the sweet natal songs of her long gone childhood melting the ice around the mother's heart, formed through the winter of her life of drudgery. The sunshine of the melodies disperses the frowns, mellows the scolding voice, bringing sweetness again to the mother's soul and happiness redeyly to the little forlorn ones. The picture closes with the mother kissing her children affectionately as she goes forth on her hard day's labor. Completed is the mission of the carols.

TRAVELS ON THE URAL MOUNTAINS (Dec. 10).—Scenic high life, three thousand and more feet above the sea. Over mighty glaciers, passing drifts of snow of fabulous depth. The snow-bound forest in garments of ice.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONSPIRACY.—A full story of this three-reel special subject by the Gaumont Company was published on page 860 of the issue dated November 30th.

PERILS OF THE ATLANTIC.—James Trevor, on the eve of departure for America to visit an agency, delays his passage on a transatlantic steamship, because of a warning letter received from a friend advising him to postpone his departure because of the jeopardy to ocean traffic at this season due to icebergs. Mrs. Trevor, at a friend's house, meets a palmist then being received by fashionable society. The palmist, for some inscrutable reason, refuses to employ her arts on the palm of Mrs. Trevor. She does, however, agree to an engagement. The prophecy Mrs. Trevor receives is a fearful one, and with sinking heart the wife and mother hear that she is to lose one to her near and dear. Will it be my husband or my son, is the query which reverberates through her brain.

(163) DETROIT ENGINE WORKS, Dept. 102, DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A.

Mr. Trevor, seeing an advertisement of the Colossus, the largest steamship in the world which is just about to make her maiden trip, engages passage on her. The lonely wife, her mind disturbed by the palmist's prophecy, writes to her uncle asking him to spend a few days with her to relieve her from her low spiritedness. The Colossus meets the fate of the Titanic, striking an iceberg in the night and sinking into the depths with the majority of her two thousand souls.

While Mrs. Trevor and her uncle are at dinner, there is brought a newspaper containing the first announcement of the fate of the Colossus. Strong is the grief of the mother but stronger the grief of the child whose health suffers under the poignancy of the melancholia.

Meanwhile, the survivors of the Colossus, among whom is James Trevor, have reached port and to his wife and child the husband flashes the joyous "all is well" telegram. With one terror relieved, there is yet another potential grief seemingly in store for the mother. The palmist's prophecy still haunts her and she fears that inasmuch as her husband has been snatched from the scythe of death, the little son will be garnered in by the grim reaper. The obsession more and more possesses the feminine mind until wrinkles of anxiety come on her face and the light of an unknown terror into her eyes. Mr. Jullien, the uncle, a man of sound judgment and common sense, has little faith in the readings of the palmist and believes that ruse will relieve the worries of the mother by proving to her that the palmist is a mere charlatan. The uncle accordingly writes to the palmist, asking her to come to the hotel for the purpose of reading the hand of his niece, a young woman about to be married. The palmist is somewhat surprised to see the room inhabited by a man and she looks about for the mentioned young woman. None is in sight but through the curtains before a door leading to an adjoining room extends a white, graceful feminine hand. The palmist refuses to perform her reading under such conditions, but the uncle prevails upon her by the argument that inasmuch as she reads the palm, the sight of the other parts of the individual are unnecessary. The moving argument, however, is the presentation of a large fee. The palmist falling into the trap, makes a pretended reading of the mysterious hand, and, utterly contradicting all her dark predictions of a few weeks previous, prognosticates the brightest prospects of great happiness and prosperity of the subject. Better by her own reading the mother, pushes aside the curtain and confronts the dismayed palmist. The uncle then gets into possession of a letter addressed to the palmist which more fully explains her nefarious business, the letter congratulating the palmist upon her use of the "apparent possession of supernatural foresight, which always attracts the many fools who in this trash believe." Her perfidy unmasked, the palmist is sent away disconfited while the relieved mother hastens back to her wounded dove. The father arrives and his presence acts as a tonic most efficacious and the child quickly rallies to bring joy to the household.

A FAMILY MIXUP (Dec. 9).—Brown and Smith are friends, but their wives have never met. Brown flirts with Mrs. Smith, and in revenge, Mrs. Brown flirts with Mr. Smith. Many amusing scenes are shown, coming to a climax when both couples go to a summer garden. The two men meet and tell each other what fine girls each are out with. Finally the four are brought together and the wives soothe the angry husbands an convince them that it does not pay to flirt.

A MIDNIGHT ELOPEMENT (Dec. 9).—Jim Smith and Sallie Rice are very much in love with each other, but her father vehemently shows his disapproval of Jim. An elopement is planned, and at midnight Jim has the country magistrate waiting for him at the cross roads. He goes to tap on Sallie's window, but makes a mistake and awakens old man Rice, who, clad in his pajamas, pursues him with a shot-gun, and as Jim joins the magistrate, takes a pot shot at them, which finds lodgment in the judge's back. When Rice finds out what he has done, he is in fear of the law, but Jim pays the judge to settle the matter on condition that Rice gives his consent to his daughter's marriage.

A DOUBLE REWARD (Dec. 11).—Jack Williams and Nellie Wayne are in love, but her father favors the suit of a rich Easterner, Wm. Ford, who is vacationing in the West. Jack resents the latter's attentions, and during the argument, knocks him down. Ford attempts to draw a gun, but the two are separated. A horse thief gets away with Ford's horse, and as Jack has left a few minutes before, Ford thinks he has taken the animal. As Jack is rolling a cigarette by the roadside the thief asks him for a match, and when Jack goes to comply with his request, he leaps on Jack's horse and gallops away. Jack mounts the stolen horse and starts in pursuit, but is left behind. The posse catches up with him and he is accused of being a thief. When he is brought to the sheriff's office, Nellie pushes him through a door and covers his escape with a gun. A reward is offered for his capture and Nell determines to win the money. She goes in search of the real thief and by a clever lariat throw, holds him prisoner while she ties him to a tree. She then captures Jim and secures the reward, after which she tells the sheriff where to find the thief, who is taken prisoner. Jack is released and elopes with Nellie. Her father and Ford arrive too late to prevent the marriage, and the old man gives them his blessing, while Ford goes away in a rage at having been outwitted by a cowboy.

FOR THE CAUSE (2 reels) (Dec. 6).—At the breaking out of the Civil War Lieut. Harmon and Lieut. Black are ready to go to the front. Harmon's attentions to Black's fiancee, Helen, lead to words between the two and Harmon challenges Black to a duel. The men meet with pistols and Harmon gets the first shot and misses. Black refuses to fire at his antagonist, and turning away is again shot at by Harmon. He whirls around and shoots at Harmon as he has turned and is running away, wounding him through the shoulder. When the people, aroused by the shots, reach the scene, Harmon insists that he was shot in the back in a cowardly manner by Black, and his statement causes an estrangement between Helen and Black. Wonderful scenes of battle are then shown, in which Black wins fame for heroism, and is entrusted with important misions. Harmon never recovers from the wound and is practically a helpless invalid. A plan is formed by the Confederates to lead the Union army into an ambush by having a spy captured with false papers, and Black risks his life in the mission. Acting upon the information contained in the fake despatches, the Union army thinks it will surprise the Confederates and falls into the trap set for it. Black is sentenced to be shot as a spy, and makes a sensational escape, taking refuge in Harmon's home. For the sake of the Confederate cause, Harmon puts on Black's hat and coat, while the latter hides on the roof, and is captured, leaving a note for Helen, however, telling the true story of the duel, which Black finds when he comes from his hiding place. Harmon is placed in the crowded prison, and when the firing squad comes to execute him in the morning, they find he has passed away. Black rejoins his men and takes part in the big battle, and after the war, regains Helen's love by giving her Harmon's confession.

PRECISION Machine Co.

ALL THAT THE NAME IMPLIES
IN ITS PRODUCT THE Simplex

motion picture projecting machine there is accuracy, fine workmanship and material which is truly amazing to those who know. The design represents the most advanced thought in motion picture machine construction. No detail in the mechanism, lamp, lamphouse or stand has been too trivial for careful attention.

The materials used are the best for the purpose regardless of expense. They are worked into the finished parts with infinite care by the most expert mechanics and machines obtainable.

Some of the operations require precision which was impossible to get with the machinery available on the American and European markets, so we designed and built in our own factory at an expense of thousands of dollars, machinery and tools which would give us the accuracy our high standard demanded.

Such methods guarantee you screen results and machine satisfaction such as you have never known before.

You owe it to yourself, Mr. Exhibitor and Mr. Operator, to get posted. Don't let a day go by before writing us for Catalogue A giving full description and also the name and address of the nearest dealer who has the Simplex projector in stock ready for your inspection and ultimate use.

After seeing it you will not wonder at the success which has attended the Simplex from the start.

To The Trade

TO my numerous friends in the trade I beg to announce that I have opened offices at the address below to market personally selected European films in this country, to be released under the name of

COSMOPOLITAN FILMS

My long experience in the trade, especially the close study I have given to the exhibition field during an entire year of extensive travels throughout this country, qualifies me to make judicious selections among the output of European manufacturers with particular regard to the present-day requirements of the progressive American exhibitor. Each film released under the above name will have been inspected and approved by me personally. No subject will be marketed apt to offend the susceptibilities of an American audience. Explanations, titles, etc., will be in proper English as spoken in this country. A projection room on the premises will prove a handy adjunct for prospective buyers. I SELL IN THE OPEN MARKET. Courtesy, promptness and dispatch are assured you. Watch for further announcements.

Happy? Well We Guess So

We are chuck full of it; it radiates from every corner of our busy building. We have lots to be thankful for. Every user of a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN is thanking us for giving him the opportunity to make his place a bigger and better success. We think night and day of ways to make it more so. Every user of a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN is prosperous and a big leader because he is giving the people what they come to his house to see, namely, pictures just like "moving paintings."

Mr. J. B. Price, "the big man" of Hannibal, Mo., who counts his friends by the thousands, whose ideas and execution of same are always to bring the business to the highest plane—well, in short, if you knew him you would say, "What's good enough for Price is good enough for us," called this morning, and left us an order for two screens. He said:

"You can't beat the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. It has no equal."

Let us have your order today exhibitors. Our factory is yours—we'll certainly make you a satisfied booster for RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS.

Look for our trade-mark—all screens shipped DIRECT from our factory at St. Louis, Mo.

As the Operator Looks at it

As the Operator Looks at It

Just notice how easy this operator takes it. He doesn't have to work over a dangerous juice consuming rheostat at furnace heat anymore since the was installed.

He can control the machine perfectly now with one hand--gets a clearer, whiter, steadier light and can adjust it to any of the three intensities without even the faintest flicker.

When we sold this machine we guaranteed it would absolutely

Cut 2-3 from the Monthly Lighting Bill

That sounded almost too good to be true, but they put one in on our 30 day free trial plan.

Did the machine "make good?" Well, the first month it reduced the bill from $22.70 to $9.24 and they operated more hours and got better light than ever before.

We can do just as well for you regardless of what voltage you are using and if you will send for our little free booklet, we'll explain how we do it.

Remember you are paying the Lighting Company 66 2-3 per cent more than you need to every day you wait.

The Best Films Made Will Turn Out Failures

unless your lens equipment is what it should be. The "movies" are the most popular type of entertainment offered the public to-day—but competition is keen and your pictures have to be of the best to insure your share of the business. You can be sure of the best pictures if your machine is equipped with

They insure the maximum of brilliancy and sharpness in the pictures on the screen. High-class operators—everywhere—prefer and use Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers—because they give the best results and soon pay for themselves in the growth of business.

The Edison and Nicholas Power machines are regularly equipped with our lenses. They can be procured also through any film exchange.

It will pay you, whether owner or operator, to read our free Booklet 62-D, which contains information of value. Write for it TODAY.

ROBERT'S BASE PLOT UNFOLDED

THE CASTAWAY

Robert, learning that he is but an adopted son and that little Stella is the sole heiress, casts her adrift at sea. Stella is picked up and reared to girlhood by kindly fishermen. Fifteen years later an advertisement leads her to her own mother's home as a companion, and Robert, now the prospective heir, attempts to act the libertine. But she falls in love with the foreman, and when, by an unmistakable birthmark, her mother recognizes Stella as her long lost daughter, Robert's base plot is unfolded, and the two young lovers are made happy.

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

Start each week with a sparkling SUNDAY comedy, enacted by the best film comedians known. So know all ye Exhibitors that our Sunday release is ALWAYS A COMEDY RELEASE, and insist on your exchange supplying it.

Sunday, Dec. 15 "Brains vs: Brawn"

is a brainy conception, executed in a brainy way by Riley Chamberlain, the fellow who put the fun in "Funnyfilm." He makes a poor gladiator but a great laugh-getter.

Tuesday, Dec. 17 "The Other Half" is a very practical story that will appeal to the best people everywhere. The motif is there. It is a drama that is dramatic, and still not purposeless, and INSTRUCTS while it interests the photofan.

Friday, Dec. 20 "The Race" is a gripping tale weaved about a wonderful invention. The plans having to do with the invention are stolen, but it isn't the usual story of stolen plans. Something happens that takes the tale out of the ordinary class.

Why On Earth Should Any Exhibitor Split His Receipts With A State-Rights Filmer

that the Universal is releasing at the rate of two and three every week, without paying a red cent over and above your regular film service expense, why in the name of heaven, should you book so-called "state rights features" and cough up 50 per cent. of your receipts? As a straight up and down, in and out, backward and forward business proposition where is there any business sense in it?

We will make seven big features every week so that you can have one every day if you really think you need them. Every one of the seven will be a better money-maker for you than the so-called "state rights" stuff, but not a blessed one will cost you anything extra. We don't think you need seven a week, but maybe you disagree with us. What we are striving to do is to cram prosperity down your very throat and if you'll trust in us, we'll do it! The more money we can make for you the tighter you'll stick to us!

It's high time you were taking a look at Universal films and Universal features to see how marvelously we have improved them. The exhibitor who makes a success of his theater is the one who keeps track of what is going on—not every year but EVERY DAY!

"I TOLD

—The greatest victory won by the Independent film interests since moving pictures were invented was cinched on Monday of this week, when the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia handed down a decision declaring that Mr. Edison is not the inventor of the moving picture film!

—I wonder if you fully appreciate just what a wonderful and sweeping thing this is; just how much it clears a situation which has been worrying thousands of moving picture men for years!

—This decision completely verifies everything that I have been telling you in my advertisements for months and years. Week after week, month after month, year after year I have kept insisting that the Independents would protect you if you used Independent films.

Carl

New York, December 5, 1912.

YOU SO"

—I kept telling you that we would win out on whatever law-suits were filed against the Independents.

—Some of you thought I was merely whistling to keep up my courage, but you now have straight proof from a high court that I was in the right.

—Some of you will say this is "more Laemmle luck." Very well. Call it what you please, but don't forget one thing:—In every fight I have entered I have won. And I have won because I was in the right and because I knew it and because I was not afraid to fight for the right.

—You now haven't a single reason for not using Universal films. They are not only the best in every respect, but you can see by this ruling of the high court that the use of such films cannot involve you in any difficulties, legal or otherwise.

—The moral is:—Believe what I tell you every time I tell you anything. I've never given you a wrong tip yet—and I'm never going to.

Calder Johnstone in the Morning Telegraph Says:

THE PARALYTIC

Solax, Nov. 27th

One of the strongest dramatic situations presented in pictures is here disclosed, when a paralytic is made the victim of the villain's plotting, and the rival lover is thrown down a well, in sight of the helpless man, who is the father of the girl whom both the villain and the rival love. In other words, the paralytic is the father of the girl; the lover is seized by men in the hire of the villain and is cast into the well, while the father looks on, helpless to act or tell of the dastardly act. It works out in the end in a surprisingly dramatic manner, and the whole story is one of melodramatic qualities that is certain to be enjoyed.

The Jenkins-Perkins War

Solax, Nov. 29th

Sallie Jenkins is in love with Billie Perkins, and all runs smoothly until their respective fathers quarrel over political matters. Then they are separated. They attempt an elopement, but fail. Then they contemplate suicide, and leave notes for their fathers, informing them of their intent. Both go to the same place, and both quail when it comes to final action. Their fathers arrive at the river, find them, the feud is declared off, and the ending is a happy one. Though the idea is an old one, it is so pleasingly done that it is sure to find many who will thoroughly enjoy it.

"BLOOD WILL TELL"

TWO REELS Released Friday, December 13th TWO REELS

A story of the civil war, in which a southern boy shrinks from the whistling bullets, but in a crisis the blood of his fighting father is aroused in his veins and he goes through a series of thrilling incidents during marvelous scenes of warfare and is shot by mistake by his own father while in disguise as a spy. As a dramatic offering this film is superb; as a sensational feature it is unsurpassed.

"The Law of the West"

THREE REELS Released Friday, December 27th THREE REELS

A colossal presentation of early pioneer days, when the only law in the West was administered by the hardy emigrants. The same company is used in this film as in "Custer's Last Fight" and "The Invaders." The scenes are picturesque, with its long wagon trains drawn by oxen, the cast is overwhelming, and the situations are tense and thrilling.

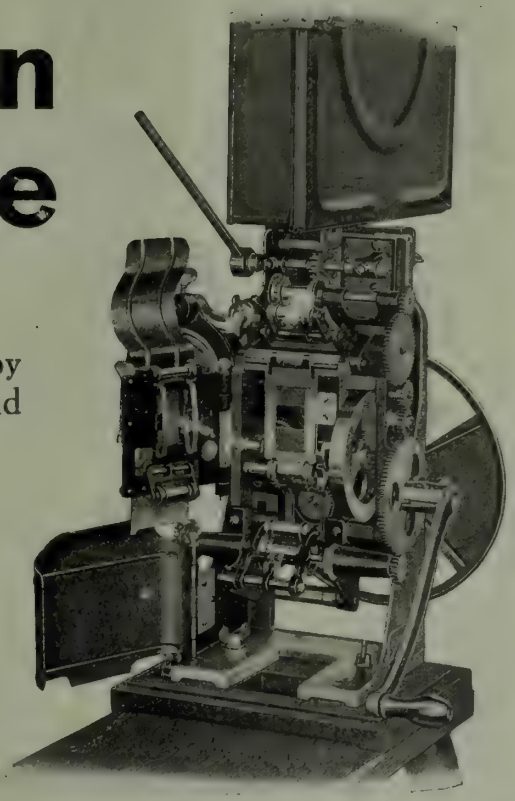
Underwriters' Type "B"



When the crowds begin to drift by your place at night and get jumping around the entrance of the movies on the next block, don't stick an extra arc light out in front and think you've fixed things. Look at the heart of your business — at your moving picture machine.

Pictures look wobbly and spotty and full of specks? Keep the audience waiting for repairs once in a while? No wonder the crowds are going somewhere else.

Ever seen an Edison Kinetoscope? Ever notice how simple and strong it was—how there wasn't any possibility of fire risk in running it? Ever notice the pictures it threw — bright and clear and steady as real life? Ever thought of its economy? Of course you have. Then sit right down and ask us to send you a copy of the Edison Kinetogram and Catalog 500. You'll be glad.

"THE WONDERFUL ONE-HORSE SHAY"

Suggested by Oliver Wendell Holmes' Celebrated Poem. TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10th

Parson Burroughs was the owner of the one-horse shay that was the joy of the village. Abe Hobbs had a buggy, topless and rickety. The two worthies were sparking the Widow Hubbard. The widow favored Hobbs, but one evening the parson insisted on taking her home from a quilting party. The horse shied and the widow spilled in the road. Hobbs drove up on the unfortunate scene and insisted that the parson marry him and the widow on the spot.

An Entertaining Comedy Throughout.

"KITTY AND THE BANDITS"

A Joke that Came Near a Tragedy. THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12th.

Kitty Budd, daughter of the Colonel at the post, is in love with Captain Mitchell, but Senor Yaro is a dangerous rival. A friend of the Budd family is to arrive on a visit, and Kitty, in jest, arranges that her lover and a party of friends shall disguise themselves as outlaws and hold up the coach. Yaro informs the Colonel, who sends a troop to capture or kill the bandits, but Kitty, on horseback, arrives just in time to avert the slaughter.

"BUSTER AND THE CANNIBALS"

By Famous Lubin Kiddies—729 Feet. FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13th.

Buster again gets jealous of Henrietta and Brooks and dreams that he is wrecked on a cannibal island. There he falls in love with Fijiwiji, a savage beauty. Kaliko, the King, orders his cook to prepare Buster for the boiling pot. Our hero, however, escapes and, seizing Fijiwiji by the hand, "beats it." The cannibals give chase and are just on the point of catching them when Buster wakes up.

"HIS FIRST SKATE"

A Roaring Farce—311 Feet. FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13th.

Jack Cole goes skating for the first time. As soon as he dons the skates he plays havoc with everything and everybody. He finally lands in the river.

"WHEN LOVE LEADS"

A Charming Love Story SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14th.

The old, old story of a father who wishes to compel his son to marry his partner's daughter, for position. David Morden falls in love with a poor but beautiful girl, and in consequence is ostracized by his father. He fights his way in the world and marries the girl he loves, and a baby boy blesses the union. Eventually the pretty wife is killed by an automobile, the child is adopted by David's mother, and in the end the family becomes reconciled.

"BAR-K FOREMAN"

A Story of Arms and Sweethearts—MONDAY, DECEMBER 16th.

Little Albert Hoover, son of the owner of "Bar-K" Ranch, is fond of firearms and appropriates the gun of Gale Harding for practice. Shooting at a tree, he kills Bill Thompson, one of the cowboys. Harding, the foreman, finds the body and, as he has had a fight with Thompson, the cowboys think that he is guilty. He is arrested, but Nellie, the ranch owner's daughter, plans an escape. Harding, however, returns to bid Nellie good-bye and finds the house in flames. He rescues the boy, who in return confesses his part in the accident, and Harding is released.

"MADELEINE'S CHRISTMAS"

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17th.

A Touching Heart Interest Story With a Happy Ending. The Kind the Exhibitor is Always Anxious to Book.

Hermann Schultz, a middle-aged violinist, marries Marguerite, a beautiful actress, who, by the death of her parents, is left in poor circumstances. Marguerite's frivolous companions are perpetually reminding her that she has sacrificed a brilliant career by marrying a man of humble position. A child is born, and the thoughtless ones talk of the cares of maternity and keeping house. The wife receives a flattering offer from a theatrical manager and leaves, husband, child and home for the glamor of the stage. For a few years she is satisfied; then comes sickness, loss of engagement and poverty. Four years pass, and Hermann still grieves for his recreant wife. His only joy is his beautiful baby, Madeline. He works at the theater evenings. He puts the child to bed and, locking up the cottage, places the key in a flower pot on the outside window sill. It is Christmas eve., and a blizzard is raging. Before the father goes, Madeleine asks him to play a favorite air on the violin. She is inquisitive about Santa Claus. Hermann assures her that she will not be forgotten, and leaves for the theater. Ere long Madeleine hears a knock at the door and, thinking it is Santa Claus, she calls, saying that the key is in the flower pot. A poor woman enters. It is the child's mother. Madeleine is afraid that her father will be angry with her for admitting a stranger, and endeavors to drive the woman out. The mother pleads, and finally the child permits her to go up into the attic and sleep for the night. Hermann returns and Madeleine again begs him to play the violin. Marguerite hears the favorite air and sings the refrain. The violinist hears the familiar voice and the wife is quickly clasped in his arms.

LIFE PORTRAYALS

"THE SIGNAL OF DISTRESS"
(Comedy-Drama) Monday, December 9th

Jealous because her beau kissed his sister. She falls over a cliff. If her beau and her dog "Jean" hadn't rescued her, she never would have known his sister and made up with him. Miss Turner is a pretty sweetheart.

"DOCTOR BRIDGET" (Comedy) Tuesday, December 10th

Bunny gets at the cause of all their troubles. He makes a great Doctor Bridget and has his patient eating three square meals a day. Throw physic to the dogs and see Doctor Bridget.

"NATOOSA" (Indian Romance) Wednesday, December 11th

Indian love is staunch and true. "Natoosa" sacrifices her life for the man she loves. It is a tale as beautiful as Minnehaha, with a touch of the frontier West. Mary Charleson plays Natoosa with admirable charm.

"ADAM AND EVE" (Allegorical Drama) Thursday, December 12th

This is a new version. Yielding to the voice of the tempter, a happy couple are driven to despair. Haunted by their sin they become wanderers, seeking peace and finding none. Harry Morey, as Adam, and Leah Baird as Eve, make this picture a rare feature.

"THE SONG OF THE SHELL"
(Comedy-Drama) Friday, December 13th

In deeds of charity, a society belle becomes a ministering angel among the poor. Her sweet and sunny disposition wins the love of a young doctor. She becomes his helpmeet and her life is rounded out in good works.

"ALL FOR A GIRL"
"THE DANDY, OR MR. DAWSON TURNS THE TABLES"
Two Comedies. Saturday, December 14th

He took big chances to marry his girl. She accuses him of making love to a fat cook. He shows her it was all for her and that settles it. Dawson is a dandy and he proves it with the aid of a pretty waitress, impersonated by Edith Storey.

Facts and Comments

THE returns from the cigarette-coupon scheme are coming in slowly, and there is everything to encourage the honest and sincere friends of the motion picture and next to nothing to afford any solace to the promoters of this assault on the reputation of the electric theater. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has received commendations not only from exhibitors but from men and women in all walks of life. It is impossible for us to understand how any man who has the welfare of the picture at heart and who wants to see it progress and gain public favor can help resenting the spirit of ignorance and contempt which has prompted the offer of the tobacco company. Access to the largest moving picture circulation was denied to the tobacco company when this paper refused to accept the advertisements of the concern. It was made plain to the cigarette people that the editorial opinion of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is something more than the echo of the jingle in the counting room. The men behind the plan to use the exhibitor as a distributing agent for cigarettes seem, however, still anxious to force their way even into respectable theaters. They have resorted to "circularizing" as many exhibitors as they can reach. The logic of their circulars is no improvement on that of their advertisements. They say to the to the exhibitor: "The American Tobacco Company, by featuring moving picture theaters on their * * * coupons, are inviting hundreds of thousands of people to attend good moving picture shows." Whom is the American Tobacco Company inviting to attend "good moving picture shows"? None but smokers of their particular brand of cigarettes. Who will be most anxious to get to the moving picture theaters via the cigarette coupon route? Why, the very people whom we would rather not have there—half-grown boys, who are often not old enough even to buy cigarettes except by getting dealers to sell them cigarettes in violation of the law. The protest of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League No. 2, of California, which was forwarded to us a few days ago, is so significant and typical of other similar protests on the part of organized exhibitors that we wish to give it space in these columns: "The Motion Picture Exhibitors League No. 2, of California, declared themselves at the last meeting, and absolutely declined to recognize any scheme of this kind. Our object is to bring this class of amusement up to the highest standard: clean, entertaining and educational. This is the purpose of the majority in this business throughout the country. * * * No wise man would undertake this class of advertising and jeopardize his business. We trust that through your splendid magazine this matter will be taken up and effectually put an end to."

An amusing phase of the situation is the effort of the newspaper organ of the cigarette people to make itself believe in the ultimate success of the scheme. After assuring itself that the "cigarette companies have made a hit with moving picture shows," the paper goes on to say that the company will spend even more than half a million. "Judging from the present outlook," says the organ, "the half million will not be much more than a starter." We are also told that "already the youngsters in New York City have become ardent collectors of * * * coupons." One could not ask for a franker confession of the real purpose of this iniquitous scheme. The enemies of this scheme have been called meddlers. We fail to see the application. The man who rejects an unprofitable offer or he who advises him to reject it cannot by any stretch of the imagination be called a meddler. He is only protecting his own. There is but one answer to the cigarette sellers, and that is a large and legible sign above the door of the box-office bearing these words: "No cigarette coupons accepted here."

* * *

THE most successful of the foreign producers and importers of films are those whose American representatives know the taste of our people. We know that it has been hard to convince the home office of the different conditions here. but we also know that whenever the home office has listened to the representations of its American agent there has been greater profit and better quality. If the American market is worth catering to, due regard must be shown to the opinions and sentiments of the American public. The great concerns in Europe that manufacture for the American market realize the necessity of what one of their agents has well described as "international scenarios." In other words, the story which is to be told in the films must be acceptable on both sides of the water. This is a distinct triumph for the cause of the cleaner picture and the picture with a higher purpose. It would be well for our press and pulpit to take note of this fact and place it to the credit of American manufacturers.

* * *

EXHIBITORS in this country have much to learn from their foreign brethren in the matter of advertising. In Paris, London, Berlin, Vienna, Barcelona, Sidney, Melbourne, and other big cities the daily press carries columns and columns of cinematographic advertising. Every day has its own program and its corresponding changes in the advertisement. The programs are set forth in great detail, and often a short synopsis of the films is added. In the case of the feature films as many as four and five inches are used in the press to give the patron of the electric theater an idea of what he is going to see. Here in New York there is scarcely a line of cinematographic advertising in the daily press, and the same deplorable condition prevails in most of the populous centres of the country. Years ago such a condition could have been excused and explained by the fact that the exhibitor did not know two days ahead what he was going to get from his exchange. Such conditions no longer prevail to-day, and it is a common thing to see programs which have the daily offerings for a week ahead. If the money that is spent in making and displaying lurid posters were put into judicious newspaper advertising it would help the whole industry. For one thing it would ensure better treatment at the hands of the newspapers, which are too prone to frown upon and denounce the motion picture indiscrimately just to please the theatrical interests.

New Fields

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE musical photodrama has not yet arrived, but it seems to be on its way. One serious impediment is our national lack of composers who are not mere song-writers and tune-makers. A few great five-reel productions have been shown, splendid pioneers of the big feature play of the future, but they will surely suffer in presentation from lack of appropriate musical accompaniment. They need it, and necessity nearly always inspires creative work that shall fill obvious requirements.

If Victor Herbert or Strauss could be induced to provide scores to screen dramas or comedies, consigning ragtime forever to the cowboy chases; if such composers could be brought to a realization of dignity and power in the new medium, and put forth photoperas of strong popular appeal, these would sweep the country and bring out such crowds as have never been seen in low-priced places of amusement. It is easy to sneer at such an idea—moving pictures are still regarded derisively by those unaware of their hold on the people—but if photoplaywrights, directors and composers ever join forces to create musical dramas for screen presentation, all with high aspirations and technical skill to respond, the whole country will wake up to the wondrous possibilities of this form of entertainment.

Nothing very good seems to come in a hurry, but producers are breaking away from the conventions. Edison has only recently entered a field that has a beneficent bearing on human need, one much neglected by endowed institutions; other live producers show a tendency to follow this lead; it only seems a question of time when those who are permitted to survive will have to dispense with the fooleries of primitive minds for the sake of what is important or interesting.

In dealing with philanthropic movements, the Edison people were wise enough to co-operate with those who knew what they were doing and talking about; but their releases cannot be regarded as more than ventures in one right direction. They show an intelligent selective taste and the kind of judgment that forecasts success, but they are only trial trips in a vast territory of human endeavor almost wholly unexplored by moving picture producers.

In laying out an educational system I confined my articles to the branches of history, geography and natural science, leaving out language, arithmetic and the manual arts, because, while the latter three may be demonstrated in pictures, the first three offer the more natural and attractive theater of action, ranging the wide world in opportunity, embracing so many subjects in their comprehensive limits that they will do best in the beginning of this form of release. But, while the suggestions offered may serve as a stimulus to those who have but vaguely conceived the idea—we are all discoverers—ultimate development in this line should be indicated by those equipped by experience or high in authority. Calling a film "educational" does not make it so.

Merely scattering a lot of superficial knowledge is not of benefit to the cause of moving pictures or that of education. A definite program should be followed rather than random glimpses of sensational science and accounts of historical events that simply utilize them to cover a tame old story or flaunt the flag for the sake of unthinking applause. Such pictures are fooleries, and injure rather than nourish the growth of character. It is very commonly conceded that moving pictures seem destined to bring the light of culture along in the wake of their first purposes, but as far as imparting knowledge in accordance with advanced methods is concerned the ground is unbroken.

One of the great questions of the day, possibly the leader among intelligent families, is that of race improvement through consideration of the child and its heritage as affected by environment. With all its fascinating ramifications, with its exploration of eugenics, this is engaging the attention of more men and women of the better class than all other subjects combined, probably excepting that of maintenance. The considerations involved have already been studied by breeders of cattle and students of horticulture, but all civilized nations have now gone daffy on the idea of perfecting the human being. Here is a virgin field over which many a stirring battle is to be fought, yet the moving pictures are still telling us how Jenny was rescued by Johnny after being captured by the Indians.

Some of the finest efforts of the Vitagraph Company have dealt with sociological problems in a rather timid way—there seems to be a dread of offending this or that class of people by attacking the code of morals we were brought up on, in spite of the fact that it is being hammered in the pulpit—but so skillfully that most all of us would enjoy seeing them hit those "Glooms," the conventional ethics of a generation ago, a few good cracks in the jaw. We may be hypocritical in deference to what we imagine to be cherished ideals of our parents, but down in our secret hearts every one of us cordially detests Puritanical hypocrisy. It affords snappy comedy material, and we don't have to go back to the last century to find it—there is some left in Brooklyn.

One might very naturally ask why we do not get plays on topics of the times. It may not be fair for one individual to answer that query. Very few writers of plays have related their experiences, and my own is comparatively limited. If it offers any solution of a vexed question I will admit that the poorest I ever wrote found the readiest sale, while nearly every successful one met with discouraging rejections before it finally reached the right hands. It looks to me very much as though there was something wrong about the selective systems.

The author has to be systematic in spite of the popular impression to the contrary. Only people who do not know anything about professional writing imagine that it is a casual or disorderly occupation. The critic has to have system—I outlined my own under the editorial entitled "Success." But there does not appear to be any selective system extant in scenario departments—the uniformity of prices paid indicates an inability to discriminate. In the end it will probably be found that the reason new and attractive fields are left untouched, while we are stared out of countenance every night by dead ones, lies with the overworked director.

That new fields remain untouched, that old soil is worked over and over again, that crops are scanty and flavorless, may be due to the fact that the brightest and best-posted men in the producing concerns give an undue preponderance of attention to the commercial side of the business to the consequent injury and detriment of the artistic end. This periodical has been crowded with new suggestions during the year nineteen hundred and twelve, yet I scarcely ever find a director who reads it. He complains that his concern does not take enough copies to go round, but this is a weak excuse. Any live man would have gumption enough to subscribe and keep posted.

Higher Prices Are Possible

By W. Stephen Bush

INTELLIGENT co-operation among exhibitors has in the past brought about two visible results—the checking of cheap vaudeville and the spread of the Sunday exhibition. These achievements came even before organization among exhibitors had assumed its present pleasing proportions. With a strong, thoroughly representative league, national in its scope, it ought to be a much easier task to take up and successfully handle one of the most pressing problems of the day—the regulating of the price of admission.

The Moving Picture World, in its issue of August 29, 1908, had this to say about prices of admission: "The most crying need of the moving picture business at this moment is an absolute divorce from the nickel. To the many scores of cheap men now in the business the nickel is a fetich, and if they were permitted to be a factor in the moving picture field the moving picture theater would soon resemble a cross between the Chinese theater and a dime museum." The four years following this vigorous warning have brought much improvement. We have happily passed the so-called "nickolet" or "nickelodeon" stage, when the moving picture was associated with the nickel even as green is associated in our minds with grass. The horrible words "nickolet" and "nickelodeon" have become obsolete, and have long since been regarded as badges of cheapness by all intelligent exhibitors. There are mighty few electric theaters in the country to-day which have never charged more than five cents. The number of theaters where a higher charge is made on Saturdays and Sundays is constantly on the increase. It would be easy to name scores of theaters charging from fifteen to twenty-five cents for nothing but pictures. Indeed, for the great feature films which traveled on the big circuits as high as two dollars has been asked and paid.

Referring to the higher prices for big features with special music and lecture, it was a common experience of the man in the box-office to have old patrons of the theater, who had never seen or cared to see moving pictures, inquire whether the entertainment was "just moving pictures." When answered in the affirmative these old theater-goers hesitated and raised their eyebrows half in wonder and half in indignation. "Two dollars for moving pictures?" they would say, and hesitate and raise their eyebrows some more. It was often only upon the assurance of the ticket-seller, whom they knew and in whom they had confidence, that they were induced to come in and "take a chance." When they came out they were convinced and converted, and saw moving pictures in an entirely new light. American cinematography, it may be said in passing, owes no small debt to the promoters of these genuine feature films. Their exhibition did much to enlighten the most intelligent portions of the public in regard to the mission and the possibilities of the motion picture. They have surely helped to pave the way for higher prices all around.

It seems to us that the present time is most opportune for the general introduction of a better scale of prices. Never before in the history of the motion picture has the great improvement in quality been more generally recognized than at this moment. The attitude of the public is of course a very important question to consider when the possibility of higher prices is to be discussed. If the public are ready for higher prices of admission, it will be very easy for the exhibitors to do the rest. There are many indications that the public are ready and willing to pay increased prices for the better show. Take a look at the audiences in hundreds of theaters where pictures are shown exclusively. They surely do not look as if ten or fifteen or twenty-five cents would keep them away from their favorite amusement. Even the enemies of the motion picture are careful to-day to qualify their tirades against "bad moving pictures" by adding that "there are pictures of a much higher order." If there is anything in the present world of amusements more popular than a good moving picture entertainment it is not generally known. Nothing is more certain in any line of busiess than that the public will eventually appreciate and respond to quality.

It remains then for the exhibitors to get together and harmonize their interests. Numerous attempts to increase both the quality and the price of the show have been made in the past by exhibitors of a town or city. Some of these attempts succeeded, others failed. Generally the failure was due to the attitude of one exhibitor who refused to join the rest. Sometimes the dissenting one had a larger seating capacity than his competitors and thought that he would win out anyway against his rivals. It is possible that he was justified in his position. One cannot lay down any hard-and-fast rules in such matters: very much depends on local conditions. As a general thing, however, the man with the larger seating capacity will be the biggest gainer by a uniform advance in the prices of admission.

To be sure, we will always have the five-cent show with us. There are in every city a large number of people to whom the difference of five cents is a matter of importance. This is the very class to which the motion picture wants to be useful and instructive. The cinematograph will never be ashamed of its friendship with the poorer classes. Especially in this land of opportunities, where poverty is often self-imposed in a desire to advance to better things more rapidly, the five-cent entertainment will always be sure of a clientele. The five-cent theater, too, will prepare the patron for the richer offerings of the higher-priced places. It should, however, be the task of the organized exhibitors to regulate and limit the number of the cheaper theaters. Intelligent and experienced exhibitors, working for the common good, will have no trouble in working out the details of the problem. The best basis for a proper solution, it seems to us, will be the basis of population. The question of neighborhood will enter into the problem, and likewise the grade of service. The programs of the cheaper theater will differ, it seems to us, chiefly in the age of the films shown. The subject has many angles to it, and its treatment will largely depend on local conditions. We only desire to point out the general possibilities of an intelligent and harmonious action among exhibitors. Mutual confidence and a due regard for the rights of others are the best guarantees of success.

BAGGOT—CONSTANTINE.

King Baggot, the popular leading man of Imp and also the founder and president of the Screen Club, was married on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 3, to Miss Ruth Constantine of New York City. William Robert Daly was best man. The newlyweds left immediately for Atlantic City, by way of Philadelphia. They returned to New York on the following Saturday and sailed for Bermuda, where they will remain for a week or more. Mr. Baggot during his presidency of the Screen Club has made many additions to a long list of personal friends. All of these as well as a legion of screen admirers will wish Mr. Baggot and his bride health, happiness and long life.

College Course in Motion Pictures

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY ANNOUNCES A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN THE ART AND CHEMISTRY OF PHOTOGRAPHY—A MOTION PICTURE MAN'S BENEFACTION.

WHILE we read the numerous stories of the purchase of automobiles, motorboats and country homes with the accrued profits from the manufacture and sale of motion pictures, there comes a story of a prominent motion picture manufacturer, too modest to permit his name to be used in connection with his benefaction, who has induced the Board of Control of the Syracuse University to establish a course of instruction in the art and chemistry of photography as related to motion pictures, and has pledged his resources for a considerable term of years to insure the success of the venture.

In furthering the enterprise this progressive motion picture manufacturer has the co-operation of one of the largest manufacturers of photographic materials in the world, and, altogether, the plan forms the most ambitious effort that has yet been made to provide technical instruction for those who desire to take up cinematography as a profession and will, when plans are worked out to the fullest extent, afford an unequalled opportunity for the gaining of practical knowledge of this twentieth century art.

Crouse College of Fine Arts, Syracuse University.

How important this movement is to the motion picture industry can be fully known and appreciated only by those engaged in the manufacture of pictures. Under present conditions it is impossible to find persons skilled in the technique of the trade. The manufacturers now are compelled to train their help in every detail at a great cost. To them this college course will be of infinite assistance, not only in providing skilled workers, but in affording a place where experiments and research can be made. As such this new course in the Syracuse University should command the fullest support of the motion picture industry.

In an explanation of the plan and scope of the work to be undertaken, the Moving Picture World is assured that most competent instructors will be employed and that every branch of the art will receive due attention. The course properly begins in what is known as the Crouse College of Fine Arts where the students will be instructed in the art of motion picture composition, costuming, setting of interior decorations and classification of period furniture. Painting in distemper for photographic value.

Instruction will be given in Light—reflection, refraction, dispersion and diffraction. The Lens:—General principles of construction, lens aberration, equivalent focusing, conjugate foci, diaphrams, types of lenses, selections of lenses for special work. The camera—its parts and their use; focusing with hand and stand cameras. Exposure—the factors, time and snapshots. Sensitive plate—ordinary, color sensitive and color value rendering. Color filters. Developers—their composition and use. Fixing and Washing. After treatment of negative printing in respect to various processes and materials.

The chemical branches of the course will be taken up in the new Bowne Hall of Chemistry where a full course of photographic chemistry has been outlined. Here the student will be fitted for laboratory work, manufacturing of emulsions, developing, solutions, tinting and toning and color photography.

The practical photographic work will be carried on under the direction of a photographic expert, thoroughly familiar with all branches of motion picture studio technique.

A point to be emphasized is that this course is not a side line for amateurs and snapshotters, but a complete four years' course which will ground the student in all the intricacies of practical photography. For male students showing unusual ability and aptitude, scholarships have been provided.

In commenting on the usefulness in this course in cinematography the principal sponsor for the plan explained that his company had for several years recruited its staff from the art students of Crouse college and that he had found them to be exceptionally competent. He felt justified in concluding that the addition of this more practical course to the present curriculum would result in the graduation of fully equipped motion picture experts.

While the foregoing statement may seem commonplace it gains importance through the fact that one of the foremost institutions of learning in this country has thereby given official recognition to the artistic aspects of cinematography. In this respect the Syracuse University is the pioneer in being the first to offer to the young men of the land competent instruction in what is recognized to be the most interesting and profitable industry of the day. In this connection it should be said that the Chancellor of Syracuse University, Dr. James R. Day, has welcomed the new branch of learning with great enthusiasm and has given much of his personal attention to the proper arrangement of the course of study.

With this distinquished recognition it now becomes the duty of all motion picture manufacturers in America to lend their co-operation that students may be encouraged to enter upon the course of study and that they may find profitable employment upon graduation. A further incentive might be supplied in the way of prizes for efficiency or for the solution of technical problems.

It is officially announced that the time for enrollment in this course is January 1, 1913, and it is believed that there will be a full justification for its establishment in the number of applications anticipated. The name of the instructor in charge of the practical photographic work will not be announced until the beginning of the year, but the Moving Picture World is informed that a man has been secured who has a long line of experience and that he is an able teacher and lecturer in the particular field, so that the course will start fully equipped with competent instructors and paraphernalia.

Edison Film Patent Declared Void

Injunction Against Chicago Film Company Vacated.

The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia has reversed a decision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, which latter court in December 1911 made this finding of fact among others. 2nd: That Thomas A. Edison was the original first and true inventor of the improvements in said re-issue letters patent and particularly claimed in said second claim thereof. The re-issue letters patent referred to in this finding was known as No. 12129 and the second claim in the said re-issue read as follows:

2. An unbroken transparent or translucent tape-like photographic film provided with perforated edges and having thereon uniform sharply-defined equidistant photographs of successive positions of an object in motion as observed from a single point of view at rapidly-recurring intervals of time, such photographs being arranged in a continuous straight line sequence, unlimited in number save by the length of the film, and sufficient in number to represent the movements of the object throughout an extended period of time, substantially as described.

Upon its findings of fact the Supreme Court then issued a perpetual injunction against the Chicago Film Exchange prohibiting it "from directly or indirectly making, using or selling kinetoscopic or motion picture films containing or embodying the invention set forth in said re-issue letters patent and particularly covered by claim 2 thereof."

The Court of Appeals has now reversed the findings and vacated the injunction granted by the lower Court. In its reversing opinion the Court of Appeals says among other things:

The claims of the re-issue are the result of an attempt to overcome the effect of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, 114 Fed., 926. Edison is not the inventor of film described in claim 2, and his patent therefore is invalid. The film was neither discovered nor produced by Edison. It was brought to its present state of perfection by Eastman. Edison seized upon it and provided it with perforations along the edges at regular intervals. Perforations had been previously made in photographic films for feeding purposes. So far our conclusion is the same substantially as that of the Circuit Court of Appeals, in which claim 5 of the original patent, and incidentally claim 6, were under consideration. The problems Edison solved were in the camera apparatus, wherein his true claim to invention lies. His film was the invention of others. It is the particular arrangement of the pictures for which Edison is entitled to credit. For those pictures and their arrangement are nothing more than the result of the operation of his improved camera apparatus.

The invention of Edison was exhausted in the construction of the camera which enables photographs of moving objects to be taken upon the Eastman film in the uniform and satisfactory manner justly claimed for them. The pictures are the direct result of the mechanism of the camera with the Eastman film mechanically adapted to and applied therein.

In our opinion claim 2 of the re-issue patent 12192 is unpatentable and void; and the decree must be reversed with costs and the cause remanded with directions to dismiss the bill.

There is no further possible appeal from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and its decision forever settles the issues involved in this litigation.

Enter the Stock Speculator

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

Two interesting—if not cheering—communications have come to the writer's attention the past week, forerunners of trouble and scandal to come. The stock speculator has come into the motion picture field at last. We do not refer to legitimate enterprises such as Kinemacolor, which was financed through the sale of stock, but to the company that makes money selling stock rather than sells stock to make money.

Kinemacolor stands in a class by itself in that the novelty of pictures in color will find for it a market, but for the maker of straight black and white pictures, without even the forlorn hope of getting a franchise, to advertise stock is to argue either extreme optimism or a lack of commercial honesty, one of which is as hard as the other on the dupe who purchases stock certificates.

One of these companies has been more or less active for some time on the Pacific slope, though none of its releases has as yet reached New York. For a time it conducted a school where for a small sum stage aspirants were taught to act in the pictures made by the company. Inquiry was made the other day as to this school on the part of a woman who thought that she might there gain the qualifying "experience" that the studios demand. She was promptly informed that the school had been disbanded but that a place might be found on the purchase of a certain number of shares.

The letter was accompanied by a two-sheet prospectus in which the expenses and prospective profits were carefully figured out with the generous proviso that any reasonable percentage might be added for overhead expense and a profit still remain. The argument was based upon the release of two reels a week, but not a single word was said as to what means were to be employed to place these reels before the market.

Even more audacious is the prospectus of a concern in Pittsburgh, capitalized for $75,000 in ten-dollar shares. The president, who is also the head of the "Theatrical or Photoplay Department" and a member of the Writers' Dramatic Association of America—whatever that may be—is evidently illiterate as this "follow" letter shows. An author asked information and was advised to send scripts, but the letter was not encouraging and so came this second effusion, which is given as it was written save that the name of the recipient is altered. It runs:

Dear; Miss Grace Jones.

Receiving no answer to my letter, i hope you have not giving up the desire of writing a pho-to-play for the company, as we are on the look-out for good plays. If i can be of any assistance to you, i will kindly do all i can to promote your work in this line.

Trusting to hear from you, i remaine,

That's the letter of the president, manager of the photoplay department and member of the Writers' Dramatic Association, who in the terms of the prospectus is "a skilled and brilliant writer; and the photoplays produced by him in comedy, pathos, romance, history, war, art and mechanical industries are of the highest and best."

To show the vast field occupied by the company, the prospectus states that "there is no company engaged in this business between Philadelphia and Chicago. All this vast territory between those places is vacant and only awaits the initiative and energy of a few practical men to make a business that, from a financial standpoint, will be second to none."

The paragraph goes on to state that within a radius of sixty miles from Pittsburgh there are not less than five hundred picture theaters that are having trouble getting films because the supply is so much smaller than the demand. The inference sought to be conveyed is that the Pittsburgh theaters are suffering from a shortage of film because there is no local company to supply the demand, a statement too absurd to need contradiction. The advertiser's knowledge of the business is best gleaned from his statement that a picture which costs from $500 to $1000 to produce will return to the manufacturer anywhere from two or three times its cost.

This sort of thing would be absurd were it not the forerunner of other and perhaps more dangerous schemes. There is a certain ring about this prospectus that suggests that the scheme is more foolish than knavish, but others will come that are flatly and unqualifiedly swindles, no more intended to be a business operation than the hundreds of mines that are dealt with on the curb market. The stock handlers are hungry for something in pictures that can be listed on the exchange in the middle of Broad Street, and any issue will be taken up with avidity. It is not too early to begin a campaign against the swindlers who are coming. Let us try to keep the motion picture business out of the hands of the schemer. It is known that the profits of the picture business are tremendous. The public will not, cannot, discriminate between the real and the fake. Let them be warned in time.

Melies in the South Seas

FIRST NEWS OF THE 'ROUND-THE-WORLD PHOTOPLAYERS TELLS OF STRANGE EXPERIENCES IN STRANGE LANDS—ROYAL RECEPTION BY NATIVE CHIEFS.

DORÉ HOFFMAN.

ON July 24th, 1912, the first moving picture company to attempt such an undertaking sailed from San Francisco for a picture making tour around the earth. This company, as has been noted before in these columns, was the Melies Motion Picture Company. For many months they had been quartered at Santa Paula, Cal. Most of the plays turned out at the California plant were Western dramas, with which the exhibitor is already quite familiar. If Western plays become monotonous to the spectator and the exhibitor, think how wearisome they must be to the people who do them.

Taahi, typical Tahitian Beauty.

Mr. Gaston Melies, the head of the company, had his complete fill of the frontier drama. Heeding various sign of the times he decided that the public would like to see something else; something that had more substance to it, which would at the same time prove to be entertaining. He did a lot of thinking on the subject and finally put the question to himself: If the rugged life of Western America exerts such a fascinating spell over moving picture lovers in all parts of the world, why should not the rugged life of strange people in other lands arouse the same interest?

Beyond lay the great world, teeming with interesting people whose mode of life had not been worn threadbare in moving pictures. The educational possibilities of it appealed to him very strongly and, after consultation with his lieutenants, and gathering much information, he set sail from San Francisco at the head of his company of twenty players, all of which was duly chronicled in these columns during August of this year.

Now after four months comes the first word from this very fortunate expedition. The trip is one that many will envy these lucky people, but as some of us must stay at home and work, Mr. Melies will do his best for us by writing an occasional letter to tell how fares the world with him and his associates. The first letter received is from the Island of Tahiti, which lays directly south of Hawaii and directly east of Australia, the distance being about 3,000 miles from either of these places. Mr. Melies states that he had unusually good luck in meeting, aboard the steamer Manuka, Monsieur Giraud, the Governor of the French Island, Tahiti. The Governor had with him his entire family and their full retinue of servants. By this opportune circumstance the Melies Company had an excellent opportunity to cultivate the acquaintance of the Governor and his family, and by the time the vessel arrived at Tahiti they were all the best of friends. The island practically belonged to them, and it is quite probable that the Governor would have stood for murder if that would have helped the pictures any.

The company was not altogether idle during the voyage. One picture was made on shipboard; it will be entitled "Mr. and Mrs. Mott," in which is enacted one of the humorous and traditional nautical ceremonies that is rarely seen in these days of ocean greyhounds. In the good old days of sailing vessels it was customary for mariners to celebrate the crossing of the Equator. One of the sailors would array himself as Father Neptune. Climbing over the side of the vessel from the water side, Father Neptune would hold high court among the older sailors, who were arrayed in fantastic garb. In effect it never amounted to anything more than a hazing party during which the older sailors had a great lark at the expense of the younger sailors who were crossing the Equator for the first time. All of these antics will be seen in the above mentioned picture and will no doubt be highly amusing and instructive. In fact, all of the pictures taken by the Melies Company on this trip will be of an educational nature, clothed, however, in clever, interesting plots.

Tuahu, appearing as Queen in Melies Picture.

Papeete is the capital of Tahiti, and the location of the Governor's palace. Much to his surprise Mr. Melies found that Papeete was altogether too civilized for the making of any pictures showing barbarism in its native haunts. A number of semi-conventional pictures were taken in and about Papeete which Mr. Melies claims have turned out very well. The company then proceeded inland to take some story pictures of real native life. It was in this savage environment that a picture was made entitled, "A Ballad of the South Seas," a story supposed to take place in 1650, founded upon legends of this barbaric and most interesting island. The company managed to secure excellent pictures of many of the war canoes, or "pirogues," which are used in battle by the tribes. They are fastened together in pairs and are manned by about fifty natives and one chief to each pair. The fighting in these scenes is fierce and barbaric, and by its very strangeness should make a hit with American picture lovers.

Mr. Gaston Melies, in Tahiti—Mode of Crossing Streams.

Other scenes were taken of the tribal war dances in this far away land. In these dances the men wear nothing but a breech clout from which are suspended cocoa leaves that reach to their knees, giving a most primitive effect. One of the most notable achievements of Mr. Melies was the picture he secured of the native fish drive. This is an event in the South Sea Islands that happens only about once in five years. It necessitates the calling together of many natives of many tribes. Messengers are sent on foot to all parts of the island to summon the natives together for the fish drive. This proceeding is marked by such profound ceremonies and rites that it is considered an honor to witness it. This extraordinary event was brought about only through the influence of Mr. Melies with the Governor. To give a detailed account of it at this time would consume more space than is available, but it will be dealt with later in full.

Upon the return of the company to Papeete from the inland territory, they all had the pleasure of attending a state reception tendered in their honor by the Governor of Tahiti. It took place in the Governor's beautiful palace, which was decorated in the most lavish manner, within and without. The banquet menu consisted entirely of native products, mostly seafood, which was topped off with bananas and cocoanuts, and cocoanut-milk to drink. Needless to say, the Governor had a private wine cellar from which came great quantities of claret, burgundy and champagne. This was the farewell to Papeete.

The company left Papeete for Papara, via the French destroyer "La Zelee," the use of which was extended by special courtesy of the Governor. Moving picture makers will observe a strategic move in this thing of traveling by warship, especially with a letter from the Governor of the last town to the Governor of the next town. By this means the Melies Company was received with open arms at Papara. Mr. Melies became acquainted with the most influential chief of the island, Tati Salmon, a brother of the former queen of Tahiti, which lady was present at the banquet to the Melies Company at Papeete. This chief is an austere and forbidding person; few have been able to get into his good graces and dispel his stern reserve. He thawed out completely under the rough and ready, jovial manner of Mr. Melies. Not only did he thaw, but he ordered a lavish banquet spread that surprised the natives as much as it did the visitors. After the feast the chief ordered an entertainment, calling upon the members of his tribe to sing their weird songs and dance their grotesque dances. These ceremonies have always been held a secret to the white men. Mr. Melies and his company not only saw them, but photographed them successfully and the pictures are due to arrive in New York some time during December for general distribution.

This is the kind of work that Mr. Melies intends to do in many of the remote corners of the earth. It is his ambition to show one-half of the world how the other half lives. Much has been said about how the cinematograph will serve to bring the peoples of the earth into closer touch with each other, but so far Mr. Melies seems to be the only man who is making anything like a systematic effort to do so. There are few men who are better equipped for an undertaking of this kind than he. To begin with he has the necessary capital. He estimates that their trip around the world will cost upwards of a quarter of million dollars. But money is not all; back of that are fifteen years of experience, which, as moving picture men will agree, is more necessary than the money. There is still a third consideration, which every man does not possess, and that is a desire to give to the public pictures that will enlighten as well as entertain. A manufacturer to undertake an expedition of this kind must have a desire to elevate the work of making moving pictures to a higher and more sensible plane, or the result will be a failure. Mr. Melies has the right idea and he is bound to succeed, because he is properly qualified.

Mr. Melies writes that he is now living in a little cottage by the sea. There are no modern improvements; instead there are hardships to be endured. Often the company has been obliged to go for days without sufficient food, and, on one occasion they nearly starved while waiting for Mr. Melies to return from a visit to one of the tribes. Mr. Melies in turn was equally long without food. It should be borne in mind that throughout the experiences related above, hardship and exposure have been constantly endured by the company. The trip so far has been far from a picnic or summer's outing for any of them. And just here it may be well to say a word concerning Mrs. Melies. The devotion of this loyal woman to the uplift of the motion picture is equal to that of her husband. She has endured privations with the others and shared their dangers; nursing the sick and cheering the homesick, when she might, if she chose, remain where comfort or luxury could be obtained.
